PREFACE

A DETAILED exposition of the prominent features of the study of the Holy Qur-án I reserve for a separate volume to be issued at a later date. In this Preface I would draw the reader's attention to two important points, viz. (1) a summary of the teachings of the Holy Qur-án, and (2) its collection and arrangement.

I. SUMMARY OF THE TEACHINGS

While dealing with the first important point, I propose to answer the question, What is Islam? Briefly, it is the religion which the Holy Qur-án teaches, and every student of the Holy Book, with the aid of a little knowledge as to the manner in which the Holy Prophet carried the Quranic precepts into practice, will know everything necessary about Islam. But for the facility of the readers of this volume I answer that question briefly in this Preface.

Islam as the religion of humanity.

"Islam" is the name by which the religion preached by the Holy Prophet Muhammad, who appeared in Arabia over thirteen hundred years ago, is known, and it is the last of the great religions of the world. This religion is commonly known in the West as Muhammadanism, a name adopted in imitation of such names as Christianity and Buddhism, but quite unknown to the Muslims themselves. According to the Qur-án, the religion of Islam is as wide in its conception as humanity itself. It did not originate from the preaching of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, but it was equally the religion of the prophets who went before him. Islam was the religion of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and Jesus; it was, in fact, the religion of every prophet of God who appeared in any part of the world. Nay, Islam is the religion of every human child that is born, according to the Holy Prophet, who, to be accurate, is not the originator, but the latest exponent of that Divine system which was made perfect at his advent. And, according to the Qur-án, Islam is the natural religion of man: "The nature made by Allah in which He has made men; there is no altering of Allah's creation,—that is the right religion" (30 : 30). And since, according to the Holy Qur-án, prophets were raised among different nations in different ages, and the religion of every true prophet was in its pristine purity no other than Islam, the scope of this religion, in the true sense of the word, extends as far back and is as wide as humanity itself, the fundamental principles always remaining the same, the accidents changing with the changing needs of humanity. The latest phase of Islam is that which made its appearance in the world with the advent of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him.

Significance of the name.

The name "Islam" was not invented, as in the case of other religions, by those who professed it. This name is, on the other hand, expressly given to this religion in the Holy Qur-án. It says: "This day I have perfected for you your religion and completed My favour on you, and chosen for you Islam as a religion" (5 : 3). And in another place: "Surely the true religion with Allah is Islam" (3 : 18). It is, moreover, a significant name; in fact, the word "Islam" indicates the very essence of the religious system known by that name. Its primary significance is the "making of peace," and the idea of "peace" is the dominant idea in Islam. A Muslim, according to the Holy Qur-án, is he who has made his peace with God and man, with the Creator as well as His creatures. Peace with God implies complete submission to His will Who is the source of all purity and goodness, and peace with man implies the doing of good to one's fellow-man; and both these ideas are briefly but beautifully expressed in the Qur-án in the following words: "Yea, whoever submits himself entirely to Allah, and he is the doer of good to others, he has his reward from his Lord, and there is no fear for him, nor shall he grieve" (2 : 112). That, and that only, is salvation according to the Holy Qur-án. And as the Muslim is in perfect peace, he enjoys peace of mind and contentment. "Peace" is the greeting of one Muslim to another, and "Peace" shall also be the greeting of those in paradise: "And their greeting in it shall be Peace" (10 : 10). Nay, in the paradise which Islam depicts no word shall be heard except "Peace, Peace," as the Holy Qur-án says: "They shall not hear therein vain or sinful discourse except the word 'Peace, Peace'" (56 : 25, 26). The "Author of Peace" is also a name of Allah mentioned in the Holy Qur-án (59 : 23), and the goal to which Islam leads is the "Abode of Peace," as is said in 10 : 25: "And Allah invites to the Abode of Peace." Peace is, therefore, the essence of Islam, being the root from which it springs and the fruit which it yields; and Islam is thus pre-eminently the "Religion of Peace."

The distinctive characteristic of Islam.

The great characteristic of Islam is that it requires its followers to believe that all the great religions of the world that prevailed before it were revealed by God; and thus Islam, as I have shown its very name indicates, laid down the basis of peace and harmony among the religions of the world. According to the Holy Qur-án, all religions have Divine revelation as the common basis from which they start. The great mission of Islam was not, however, to preach this truth only, which, on account of the isolation from each other of the different nations of the earth, had not been preached before, but also to correct the errors which had crept into the prevailing religions on account of the length of time, to sift truth from error, to preach the truths which had not been preached before on account of the special circumstances of a society or the early stages of its development, and, most important of all, to gather together in one book the truths which were contained in any Divine revelation granted to any people for the guidance of man, and, last of all, to meet all the spiritual and moral requirements of an ever-advancing humanity. Thus, as a distinctive characteristic of its own, Islam claims to be the final and the most perfect expression of the will of God; as the Qur-án says: "This day I have perfected for you your religion and completed My favour on you, and chosen for you Islam as a religion" (5 : 3). What it has in common with all religions is that it is a revealed religion like them, while it is distinguished from them in being the final and perfect revelation of God. Hence the Holy Prophet Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, is called the "Seal of the Prophets" (33 : 40), and the Holy Qur-án is spoken of as "Pure pages wherein are all the right Books" (98 : 2-3).

A historical religion.

I wish to notice one more peculiarity of Islam. Islam is beyond all doubt a historical religion and its holy founder a historical personage. Every event of the Holy Prophet's life can be read in the light of history, and the Holy Qur-án, which is the source of all the spiritual, moral, and social laws of Islam, is, as shown later on, a book absolutely unique in its preservation. Having a book of Divine revelation so safely preserved through centuries to guide him for his spiritual and moral welfare, and the example of such a great and noble Prophet, whose varied earthly experiences furnish the best rules of conduct in all the different phases of human life, a Muslim is sure that he has not rejected any truth which was ever revealed by God to any nation, and that he has not set at naught any good which was to be met with in the life of any good man. He thus not only believes in the truth of all Divine revelations and accepts the sacred leaders of all peoples, but also follows all the lasting and permanent truths contained in them, by following the last and most comprehensive of them, and imitates all good men in all the good that is to be met with in their lives by taking for his model the most perfect exemplar.

The fundamental principles of Islam.

The main principles of Islam are given in the very beginning of the Holy Qur-án, which opens with the words : "This book, there is no doubt in it, is a guide to those who guard against evil; those who believe in the unseen and keep up prayer and spend benevolently out of what We have given them; and who believe in that which has been revealed to you and that which was revealed before you ; and they are sure of the hereafter" (2 :2-4). These verses point out the essential principles which must be accepted by those who would follow the Holy Qur-án. Here we have three main points of belief and two main points of practice, or three theoretical and two practical ordinances. Before I take up these points separately, I think it necessary to point out, as is indicated in this verse, that in Islam mere belief counts for nothing if not carried into practice : "Those who believe and do good" is the ever-recurring description of the righteous as given in the Qur-án. Right belief is the good seed which can only grow into a good tree if it receives nourishment from the soil in which it is placed. That nourishment is given by good deeds. Another point necessary to be borne in mind in connection with the five principles of belief and practice mentioned in the verses quoted above is that they are, in one form or other, universally accepted by the human race. The five principles, as already indicated, are a belief in God, the great Unseen, in Divine revelation and in the life to come, and, on the practical side, prayer to God, which is the source from which springs the love of God, and charity in its broadest sense, indicating respectively the performance of our duties to God and the performance of our duties to man and other* creatures of God. Now, these

* The Holy Qur-án says: "There is no beast on earth nor bird which flies with its two wings, but they are a people like you, and to the Lord shall they return" (6:38). And the Holy Prophet is reported to have said: "Surely there are rewards for our doing good to quadrupeds and giving them water to drink. There are rewards for benefiting every animal having a moist liver (i.e. every one alive)." And again, "Fear God in these dumb animals, and ride them when they are fit to ride and get off them when they are tired."

five principles, as the principles of belief and action, are recognized by all nations of the earth, and these are the common principles on which all religions are based. In fact, these five fundamental principles of the holy religion of Islam are imprinted on human nature. Now, I take them separately as detailed in the Holy Qur-án.

Conception of God in Islam.

Of the three fundamental principles of belief, the first is a belief in God. The belief in a power higher than man, though not seen by him, can be traced back to remotest antiquity, to the earliest times to which history can take us: but different peoples in different ages and different countries have had different conceptions of the Divine Being. Islam, in the first place, preaches a God Who is above all tribal deities and national gods. The God of Islam is not the God of a particular nation, so that He should look after their needs only, but He is described in the opening words of the Holy Qur-án as being the "Lord of the worlds"; and thus, while widening the conception of the Divine Being, it also enlarges the circle of the brotherhood of man so as to include all nations of the earth, and so widens the outlook of human sympathy. The Unity of God is the noble theme on which the Holy Qur-án has laid great stress. There is absolute Unity in Divine nature; it admits of no participation or manifoldness. Unity is the key-note to the conception of the Divine Being in Islam. It denies all plurality of persons in Godhead and any participation of any being in the affairs of the world. His are the sublimest and most perfect attributes, but the attribute of mercy reigns over all. It is with the names Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím that every chapter of the Holy Qur-án opens, and Beneficent and Merciful convey to the English reader of the Holy Qur-án only a very imperfect idea of the deep and all-encompassing love and mercy of God indicated by the original words. "And My mercy encompasses all things" says the Holy Qur-án (7 : 156). Hence the Messenger who preached this conception of the Divine Being is rightly called in the Holy Qur-án "a mercy to all the nations" (21 : 107). The great Apostle of the Unity of God could not conceive of a God who was not the Author of all that existed. Such detraction from His power and knowledge would have given a death-blow to the very loftiness and sublimity of the conception of the Divine Being. Thus while Islam, in common with other religions, takes the existence of God for its basis, it differs from others in claiming absolute Unity for the Divine Being, and in not placing any limitation upon His power and knowledge.

Unity.

The Unity of God is, as I have said, the one great theme of the Holy Qur-án. The laws of nature which we find working in the universe, man's own nature, and the teachings of the prophets of yore, are again and again appealed to as giving clear indications of the Unity of the Maker. Consider the creation of the innumerable heavenly bodies: are they not, with their apparent diversities, all subject to one and the same law? Think over what you see in the earth itself, its organic and inorganic worlds, the plant and animal life, the solid earth, the seas and the rivers, the great mountains: is there not unity in all this diversity? Think over your own nature—how your very colours and tongues differ from each other; yet in spite of all these differences are you not but a single people? Look at the constant change which everything in the universe is undergoing, the making and unmaking, the creation and recreation of all things, the course of which does not stop for a single instant: is there not a uniform law discernible in this?

If, in fact, you clearly observe uniformity in diversity in nature, do you not see therein a clear sign of the Unity of the Maker or Evolver? Then look to the incontestable evidence of human nature, how, even when believing in the plurality of gods, it recognizes a unity in the very plurality and thus bears testimony to the oneness of God. Again, turn over the pages of the sacred scriptures of any religion, search out the teachings of the great spiritual guides of all nations: they all testify to the oneness of the Divine Being. In short, the laws of nature, the nature of man, and the testimony of almost all the religious teachers of all ages declare with one voice the Unity of God, and this is the cardinal doctrine of the spiritual teachings of the faith of Islam.

Divine revelation.

The second fundamental principle of faith in the Islamic religion is a belief in the Divine revelation—not only a belief in the truth of the revealed Word of God as found in the Holy Qur-án, but a belief in the truth of Divine revelation in all ages and to all nations of the earth. Divine revelation is the basis of all revealed religions, but the principle is accepted subject to various limitations. Some religions consider revelation to have been granted to mankind only once; others look upon it as limited to a particular people; while still others close the door of revelation after a certain time. With the advent of Islam we find the same breadth of view introduced into the conception of Divine revelation as into the conception of the Divine Being. The Holy Qur-án recognizes no limit of any kind to Divine revelation, either in respect of time or in respect of the nationality of the individual to whom it may be granted. It regards all people as having at one time or other received Divine revelation. Without the assistance of revelation from God, no people could ever have attained to communion with God, and hence it was necessary that Almighty God—who, being the Lord of the whole world, supplied all men with their physical necessities—should also have brought to them His spiritual blessings. In this case too, Islam, while sharing with other faiths the belief in the fact of Divine revelation, refuses to acknowledge the existence of any limitation as regards time or place. Hence it also announces that though no prophet is needed after the Holy Prophet Muhammad, as religion and religious laws were made perfect at his advent, the door of Divine revelation is still open, and a true Muslim can have access to it.

There is also another aspect of the Islamic belief in Divine revelation in which it differs from some other religions of the world. It refuses to acknowledge the incarnation of the Divine Being. That the highest aim of religion is communion with God is a fact universally recognized. According to the holy faith of Islam, this communion is not attained by bringing down God to man in the sense of incarnation, but by man rising gradually towards God by spiritual progress and the purification of his life from all sensual desires and low motives. The perfect one who reveals the face of God to the world is not the Divine Being in human form, but the human being whose person has become a manifestation of the Divine attributes by his own personality having been consumed in the fire of the love of God. His example serves as an incentive, and is a model for others to follow. He shows by his example how a mere mortal can attain to communion with God. Hence the broad principle of Islam that no one is precluded from attaining communion with God or from being fed from the source of Divine revelation, and that any one can attain it by following the Holy Word of God as revealed in the Holy Qur-án.

The life after death.

Belief in a future life, in one form or another, is also common to all religions of the world, and it is the third fundamental article of a Muslim's faith. The mystery of the life after death has, however, nowhere been solved so clearly as in Islam. The idea of a life after death was so obscure, as late as the appearance of the Jewish religion, that not only is there very little of it found in the Old Testament, but an important Jewish sect actually denied any such state of existence. This fact was, however, due to the lack of light thrown upon it in earlier revelations. The belief in transmigration was also due to the undeveloped mind of man mistaking spiritual realities for physical facts. In Islam the idea reached its perfection, as did other important fundamental principles of religion. This statement may appear an exaggeration to those who have been taught to look for nothing but sensuality in Islam; but the several points established by the Holy Qur-án with regard to a future life, while nothing is said about them in the sacred books of other religions, bear ample testimony to its truth. Belief in a future life implies the accountability of man in another life for actions done in this life. The belief, if properly understood, is no doubt a most valuable basis for the moral elevation of the world. The Holy Qur-án lays particular stress upon the following points :—

The life after death is only a continuation of the life below.

(1) The gulf that is generally interposed between this life and the life after death is the great obstacle in the solution of the mystery of the hereafter. Islam makes that gulf disappear altogether: it makes the next life only a continuation of the present one. On this point the Holy Qur-án is explicit. It says: "And We have made every man's actions to cling to his neck, and We will bring forth to him on the resurrection day a book which he will find wide open" (17:13). And again it says: "And whoever is blind in this, he shall also be blind in the hereafter" (17:72). And elsewhere we have: "O soul that art at rest! return to your Lord, well pleased with Him, well pleasing Him; so enter among My servants and enter into My garden" (89:27–30). The first of these three verses makes it clear that the great facts which will be brought to light on the day of resurrection will not be anything new, but only a manifestation of what is here hidden from the physical eye. The life after death is, therefore, not a new life, but only a continuance of this life, bringing its hidden realities to light. The other two quotations show that a hellish and a heavenly life both begin in this world. The blindness of the next life is surely hell, but according to the verse quoted, only those who are blind here shall be blind hereafter, thus making it clear that the spiritual blindness of this life is the real hell, and from here it is taken to the next life. Similarly, it is the soul that has found perfect peace and rest that is made to enter into paradise at death, thus showing that the paradise of the next life is only a continuation of the peace and rest which a man enjoys spiritually in this life. Thus it is clear that, according to the Holy Qur-án, the next life is a continuation of this, and death is not an interruption but a connecting link, a door that opens upon the hidden realities of this life.

The state after death is an image of the spiritual state in this life.

(2) Nowhere but in Islam has the most significant truth with regard to the next life been brought to light. No attempt at all has been made in any religion but Islam to unveil the secrets of the hereafter. No doubt in the Christian teaching the corporeal and the spiritual are melted together—the weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth and the quenchless fire as the punishment of the wicked are spoken of in the same breath with the kingdom of heaven, the treasure in heaven, and the life eternal as the reward of the righteous, but there is no clear indication as to the sources of the one or the other. The Holy Qur-án, on the other hand, makes it clear that the state after death is a complete representation, a full and clear image, of our spiritual state in this life. Here the good or bad conditions of the deeds or beliefs of a man are latent within him, and their poison or panacea casts its influence upon him only secretly, but in the life to come they shall become manifest and clear as noonday. The shape which our deeds and their consequences assume in this life is not visible to the eye of man on earth, but in the next life it will be unrolled and laid open before him in all its clearness. The pleasures and pains of the next life, therefore, though spiritual in reality, will not be hidden from the ordinary eye as spiritual facts are in this life. It is for this reason that while, on the one hand, the blessings of the next life are mentioned by physical names as an evidence of their clear representation to the eye, they are on the other hand spoken of in a saying of the Holy Prophet as things which "the eye has not seen, nor has ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive of them." This description of the blessings of the next life is really an explanation given by the Holy Prophet of the verse of the Qur-án which says: "No soul knows what is in store for them of that which will refresh the eyes" (32 : 17).

To the same effect we may quote another verse of the Holy Qur-án: "On that day you will see the faithful men and the faithful women, their light running before them and on their right hands" (57 : 12). This verse shows that the light of faith by which the righteous men and women were guided in this life, and which could here be seen only with the spiritual eye, will be clearly seen going before the believers on the day of resurrection.

As in the case of the blessings of paradise, the punishment of hell is also an image of the spiritual tortures of this life. Hell is said to be a place where one shall neither live nor die (20 : 74). It should be remembered in this connection that the Word of God describes those who walk in error and wickedness as dead and lifeless, while the good it calls living. The secret of this is that the means of the life of those who are ignorant of God, being simply eating and drinking and the satisfaction of physical desires, are entirely cut off at their death. Of spiritual food they have no share, and therefore, while devoid of the true life, they shall be raised again to taste of the evil consequences of their evil deeds.

The next life is a life of unlimited progress.

(3) The third point of importance which throws light on the mystery of the life after death is that man is destined to make infinite progress in that life. Underlying this is the principle that the development of man's faculties as it takes place in this life, however unlimited, is not sealed by finality; but a much wider vista of the realms to be traversed opens out after death. Those who have wasted their opportunity in this life shall, under the inevitable law which makes every man taste of what he has done, be subjected to a course of treatment of the spiritual diseases which they have brought about with their own hands, and when the effect of the poison which vitiated their system has been nullified, and they are fit to start on the onward journey to the great goal, they shall no more be in hell. This is the reason why the punishment of hell, according to the Holy Qur-án, is not everlasting (see foot-note 1201). It is meant to clean a man of the dross which is a hindrance in his spiritual progress, and when that object has been achieved its need vanishes. Nor is paradise a place to enjoy the blessings only of one's previous good deeds, but it is the starting-point of the development of the higher faculties of man. Those in paradise shall not be idle, but they shall be continually exerting themselves to reach the higher stages. It is for this reason that they are taught to pray even there to their Lord, "O our Lord! make perfect for us our light" (66:8). This unceasing desire for perfection shows clearly that progress in paradise shall be endless. For when they shall have attained one excellence they shall see a higher stage of excellence, and considering that to which they shall have attained as imperfect, shall desire the attainment of the higher excellence. This ceaseless desire for perfection shows that they shall be endlessly attaining to excellences.

Belief in angels and its significance.

I have now briefly indicated the three fundamental principles of a Muslim's faith, but I may further add that belief in the unseen also includes a belief in those agencies which we call angels. This belief, though common to many religions, is not as widely accepted as the three principles explained above, and therefore a few remarks relating to the truth underlying this belief will not be out of place here. In the physical world we find it as an established law that we stand in need of external agents, notwithstanding the faculties and powers within us. The eye has been given to us to see things, and it does see them, but not without the help of external light. The ear receives the sound, but independently of the agency of air it cannot serve that purpose. Man, therefore, essentially stands in need of something besides what is within him, and as in the physical, so also in the spiritual world. Just as our physical faculties are not by themselves sufficient to enable us to attain any object in the physical world without the assistance of other agents, so our spiritual powers cannot by themselves lead us to do good or evil deeds, but here, too, intermediaries which have an existence independent of our internal spiritual powers are necessary to enable us to do either. In other words, there are two attractions placed in the nature of man: the attraction to good, or to rise up to higher spheres of virtue, and the attraction to evil, or to stoop to a low, bestial life; but to bring these attractions into operation external agencies are needed, as they are needed in the case of the physical organs of man. The external agency which brings the attraction to good into work is called an angel, and that which assists in the working of the attraction to evil is called the devil. If we respond to the attraction to good we are following the Holy Spirit, and if we respond to the attraction to evil we are following Satan. The real significance of the belief in angels is, therefore, that we should follow the inviter to good, or the attraction to good which is placed within us.

Significance of belief.

The above remarks explain not only the significance of a Muslim's belief in angels, but also the meaning underlying the very word belief. Belief, according to Islam, is not only a conviction of the truth of a given proposition, but it is essentially the acceptance of a proposition as a basis for action. As already shown, the proposition of the existence of the devils is as true as that of the existence of the angels; but while belief in angels is again and again mentioned as part of a Muslim's faith, nowhere are we required to believe in the devils. Both facts are equally true, and the Holy Qur-án speaks on numerous occasions of the misleadings and insinuations of the devils; but while it requires a belief in angels, it does not require a belief in devils. If belief in angels were only equivalent to an admission of their existence, a belief in devils was an equal necessity. But it is not so. The reason is that whereas we are required to accept and follow the call of the inviter to good, we are not required to follow the call of the inviter to evil, and therefore, as the former gives us a basis for action which the latter does not, we believe in the angels but not in the devils. On the other hand, the Holy Qur-án requires us to disbelieve in the devils: "Therefore whoever disbelieves in the devils and believes in Allah, he indeed has laid hold on the firmest handle" (2:256).

It will thus be seen that the principles of belief enumerated above, as given in the Holy Qur-án, are really principles each of which serves as a basis for action, and no other belief is known to Islam. The Islamic beliefs are not formulæ for repetition, but formulæ for action. The word Allâh—the Arabic word for God—indicates that Being who possesses all the perfect attributes, and when a Muslim is required to believe in Allah he is really required to make himself the possessor of all those attributes of perfection. He has to set before himself the highest and the purest ideal that the heart of man can conceive, and to make his conduct conform to that ideal. The belief in Divine revelation makes him accept and imitate all the good that is met with in the lives of righteous men, and the belief in the hereafter is equivalent to the recognition of that most important principle of the responsibility of man: his accountability for his actions. Thus the Islamic beliefs are really axiomatic truths upon which are based the moral and spiritual aspects of the life of man.

Principles of action.

Next we take the practical side of the faith of Islam. As I have already said, in Islam actions are as essentially a component part of religion as belief. In this respect Islam occupies a middle position between religions which have ignored the practical side altogether and those which bind their followers to a very minute ritual. It sees the necessity of developing the faculties of man by giving general directions, and then leaves ample scope for the individual to exercise his judiciousness. Without a strong practical character, any religion is likely to pass into mere idealism, and it will cease to exercise influence on the practical life of man. The precepts of Islam which inculcate duties towards God and duties towards man are based on that deep knowledge of human nature which cannot be possessed but by the Author of that nature. They cover the whole range of the different grades of the development of man, and are thus wonderfully adapted to the requirements of different peoples. In the Holy Qur-án are found guiding rules for the ordinary man of the world as well as for the philosopher, and for communities in the lowest grade of civilization as well as for the highly civilized nations of the world. Practicability is the key-note of its precepts, and thus the same universality which marks its principles of faith is to be met with in its practical ordinances, suiting as they do the requirements of all ages and nations.

The verses which give us the three fundamental principles of faith also contain two fundamental principles of action, viz. the keeping-up of prayer and spending benevolently out of what one has. These two, in fact, cover the whole sphere of man's actions. Generally speaking, these two principles may be described as standing for man's duties towards God and man's duties towards man. But properly speaking, this distinction is superficial. In the true sense of the word, every duty of man is a duty towards God, and hence it is that the Holy Qur-án, when mentioning the most ordinary duties of man towards man, follows up its injunctions with the words be careful of your duty to Allah. To the same effect is the Holy Prophet's saying: The person who violates his brother's right is not a believer in the Unity of God. It is to his Maker that man is actually responsible in all cases. But in another sense, every duty of man is either a duty towards self or a duty towards fellow-beings, and God is over and over again stated to be Ghani, i.e. Self-sufficient, above any need of the worlds. If the whole world is engaged in praying to Him, it does not add one whit to His transcendental glory, and if the whole world disbelieves in Him and is ungrateful to Him, it does not detract from His dignity in the least. Hence, what are generally called duties towards God are in fact duties towards self, or duties which do not affect one's fellow-beings but affect oneself. These are, in fact, the means of man's moral advancement and spiritual betterment, and the principal duties under this head are the keeping up of prayer, fasting for one month, and performing a pilgrimage to Mecca. The most important duty of man towards man, which is one of the fundamental principles of the practical code of Islam, is zakát, or the paying of the poor-rate, a tax levied on the rich for the benefit of the poor, and this, together with the three principal duties towards self, form as it were the four pillars of the Islamic faith on its practical side. These four are therefore considered further on more fully, though briefly. As regards man's duties towards man in general, a few remarks will be sufficient.

Scope of moral teachings.

The Holy Qur-án was not meant for one people or one age, and accordingly the scope of its moral teachings is as wide as humanity itself. It is the Book which offers guidance to all men in all conditions of life, to the ignorant savage as well as to the wise philosopher, to the man of business as well as to the recluse, to the rich as well as to the poor. Accordingly, while giving varied rules of life, it appeals to the individual to follow the best rules which are applicable to the circumstances under which he lives. If, on the one hand, it contains directions which are calculated to raise men in the lowest grades of civilization and to teach them the crude manners of society, it also, on the other, furnishes rules of guidance to men in the highest stages of moral and spiritual progress. High and ideal moral teachings are no doubt necessary for the progress of man, but only those will be able to benefit by them who can realize those high ideals. But to this class do not belong the vast masses in any nation or community, however high its standard of civilization may be. Hence the Qur-án contains rules of guidance for all the stages through which man has to pass in the onward march from the condition of the savage to that of the highly spiritual man. They cover all the branches of human activity and require the development of all the faculties of man. Islam requires the display of every quality that has been placed in man, and makes only one limitation—viz. that it should be displayed on the proper occasion. It requires a man to show meekness as well as courage, but each on its proper occasion. It teaches forgiveness, but at the same time it requires that when the nature of an offence demands punishment, it should be administered in proportion to the crime. It says: Forgive when you see that forgiveness would be conducive to good. Again, it teaches men to display high morals under the most adverse circumstances, to be honest even when honesty is likely to lead one into complications, to speak truth even when one's truthful statement is against those nearest and dearest to one, to show sympathy even at the sacrifice of one's own interest, to be patient under the hardest afflictions, to be good even to those who have done evil. At the same time it teaches the middle path: it teaches men to exercise the noble qualities which have been placed in their nature by God while transacting their own affairs. It does not inculcate severance from one's worldly connections; it requires men to be chaste, but not by castration; it requires them to serve God, but not as monks: it enjoins them to spend their wealth, but not in such a manner as to sit down "blamed and straitened in means"; it teaches them to be submissive, but not by losing self-respect; it exhorts them to forgive, but not in such a manner as to bring destruction upon society by emboldening culprits; it allows them to exercise all their rights, but not so as to violate those of others; and, last of all, it requires them to preach their own religion, but not by abusing the religion of others.

The brotherhood of Islam.

In the first place, Islam abolishes all invidious class distinctions. "Surely the most honourable of you with Allah is the one among you most careful of his duty" sounds a death-knell to all superiority or inferiority based on rigid caste or social distinctions. Mankind is but one family, according to the Holy Qur-án, which says: "O man, surely we have created you of a male and female and made you tribes and families that you may know each other: surely the most honourable of you with Allah is the one among you most careful of his duty" (49:13). Islam thus lays down the basis of a vast brotherhood in which all men and women—to whatever tribe or nation or caste they may belong and whatever be their profession or rank in society, the wealthy and the poor—have equal rights, and in which no one can trample upon the right of his brother. In this brotherhood all members should treat each other as members of the same family. The slave is to be clothed with the clothing and fed with the food of his master, and he is not to be treated as a low or vile person. Your wives, says the Holy Qur-án, have rights against you as you have rights against them. No one is to be deprived of any right on the score of caste or profession or sex. And this great brotherhood did not remain a brotherhood in theory, but became an actual living force by the noble example of the Holy Prophet and his worthy successors and companions. The strict rule of brotherhood is laid down in the following words in a saying of the Holy Prophet: "No one of you is a believer in God unless he loves for his brother what he loves for himself."

Reverence for authority.

But while thus establishing equality of rights, Islam teaches the highest reverence for authority. The home is the real nursery in which the moral training of man begins, and therefore the Holy Qur-án lays the greatest stress upon obedience to parents. Here is one of the passages of the Holy Qur-án: "And your Lord has commanded that you shall not serve any except Him, and goodness to your parents. If either or both of them reach old age with you, say not to them so much as 'Ugh,' nor chide them, and speak to them a generous word. And make yourself submissively gentle to them with compassion, and say, 'O my Lord! have compassion on them, as they brought me up when I was little'" (17:23–24). It is elsewhere said that they should be disobeyed only if they compelled one to serve others than God. This high reverence for parents is the basis from which springs up the high moral of reverence for all authority. And thus the Holy Qur-án plainly says: "Obey Allah and obey the Apostle and those in authority from among you" (4:62). By those in authority are meant not only the actual rulers of a country, but all those who are in any way entrusted with authority. It has been remarked by the Holy Prophet: "Every one of you is a ruler, and every one of you shall be questioned about those among whom he is in authority." Therefore, Islam requires all men to obey those who are in immediate authority over them, and thus cuts at the root of all kinds of rebellion and anarchy. The person in authority may belong to any religion, but he is to be obeyed in the same manner as the parents are to be obeyed, though they may not be believers in Islam. According to a saying of the Holy Prophet, even if a Negro slave is placed in authority he must be obeyed.

Four fundamental institutions.

The four fundamental institutions of the Muslim faith are noted below at some length, especially the prayer.

1. ṢALÁT, OR THE ISLAMIC PRAYER

Prayer is an outpouring of the heart's sentiments, a devout supplication to God, and a reverential expression of the soul's sincerest desires before its Maker. In Islam the idea of prayer, like all other religious ideas, finds its highest development. Prayer, according to the Holy Qur-án, is the true means of that purification of the heart which is the only way to communion with God. The Holy Qur-án says: "Recite that which has been revealed to you of the Book and keep up prayer; surely prayer keeps (one) away from indecency and evil, and certainly the remembrance of Allah is the greatest" (29 : 45). Islam, therefore, enjoins prayer as a means of the moral elevation of man. Prayer degenerating into a mere ritual, into a lifeless and vapid ceremony performed with insincerity of heart, is not the prayer enjoined by Islam. Such prayer is expressly denounced by the Holy Qur-án: "Woe to the praying ones who are unmindful of their prayers" (107 : 5).

With a Muslim his prayer is his spiritual diet, of which he partakes five times a day, and those who think that it is too often should remember how many times daily they require food for their bodies. Is not spiritual growth much more essential than physical growth? Is not the soul more valuable than the body? If food is needed several times daily to minister to the needs of the body, is not spiritual refreshment at the same time badly needed? Or if the body would be starved if it were fed only on the seventh day, has not the soul been actually starved by denying to it even the little which it could get after six days? The founder of Christianity himself emphasized this when he said: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4 : 4). What Christ taught in words has been reduced to a practical form by the Holy Prophet Muhammad.

It may be noted that while other religions have generally set apart a whole day for Divine service, on which other work is not to be done, Islam has given quite a new meaning to Divine service by introducing prayer into the every-day affairs of men. A day is not here set apart for prayer, and in this sense no sabbath is known to Islam. What Islam requires is this, that when most busy a Muslim should still be able to disengage himself from all worldly occupations and resort to his prayers. Hence it is also that Islam has done away with all institutions of monkery, which require a man to give up all worldly occupations for the whole of his life in order to hold communion with God. It makes communion with God possible even when man is most busy with his worldly occupations, thus making possible that which was generally considered impossible before its advent.

But while Islam has given permanence to the institution of prayer by requiring its observance at stated times and in a particular manner, it has also left ample scope for the individual himself to select what portions of the Holy Qur-án he likes and to make what supplications his soul yearns after. General directions have no doubt been given, and on these the whole of the Muslim world is agreed, for these directions were necessary to secure regularity, method, and uniformity; but in addition to these, ample scope has been left for the individual to give vent to his own feelings before the great Maker of the universe. As regards the time and mode of prayer, the following directions will be sufficient for the information of the ordinary reader.

Times of prayer.

The saying of prayer is obligatory upon every Muslim, male or female, who has attained to the age of discretion. It is said five times a day as follows :—

1. Ṣalát-ul-Fajr, or the morning prayer, is said after dawn and before sunrise.
2. Ṣalát-uẓ-Ẓuhr, or the early afternoon prayer, is said when the sun begins to decline, and its time extends till the next prayer.
3. Ṣalát-ul-'Aṣr, or the late afternoon prayer, is said when the sun is about midway on its course to setting, and its time extends to a little before it actually sets.
4. Ṣalát-ul-Maghrib, or the sunset prayer, is said immediately after the sun sets.
5. Ṣalát-ul-'Ishá, or the early night prayer, is said when the red glow in the west disappears, and its time extends to midnight. But it must be said before going to bed.

Note 1.—When a person is sick, or on a journey (or in case of rain, when the prayer is said in congregation in a mosque), the early afternoon and the late afternoon prayers may be said in conjunction, and so also the sunset and early night prayers. In the case of conjunction the sunnats may be dropped.

Note 2.—Besides these five obligatory prayers there are two optional ones. The first of these is the Ṣalát-ul-lail, the tahajjud, or the late night prayer, which is said after midnight, after being refreshed with sleep, and before dawn. This prayer is specially recommended in the Holy Qur-án. The other is known as the Ṣalát-uḍ-ḍuḥá, and it may be said at about breakfast-time. This is the time at which the two 'Íd prayers are said.

Note 3.—The service on Friday takes the place of the early afternoon prayer.

Preparation for prayer.

Before saying prayers it is necessary to wash those parts of the body which are generally exposed. This is called wuḍú, or ablution. The ablution is performed thus :—

1. The hands are cleansed, washing them up to the wrists.
2. Then the mouth is cleansed by means of a tooth-brush or simply with water.
3. Then the nose is cleansed within the nostrils with water.
4. Then the face is washed.
5. Then the right arm, and after that the left arm, is washed up to the elbow.
6. The head is then wiped over with wet hands, the three fingers between the little finger and the thumb of both hands being joined together.
7. The feet are then washed up to the ankles, the right foot first and the left after.

But if there are socks on, and they have been put on after performing an ablution, it is not necessary to take them off: the wet hands may be passed over them. The same practice may be resorted to in case the boots are on, but it would be more decent to take off the boots when going into a mosque. It is, however, necessary that the socks be taken off and the feet washed about once in every twenty-four hours.

Note 1.—A fresh ablution is necessary only when a man has answered a call of nature or has been asleep.

Note 2.—In cases of intercourse between husband and wife, a total ablution or washing of the whole body is necessary.

Note 3.—When a person is sick, or when access cannot be had to water, what is called tayammum is performed in place of ablution or total ablution. Tayammum is performed by touching pure earth with both hands and then wiping over the face with this only once, and the backs of the two hands.

Service.

The service consists ordinarily of two parts, one part, called the farḍ, to be said in congregation, preferably in a mosque, with an imám leading the service; the second part, called sunnat, to be said alone, preferably in one's house. But when a man is unable to say his prayers in congregation, the farḍ may be said like the sunnat, alone.

Each part consists of a certain number of rak'ats, as explained below:—

The Fajr, or morning prayer, consists of two rak'ats (sunnat) said alone, followed by two rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation.

The Ẓuhr, or early afternoon prayer, is a longer service consisting of four, or two, rak'ats (sunnat) said alone, followed by four rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation, and followed again by two rak'ats (sunnat) said alone.

In the Friday service held at the time of ẓuhr, which takes the place of the sabbath of some other religions, the four rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation are reduced to two, but these two rak'ats are preceded by a sermon (Khuṭbah), exhorting the Muslims to goodness and showing them the means of their moral elevation and dwelling upon their national and communal welfare.

The 'Aṣr, or the late afternoon prayer, consists of four rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation.

The Maghrib, or the sunset prayer, consists of three rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation, followed by two rak'ats (sunnat) said alone.

The 'Ishá, or early night prayer, consists of four rak'ats (farḍ) said in congregation, followed by two rak'ats (sunnat) said alone, again followed by three rak'ats (witr) said alone, the last of these rak'ats containing the well-known prayer known as qunút.

The Tahajjud, or late night prayer, consists of eight rak'ats (sunnat) said in twos.

The Ḍuḥá, or the before-noon prayer, may consist of two rak'ats or four rak'ats.

The 'Íd prayer consists of two rak'ats (sunnat) said in congregation, being followed by a sermon or khuṭbah, the object of which is the same as the object of the sermon in the Friday service.

Note 1.—When a person is journeying, the sunnat is dropped in every one of the prayers except the morning prayer, and the four rak'ats farḍ in each of the Ẓuhr and the 'Aṣr and the 'Ishá prayers are reduced to two. When one is aware that his stay at a particular place in his journey will be four days or more, the complete service should be performed there.

Note 2.—When there are two or more persons, they may form a congregation, one of them acting as the imám, or the leader; but when a person is alone, he may say the farḍ alone, as he does the sunnat.

Two chief features of the Muslim congregational service are that the service may be led by any one, the only condition being that he should know the Qur-án better than the others, and that he should excel the others in righteousness and in the performance of his duties towards God and His creatures; the second is that not the least distinction of caste or rank or wealth is to be met with in a Muslim congregation: even the king stands shoulder to shoulder with the least of his subjects.

Note 3.—Every congregational service must be preceded by an azán and an iqámat, the former being a call to prayer said in a sufficiently loud voice, and the latter requiring those assembled for the congregational service to stand up in a line, or in several lines if necessary.

The azán, or call to prayer, consists of the following sentences, uttered in a loud voice by the crier, standing with his face to the qiblah, i.e. towards Mecca, which is the centre of the Muslim world, and in fact the spiritual centre of the whole world, with both hands raised to his ears:—

1. ٱللّٰهُ أَكْبَرُ Alláh-u Akbar, i.e. Allah is the greatest (repeated four times).

2. أَشْهَدُ أَنْ لَّا إِلٰهَ إِلَّا ٱللّٰهُ Ash-hadu al-lá-iláha ill-Alláh, i.e. I bear witness that nothing deserves to be worshipped but Allah (repeated twice).

3. أَشْهَدُ أَنَّ مُحَمَّدًا رَّسُولُ ٱللّٰهِ Ash-hadu anna Muhammadar-rasúl ulláh, i.e. I bear witness that Muhammad is the Apostle of Allah (repeated twice).

4. حَيَّ عَلَى ٱلصَّلٰوةِ Hayya 'alaṣ-ṣaláh, i.e. come to prayer (repeated twice, turning the face to the right).

5. حَيَّ عَلَى ٱلْفَلَاحِ Hayya 'alal-faláh, i.e. come to success (repeated twice, turning the face to the left).

6. ٱللّٰهُ أَكْبَرُ Alláh-u Akbar, i.e. Allah is the greatest (repeated twice).

7. لَا إِلٰهَ إِلَّا ٱللّٰهُ Lá iláha ill-Alláh, i.e. there is no god but Allah.

The following sentence is added in the call of morning prayer after No. 5, i.e. before the two final sentences: اَلصَّلٰوةُ خَيْرٌ مِّنَ ٱلنَّوْمِ Aṣ-ṣalát-u khair-un min-an-naum, i.e. prayer is better than sleep (repeated twice).

The iqámat is said in the same words, every sentence being said only once, and with the addition of the following sentence repeated twice before the two final sentences: قَدْ قَامَتِ ٱلصَّلٰوةُ Qad qámat-iṣ-ṣaláh, i.e. the prayer has indeed begun.

Both azán and iqámat are dispensed with in the case of 'Íd prayers. Instead of these, Alláh-u Akbar is repeated seven times in the first rak'at and five times in the second after the takbír-i-taḥrímah. In the Friday service there are generally two calls, the second being given when the imám is about to deliver the sermon.

Note 4.—A mosque is a building dedicated to Divine service, but a service, whether alone or in congregation, may be held anywhere when necessary. The Holy Prophet is reported to have said that the whole of the earth had been made a mosque for him, indicating not only that no place stood in need of being consecrated, but also that the true servants of Allah would spread over the whole surface of the earth.

Description of a rak'at.

One rak'at is completed as follows :—

1. Both hands are raised up to the ears in a standing position, with the face towards the qiblah, i.e. Mecca, while the words Alláh-u Akbar (Allah is the greatest of all) are uttered, and this is called the Takbír-i-taḥrímah.

2. Then comes Qiyám. The right hand is placed upon the left on the breast, while the standing position is maintained, and the following prayer, or a part of it, should be recited :—

إِنِّي وَجَّهْتُ وَجْهِيَ لِلَّذِي فَطَرَ السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْأَرْضَ حَنِيفًا وَّمَا أَنَا مِنَ الْمُشْرِكِينَ ۝
إِنَّ صَلٰوتِي وَنُسُكِي وَمَحْيَايَ وَمَمَاتِي لِلّٰهِ رَبِّ الْعٰلَمِينَ ۝ لَا شَرِيكَ لَهُ وَبِذٰلِكَ أُمِرْتُ
وَأَنَا مِنَ الْمُسْلِمِينَ ۝ اَللّٰهُمَّ أَنْتَ الْمَلِكُ لَا إِلٰهَ إِلَّا أَنْتَ أَنْتَ رَبِّي وَأَنَا عَبْدُكَ ظَلَمْتُ

Translation.

"Surely I have turned myself, being upright, to Him Who originated the heavens and the earth, and I am not of the polytheists. Surely my prayer and my sacrifice and my life and my death are all for Allah, the Lord of the worlds; no associate has He, and this am I commanded, and I am of those who submit. O Allah! Thou art the King, there is no god but Thou; Thou art my Lord and I am Thy servant; I have been unjust to myself, and I confess my faults, so grant me protection against all my faults, for none grants protection against faults but Thou, and guide me to the best of morals, for none guides to the best of them but Thou; and turn away from me the evil morals, for none can turn away from me the evil morals but Thou."

The following brief prayer is, however, the one more generally adopted :—

سُبْحَانَكَ اللّٰهُمَّ وَبِحَمْدِكَ وَتَبَارَكَ اسْمُكَ وَتَعَالٰى جَدُّكَ وَلَا إِلٰهَ غَيْرُكَ أَعُوذُ بِاللّٰهِ

Translation.

Glory to Thee, O Allah! and Thine is the praise, and blessed is Thy Name and exalted is Thy Majesty, and there is none to be served besides Thee. I betake me for refuge to Allah against the accursed devil.

After this the Fátiḥah, which runs as follows, is recited in the same position :—

بِسْمِ اللّٰهِ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ ○ اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ رَبِّ الْعٰلَمِيْنَ ○ الرَّحْمٰنِ الرَّحِيْمِ ○ مٰلِكِ يَوْمِ الدِّيْنِ ○ اِيَّاكَ نَعْبُدُ وَاِيَّاكَ نَسْتَعِيْنُ ○ اِهْدِنَا الصِّرَاطَ الْمُسْتَقِيْمَ ○ صِرَاطَ الَّذِيْنَ اَنْعَمْتَ عَلَيْهِمْ ○ غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوْبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّآلِّيْنَ ○

Translation.

In the name of Allah the Beneficent, the Merciful. All praise is due to Allah, the Lord of the worlds, the Beneficent, the Merciful; Master of the day of requital. Thee do we serve, and Thee do we beseech for help. Guide us on the right path, the path of those upon whom Thou hast bestowed favours, not of those upon whom wrath is brought down, nor of those who go astray.

At the close of the above is said Ámin—i.e. Be it so—and then any portion of the Qur-án which the devotee has by heart is recited. Generally one of the shorter chapters at the close of the Holy Book is repeated, and the chapter termed Al-Ikhláṣ (Unity) is the one recommended for those who are unacquainted with the Qur-án. This is as follows :—

قُلْ هُوَ اللّٰهُ اَحَدٌ ○ اَللّٰهُ الصَّمَدُ ○ لَمْ يَلِدْ وَلَمْ يُوْلَدْ ○ وَلَمْ يَكُنْ لَّهٗ كُفُوًا اَحَدٌ ○

Transliteration

Qul huw-alláhu Aḥad. Alláh-uṣ-Ṣamad. Lam yalid wa lam yúlad. Wa lam yakul-la-hú kufuwan aḥad.

Translation.

Say: He, Allah, is one; Allah is He of Whom nothing is independent; He begets not, nor is He begotten; and none is like Him.

3. Then, saying Alláh-u Akbar (Allah is the greatest of all), the devotee lowers his head down, so that the palms of the hands reach the knees. In this position, which is called Rukú', words expressive of the Divine glory and majesty are repeated at least three times. They are the following :—

سُبْحَانَ رَبِّيَ الْعَظِيْمِ Sub-ḥán-a Rabb-iy-al-'Aẓím; i.e. Glory to my Lord, the Great.

The following words may also be added or adopted instead of the above :—

سُبْحَانَكَ اللّٰهُمَّ رَبَّنَا وَبِحَمْدِكَ اللّٰهُمَّ اغْفِرْ لِي Sub-ḥánaka-Alláhumma Rabbaná wa biḥamdika alláhum-maghfir li, i.e. Glory to Thee, O Allah, our Lord, and Thine the praise; O Allah! grant me protection.

4. After this, the standing position is assumed, with the words :—

سَمِعَ اللّٰهُ لِمَنْ حَمِدَهٗ Samiʼ-Alláh-u liman ḥamidah. رَبَّنَا وَلَكَ الْحَمْدُ Rabbaná wa-lak-al-ḥamd, i.e. Allah accepts him who gives praise to Him; O our Lord, Thine is the praise.

5. Then the devotee prostrates himself, the toes of both feet, both knees, both hands, and the forehead touching the ground, and the following words expressing Divine greatness are uttered at least three times in this position, which is called the Sajdah :—

سُبْحَانَ رَبِّيَ الْاَعْلٰى Subḥán a Rabbiyal-A'lá, i.e. Glory to my Lord, the Most High.

The following words may also be added to the above or adopted instead:—

سُبْحَانَكَ اللّٰهُمَّ رَبَّنَا وَبِحَمْدِكَ اللّٰهُمَّ اغْفِرْ لِي Subḥána-ka Alláhumma Rabba-ná wa bi-ḥamdika Alláhum-maghfir li, i.e. O Allah! Glory to Thee, and Thine is the praise; O Allah! grant me protection.

This is the first sajdah.

6. Then the devotee sits down in a reverential posture. This is called jalsah.

7. This is followed by a second prostration, or the second sajdah, as described above under 5, with the repetition of the words there given.

8. This finishes one rak'at. The devotee then rises and assumes a standing position for the second rak'at, which is finished in the same manner as the first, but instead of assuming a standing posture after the second rak'at, he kneels down in a reverential position called the qa'dah, and with the glorification of the Divine Being combines prayers for the Holy Prophet, for the faithful, and for himself, called the taḥiyyah, which runs as follows :—

اَلتَّحِيَّاتُ لِلّٰهِ وَالصَّلَوٰتُ وَالطَّيِّبَاتُ اَلسَّلَامُ عَلَيْكَ اَيُّهَا النَّبِيُّ وَرَحْمَةُ اللّٰهِ وَبَرَكَاتُهٗ
اَلسَّلَامُ عَلَيْنَا وَعَلٰى عِبَادِ اللّٰهِ الصَّالِحِيْنَ اَشْهَدُ اَنْ لَّا اِلٰهَ اِلَّا اللّٰهُ وَاَشْهَدُ اَنَّ مُحَمَّدًا

All prayers and worship rendered through words, actions, and wealth are due to Allah. Peace be on you, O Prophet, and the mercy of Allah and His blessings. Peace be on us and the righteous servants of Allah. And I bear witness that none deserves to be served but Allah, and I bear witness that Muhammad is His servant and His Apostle.

9. If the devotee intends to say more than two rak'ats he stands, but if he has to say only two rak'ats he repeats also the following prayer of blessings for the Prophet (this prayer and the one that follows being always repeated before the final salám) :—

اَللّٰهُمَّ صَلِّ عَلٰى مُحَمَّدٍ وَّعَلٰٓى اٰلِ مُحَمَّدٍ كَمَا صَلَّيْتَ عَلٰٓى اِبْرَاهِيْمَ وَعَلٰٓى اٰلِ اِبْرَاهِيْمَ اِنَّكَ حَمِيْدٌ

O Allah! make Muhammad and the followers of Muhammad successful, as Thou didst make Abraham and the followers of Abraham successful, for surely Thou art praised and magnified. O Allah! bless Muhammad and the followers of Muhammad, as Thou didst bless Abraham and the followers of Abraham, for surely Thou art praised and magnified.

The following prayer should also be added to this :—

اَللّٰهُمَّ اِنِّىْ ظَلَمْتُ نَفْسِىْ ظُلْمًا كَثِيْرًا وَّلَا يَغْفِرُ الذُّنُوْبَ اِلَّآ اَنْتَ فَاغْفِرْ لِىْ مَغْفِرَةً مِّنْ
عِنْدِكَ وَارْحَمْنِىْٓ اِنَّكَ اَنْتَ الْغَفُوْرُ الرَّحِيْمُ

Transliteration.

Translation.

O Allah! I have been greatly unjust to myself, and none grants a protection against faults but Thou; therefore protect me with a protection from Thyself and have mercy on me; surely Thou art the Forgiving, the Merciful.

Or instead of this the following prayer may be adopted :—

رَبِّ اجْعَلْنِىْ مُقِيْمَ الصَّلٰوةِ وَمِنْ ذُرِّيَّتِىْ رَبَّنَا وَتَقَبَّلْ دُعَآءِ ○ رَبَّنَا اغْفِرْ لِىْ وَلِوَالِدَىَّ وَ

Translation.

My Lord! make me keep up prayer, and my offspring too; Our Lord! accept the prayer; Our Lord! grant Thy protection to me and to my parents and to the faithful on the day when the reckoning will be taken.

10. This closes the service, which ends with the salám, or the greeting, being also the greeting of the Muslims to each other. The devotee turns his head first to the right and then to the left, saying each time:—

اَلسَّلَامُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَرَحْمَةُ اللهِ As-salámu 'alaikum wa raḥmat-ulláh i, i.e. Peace be with you and the mercy of Allah.

11. Thus the service finishes, if the devotee had to say only two rak'ats; but if he had intended three or four rak'ats, then after the qa'dah (see 8), and repeating taḥiyyah therein (see 8), he takes the standing position, again saying, Alláh-u Akbar, and finishes the remaining one or two rak'ats in the same manner (see 1 to 7), the last act being always kneeling in a reverential mood, saying taḥiyyah and prayer of blessings for the Prophet, etc., and the concluding prayer (see 8 and 9), to be followed by the salám.

Besides this, the devotee is at liberty to pray in any position, as the yearning of his soul leads him to, for the salát, or the liturgical service of Islam, is a prayer throughout. It is to be observed that in first standing up for prayer and in changing from one position to another, the devotee says Alláh-u Akbar, or "Allah is the greatest," and therefore it is only just that man should in all positions and places be truly submissive to Him, sitting, standing, bowing, and prostrating himself when he is called upon to do so by One Who is the Greatest of all. Only when rising from the ruk'u (see 3) he says, Sami'-Alláhu li-man hamidah, i.e. "Allah accepts him who gives praises to Him," instead of Alláh-u Akbar.

Note.—When the prayer is said in congregation, the congregation, or those who follow the imám, repeat all the prayers, etc., and also the Fátiḥah, but not the portions of the Qur-án following the Fátiḥah, and when the imám, rising from the bowing posture, says, Sami'-Alláh-u liman ḥamidah, the congregation say, Rabbaná wa lak-al-ḥamd (see 3).

12. The prayer known as the qunút is recited after rising from the rukú' (see 3), or immediately before assuming that position, when standing, generally only in the last of the three last rak'ats (witr) of the 'Ishá prayer. The most well known qunút is the following:—

اَللّٰهُمَّ اهْدِنِيْ فِيْمَنْ هَدَيْتَ وَعَافِنِيْ فِيْمَنْ عَافَيْتَ وَتَوَلَّنِيْ فِيْمَنْ تَوَلَّيْتَ وَبَارِكْ لِيْ
فِيْمَآ اَعْطَيْتَ وَقِنِيْ شَرَّمَا قَضَيْتَ فَاِنَّكَ تَقْضِيْ وَلَا يُقْضٰى عَلَيْكَ اِنَّهٗ لَا يَذِلُّ مَنْ
وَّالَيْتَ تَبَارَكْتَ رَبَّنَا وَتَعَالَيْتَ

O Allah! guide me among those whom Thou hast guided aright, and preserve me among those whom Thou hast preserved, and befriend me among those whom Thou hast befriended, and bless me in what Thou dost grant me, and protect me from the evil of what Thou hast judged; for surely Thou judgest, and none can judge against Thee; surely he whom Thou befriendest is not disgraced. Blessed art Thou, our Lord, and Exalted.

Some adopt instead the following :—

اَللّٰهُمَّ اِنَّا نَسْتَعِيْنُكَ وَنَسْتَغْفِرُكَ وَنُؤْمِنُ بِكَ وَنَتَوَكَّلُ عَلَيْكَ وَنُثْنِيْ عَلَيْكَ الْخَيْرَ وَ

Translation.

O Allah! we beseech Thy help, and ask Thy protection and believe in Thee, and trust in Thee, and we laud Thee in the best manner, and we thank Thee, and we are not ungrateful to Thee, and we cast off and forsake him who disobeys Thee! O Allah! Thee do we serve, and to Thee do we pray and make obeisance, and to Thee do we flee, and we are quick, and we hope for Thy mercy and we fear Thy chastisement; for surely Thy chastisement overtakes the unbelievers.

The whole of the Muslim prayer is only a declaration of Divine majesty and glory, and Divine holiness and perfection, and of the entire dependence of man on his Maker. As the body assumes every posture of humbleness and adoration, the tongue gives expression to every form of Divine glory and perfection, and the heart cannot but be full of the deepest and purest emotions. What a spirit of Divine grandeur permeates every word! What a great reliance on God! What a noble expression of obedience to Him and willingness to have no concern with those who are not of God! What a true fear of the Deity, and fearlessness of the rest! There is no noble desire, emotion, or sentiment which has not found its expression in the above words.

2. FASTING

Fasting is one of those religious institutions which, though universally recognized, have had quite a new meaning introduced into them by the advent of Islam. Fasting was generally resorted to in times of sorrow and affliction, probably to appease an angry Deity. In Islam, fasting is enjoined for the moral elevation of man and for his spiritual betterment. This object is made clear in the Holy Qur-án itself, where fasting is enjoined: Fasting is prescribed for you . . . so that you may guard against evil (2 : 183). Thus, as in prayer, the object is the purification of the soul, so that man may learn how to shun evil. The Holy Qur-án does not content itself with simply enjoining the doing of good and refraining from evil, but teaches man the ways by walking in which the tendency to evil in him can be suppressed and the tendency to good improved. Fasting is one of those means. Hence fasting in Islam does not mean simply abstaining from food, but from every kind of evil. In fact, abstention from food is only a step to make a man realize—if he can, in obedience to Divine injunctions, abstain from that which is otherwise lawful for him—how much more necessary it is that he should abstain from the evil, the consequences of which must no doubt be evil. It is, in fact, like a training of the faculties of man, for as every other faculty of man requires to be trained to attain its full force, the faculty of submission to the Divine will also requires to be trained, and fasting is one of the means by which this is achieved. In addition to that, fasting has its physical advantages. It not only makes man habituated to bear hunger and thirst, and thus to accustom himself to a life of hardship, so that he may not be too much given over to ease, but also exercises a very good effect upon the health generally.

The subject is dealt with in the Holy Qur-án in the 23rd section of the 2nd chapter. The number of days on which fasts are to be kept is twenty-nine or thirty, according to the number of the days of the month of Ramaḍán. Food and drink of every kind are prohibited on the fast days from dawn till sunset. So also sexual intercourse. Being a lunar month, the Ramaḍán falls in different seasons in different years, and accordingly the days are sometimes too lengthy in some countries for ordinary constitutions to bear hunger and thirst during the long interval. The analogy of the sick and the traveller, who are enjoined to keep fasts during other days than Ramaḍán, leads us to the conclusion that in such exceptional cases the observance of the fasts may be transferred to shorter days—say to the season when from dawn to sunset would be about fifteen hours, being about the longest duration of the fast in Medina or Mecca.

It may be noted that persons who suffer from constant sickness, men and women too old to bear the hardship, and women who are in the family way and those who give suck, are excused, but they should give away a poor man's food every day, if this is within their means. There are sayings of the Holy Prophet which expressly mention these exceptions.

3. "ZAKÁT," OR THE POOR-RATE

Every religion of the world has preached charity, but, like prayer, we find here method and regularity given to this institution, so that it has assumed in Islam a permanence which is not encountered anywhere else. Islam makes charity obligatory and binding upon all those who accept the Muslim faith. Here we have a brotherhood into which the rich man cannot enter unless and until he is willing to give part of his possessions for the support of its poorer members. There is no doubt that the rich man is not here confronted with the insuperable difficulty of making the camel pass through the eye of the needle before he can enter the kingdom of heaven, but he is subjected to a practical test which not only makes him stand on the same footing with his poorest brother, but also requires him to pay a tax—a tax which is levied on the rich for the benefit of the poor; and thus is a real brotherhood established between the rich and the poor.

The payment of the poor-rate is an injunction next in importance only to prayer. In the Holy Qur-án it is very often mentioned in conjunction with prayer. The zakát is, according to a saying of the Holy Prophet, a charitable gift taken from the rich for the benefit of the poor. Every person is rich within the meaning of this saying who has in his possession silver or other property of the value of approximately Rs.50, or gold of the value of about £12. No zakát is, however, payable on jewels, nor on house furniture, utensils, implements, or other property or live stock in ordinary use. On all hoarded wealth within the above definition which has remained in the possession of the owner for one year, one-fortieth portion is payable into the bait-ul-mál, or the public treasury. In the case of immovable property, zakát is paid on the income or rent that accrues therefrom.

As regards the expenditure of the income of zakát, eight heads are mentioned in the Holy Qur-án (9 : 60) :—

1. The poor.
2. The needy.
3. Those in debt.
4. (Ransoming of) captives.
5. The wayfarer.
6. The officials appointed in connection with the collection and expenditure of zakát.
7. Those whose hearts are made to incline to truth.
8. The way of Allah.

A few words may be added to explain the above. As distinguished from the poor, the needy are those who may be able to earn their livelihood, but lack the means, as implements, etc. A person may be able to support himself, but if he is in debt, his debts may be paid off from the zakát fund. The captives are those who are taken prisoners in a war. A portion of the public funds must go for their release. A traveller, though in well-to-do circumstances, may sometimes stand in need of help in a strange place or country; hence a part of the zakát must also be spent for the wayfarer. The sixth head of expenditure shows that zakát must under all circumstances be collected and disbursed as a public fund, and the individual is not at liberty to spend zakát as he likes. Officials must be appointed to collect it and manage its expenditure, and their wages must be paid out of the zakát fund.

The last two heads relate to the propagation of the faith. With respect to the preaching of a religion, there is always a class which is ready to listen, but money is needed to enable them to listen. These persons are spoken of here as those whose hearts are made to incline to truth. Fí sabíl-illáh, or in the way of Allah, stands, as shown in foot-note 350, for the advancement of the cause of the religion of Islam or its defence. Under this head, therefore, zakát may be spent for the propagation of the religion of Islam and to meet the objections advanced against Islam. It may be noted that this head has for the past few centuries been totally neglected by the Muslims, and the result is that there is rarely any effort made for the propagation of the holy religion of Islam.

4. PILGRIMAGE

Performance of the pilgrimage to Mecca is incumbent upon every Muslim once in his life, subject to the condition that he has the means to undertake the journey as well as to make provision for those dependent on him. Security of life is also a necessary condition.

The pilgrimage is performed in the month of Zulhaj, and the pilgrim must reach Mecca before the 7th of that month. As regards the formalities to be observed during the pilgrimage, every one can easily learn them from the Mu'allim, or instructor.

The arkán, or principal points in connection with the pilgrimage, are :—

1. Entering upon a state of iḥrám, in which the ordinary clothes are put off and all pilgrims wear one kind of apparel, consisting of two seamless sheets, leaving the head uncovered.
2. Tawáf, or making circuits round the Ka'ba seven times.
3. Sa'y, or running seven times between Safa and Marwa, two small hills.
4. Staying in the plain of 'Arafát.

It will be seen that the state of iḥrám makes all men and women stand upon one plane of equality, all wearing the same simple dress, and living in the same simple conditions. All distinctions of rank and colour, of wealth and nationality, disappear there, and the king is there indistinguishable from the peasant. The whole of humanity assumes one aspect, one attitude, before its Maker, and thus the grandest and the noblest sight of human equality is witnessed in that wonderful desert plain called the 'Arafát, which truly makes a man have a true knowledge of his Creator, the word being derived from 'arafa, meaning he came to have a knowledge (of the thing). The whole of the world is unable to present another such noble picture of real brotherhood and practical equality.

The condition of the pilgrim and the different movements connected with the pilgrimage, the making of circuits and running to and fro, in fact represent the stage in which the worshipper is imbued with the spirit of true love of the Divine Being. That love of God which is so much talked of in other religions becomes here a reality. The fire of Divine love being kindled in the heart, the worshipper now, like a true lover, neglects all cares of the body, and finds his highest satisfaction in sacrificing his very heart and soul for the beloved one's sake, and, like the true lover, he makes circuits round the house of his beloved one and hastens on from place to place. He shows, in fact, that he has given up his own will, and, completely surrendering himself to the Divine will, has sacrificed all his interests for His sake. The lower connections have all been cut off, and all the comforts of this world have lost their attraction for him. The pilgrimage, in fact, represents the last stage in spiritual advancement, and by his outward condition and his movements the pilgrim only announces to the whole world how all lower connections must be cut off to reach the great goal of human perfection, which can only be attained by holding true communion with the Divine Being.

II. THE COLLECTION AND ARRANGEMENT OF THE HOLY QUR-AN

I now come to the second point, viz. the collection and arrangement of the Holy Qur-án.

The Holy Qur-án is mentioned by various names in the revelation itself. It is called Al-Kitáb, or the Book (2 : 2, etc.); Al-Qur-án, or what is or should be read (2 : 185, etc.) ; Al-Furqán, or that which makes a Distinction between truth and falsehood (25 : 1, etc.) ; Az-Zikr (other forms of the same word used being zikrá and Tazkirah), or the Reminder (15 : 9, etc.) ; At-Tanzíl, or the Revelation (26 : 192, etc.); Al-Hadís, or the Saying (18 : 6, etc.) ; Al-Mau'izah, or the Admonition (10 : 57, etc.) ; Al-Ḥukm (other forms of the same word being ḥikmat, ḥakím, muḥkam), or the Judgment or Wisdom (13 : 37, etc.) ; Ash-Shifá, or the Healing (10: 57, etc.) ; Al-Hudá, or the Guidance (2 : 2, etc.) ; Ḥabl-Ullah, or the Covenant of Allah (3 : 102) ; Ar-Raḥmat, or the Mercy (17 : 82) ; Al-Khair, or the Goodness (3 : 103) ; Ar-Rúḥ, or the Spirit or the Life (42 : 52) ; Al-Bayán, or the Explanation (3 : 137) ; An-Ni'mat, or the Favour (93 : 11) ; Al-Burhán, or the Argument (4 : 175): Al-Qayyim, or the Maintainer of Truth (18 : 2) ; Al-Muhaimin, or the Guardian (of previous revelation) (5 : 48) ; An-Núr, or the Light (7 : 157) ; Al-Ḥaqq, or the Truth (17 : 81) ; Al-Mubárak, or the Blessed (whose blessings are never intercepted) (21 : 50, etc.). It is also mentioned by several other names.

Pains have been taken by non-Muslims to spread the belief that the Holy Qur-án is a book absolutely devoid of arrangement—that not only are the chapters put together without any regard to their subject-matter, but that even the text in the individual suras is in a perplexed state. The absence of arrangement in the Holy Qur-án has rather become an article of faith with the Christian writers, so that the different writers on this topic, instead of giving any serious and important consideration to the question, have blindly imitated or copied one another in their unwarranted statements.

For instance, Sale, in his preliminary discourse to his translation of the Holy Qur-án, says: "After the new passages had been from the Prophet's mouth taken down in writing by his scribe, they were published to his followers, several of whom took copies for their private use. . . . The originals, when returned, were put promiscuously into a chest." And again: "Muhammad left the chapters complete as we now have them, excepting such passages as his successor might add or correct from those who had gotten them by heart."

Palmer, the latest English translator of the Holy Qur-án, says: "The individual portions of the Qur-án were not always written down immediately after their revelation." And again: "That the Qur-án was, or that even the individual suras were, however, arranged in the present order by the Prophet himself is impossible, both from internal evidence and that of traditions." He also adds: "And, lastly, many odd verses appear to have been inserted into various suras for no other reason than that they suit the rhyme."

And the basis of all these statements is no other but that the present arrangement of the chapters does not follow the chronological order of revelation. No critic has, however, given a serious thought to the fact that the chronological order of the writing of the various parts of even an ordinary book may be quite different from its subsequent arrangement with reference to the subject-matter. That the arrangement of the whole and of the individual chapters is based on its subject-matter, many Arabic commentators of the Holy Book have pointed out, but while drawing so much other material from them, the English translators of the Holy Qur-án have always utterly ignored this important point. It is to give prominence to this point that I have added an introductory note to each chapter, supplementing it by an abstract of every section of the chapter. This feature of the present translation, and occasional references in the foot-notes, will make it clear that an arrangement based on the subject-matter is observed not only in the order in which the different verses of a chapter follow each other, but also in the construction of the suras.

How this arrangement was brought about is shown by the following considerations:—

1. That the whole of the Holy Qur-án was written down in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet by his own direction.

2. That the whole of the Holy Qur-án was committed to memory by the followers of the Holy Prophet in his lifetime.

3. That the arrangement of the verses in each chapter, and of the chapters themselves, was effected in the lifetime and under the direction of the Holy Prophet.

4. That the collection of the Qur-án under the orders of Abu Bakr was no more than a collection of the different writings into one volume, in accordance with the arrangement observed by the Holy Prophet.

5. That the differences of the readings do not effect any important alteration in the meaning of the text of the Holy Qur-án.

Each of these statements is borne out by internal as well as external evidence, which I briefly consider below under each head.

1. Evidence as to the writing of the Qur-án.

The first and the most important circumstance which assisted in the preservation of the text of the Holy Qur-án is that every verse of it was put into writing in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet before his own eyes. Writing was known at Mecca and Medina before the advent of Islam, and though the Arabs generally relied upon their wonderfully retentive memories for the preservation of thousands of verses and long lists of genealogies, yet they reduced to writing their more important compositions, and hung them in some public place where their compatriots could see and admire them. Hence their seven famous odes are known as as-sab'ul-mu'allaqát—"the seven suspended ones." These odes were so named from the circumstance that they were suspended in the Ka'ba by their authors at the pilgrimage season as odes of unequalled poetic beauty, and there they remained placarded for some time. These were seven different odes by seven different famous poets of the pre-Islamic days, and their being in writing conclusively proves that the art of writing was not unknown to the Arabs, and that they put their prized works into writing.

Various anecdotes have been reported which show that the whole of the Holy Qur-án also existed in a written form in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. That there is overwhelming evidence of the Qur-án having been reduced to writing before the eyes of the Holy Prophet is amply attested by Sir William Muir, one of the most hostile critics of Islam, who has found it impossible to deny its truth. He writes:—

"But there is good reason for believing that many fragmentary copies, embracing amongst them the whole Qur-án, or nearly the whole, were during his lifetime made by the Prophet's followers. Writing was without doubt generally known at Mecca long before Muhammad assumed the prophetical office. And at Medina many of his followers were employed by the Prophet in writing his letters or despatches. . . . The poorer captives taken at Badr were offered their release on condition that they taught a certain number of Medina citizens to write. And although the people of Medina were not so generally educated as those of Mecca, yet many are noticed as having been able to write before Islam" (Introduction to Muir's Life of Muhammad, p. xxviii).

The Holy Qur-án itself furnishes abundant evidence that it existed in a written form. It again and again calls itself "kitáb," which means a book, or a writing which is complete in itself (see foot-note 13). The Qur-án is also designated as the ṣuḥuf, which means written papers. Thus in 98:2 we have: "An Apostle from Allah reciting pure pages, wherein are the right books." The pure pages are the pages of the Holy Qur-án, and the right books are its chapters; for not only is the entire Qur-án called Al-kitáb or the Book, but its different chapters are also called books. Again in 80:11–16 we read: "Nay! surely it is a source of eminence—so let him who pleases mind it—in honoured books, exalted, purified, in the hands of scribes, noble, virtuous." The word ṣaḥífah (plural ṣuḥuf), which is used here, is the very word applied to the collection made by Zaid in the Caliphate of Abu Bakr and later in that of 'Us̠man. Thus we see that the Holy Qur-án describes itself in clear and unmistakable words both as a kitáb and as a ṣaḥífah, words used in the Arabic language to denote a written book, a fact to which every dictionary of the Arabic language testifies. From the same root ṣaḥaf is derived the word Muṣ-ḥaf, a name to this day applied to the Holy Qur-án, which means a book or a volume consisting of a collection of ṣaḥífás or written pages (see Lane's Lexicon under the root ṣaḥaf). The word Qur-án is derived from the root Qara', which means reading or reciting, and the Holy Book is called the Qur-án, showing that it was meant for reading or reciting.

Every portion of it was both written and recited, and hence it is the Qur-án as well as the Kitáb.

There are many other references in the Holy Qur-án showing that its chapters existed in a written form at an early date. The 56th chapter of the Holy Book, which is entitled Al-Wáqi'ah, or the "Great Event," is among the earliest chapters revealed at Mecca, and the following words occur therein: "Most surely it is an honoured Qur-án, in a book that is protected: none shall touch it save the purified ones" (77–79). These words establish two points: firstly, that the Qur-án asserted itself to be a protected book, i.e. a book which none could alter; and secondly, that it claimed to be written at that early date, because the impure are forbidden to touch it. If it was not found in a written form, it could not be described as a thing which could be touched. Rodwell gives the following foot-note under this passage: "This passage implies the existence of copies of portions at least of the Qur-án in common use. It was quoted by the sister of 'Umar when, at his conversion, he desired to take her copy of sura 20 into his hands. Verses 78, 79 were directed by the Caliph Muhammad Abul Qasim bin Abdulla to be inscribed on all copies of the Qur-án." The conclusion, of course, is evident. The words not only signify that the portions already revealed had been reduced to writing, but they clearly imply that the whole must become a written book in time, a book that is protected, and that the impure shall not touch it. It is an admitted fact that every portion of the Holy Qur-án was regarded with equal reverence by the Muslims, and every word of it was believed to be the Word of God. It is, therefore, quite unreasonable to suppose that some portions of the Holy Qur-án were written while others were not. There is not a single circumstance in the whole history of Islam which can entitle us to make any such distinction between the different portions of the Holy Qur-án, and to suppose that while some chapters were written, others were not thought fit to be written, or that equal care was not taken of all the parts or that the laudable desire to preserve every word of the Holy Qur-án was not manifested by the Holy Prophet or his followers. The Holy Qur-án was a "book" "written in pure pages," which none but the pure should touch, and these descriptions apply to each and every word of the Holy Book.

Again, it is in a chapter revealed and proclaimed at Mecca that we meet with the following challenge to the unbelievers who looked upon the Holy Qur-án as a fabrication of the Prophet: "Or do they say, He has forged it? Say, Then bring ten forged chapters like it, and call upon whom you can besides Allah if you are truthful" (11 : 13). A similar challenge is contained in a chapter of a still earlier date: "Say, If men and jinn should combine together to bring the like of this Qur-án, they could not bring the like of it, though some of them were aiders of others" (17 : 88). And in a chapter revealed at Medina we have: "And if you are in doubt as to that which we have revealed to Our servant, then produce a chapter like it, and call on your helpers besides Allah, if you are truthful. But if you do it not—and never shall you do it—then be on your guard against the fire" (2 : 23, 24). Now, all these challenges to the opponents to produce one sura or ten suras like the Qur-án imply that the suras of the Holy Qur-án existed in a written form at the time of the challenge, because otherwise the challenge would have been meaningless, for they could not be challenged to produce its like unless they could have access to the written chapters.

There are numerous anecdotes showing that when the Holy Prophet received a revelation it was at once reduced to writing, and thus every verse or chapter of the Holy Qur-án, when it was revealed, was put into writing in the presence of the Holy Prophet. According to a report narrated by Abu Dáood, Tirmazi, and Ahmad, the Caliph 'Usman thus explained the practice as to the writing of the revelations of the Holy Qur-án: "It was customary with the Messenger of God (may peace and the blessings of God be upon him!) that when portions of different chapters were revealed to him, and when any verse was revealed, he called one of those persons who used to write the Holy Qur-án and said to him, 'Write these verses in the chapter where such and such verses occur.'" This report mentions, not what the Holy Prophet did on one occasion, but what he always used to do whenever any verse of the Holy Qur-án was revealed to him. The person who describes this practice of the Holy Prophet is 'Usman, one of the earliest converts to Islam and a son-in-law of the Holy Prophet. Thus we have the clearest testimony that every verse of the Divine revelation was put into writing by the order and in the presence of the Holy Prophet, while additional care was taken by him to point out the place and chapter of a verse when there were two or more unfinished chapters, so that the scribes might not confuse the verses of one chapter with those of another. This evidence is conclusive, and there is absolutely no evidence to the effect that any portion of the Holy Qur-án was left unwritten.

Other reports of the highest authority support the evidence of 'Usman. Thus Bukharee narrates under the heading The Amanuenses of the Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, the following report from Bará: "When the verse lá yastawi-l-qá'idúna . . . (4 : 95) was revealed, the Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said, 'Bring Zaid to me, and let him bring the tablet and the inkstand.' Then he said to him (Zaid), 'Write lá yastawi . . .' (the verse revealed)." In another report narrated by Bukharee under the same heading, Abu Bakr addresses Zaid, the same man who was ordered to write the verse in the above report, in these words: "You used to write the revelation for the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him." Besides Zaid, who, being the official scribe, did by far the greater part of the work of writing the revelations of the Holy Prophet at Medina, many other persons are mentioned who did this work at Mecca, and, in the absence of Zaid, at Medina. Among these are mentioned Abu Bakr, 'Umar, 'Usman, 'Ali, 'Abdulla bin Sa'd bin Abi Sarh (who became an apostate, but embraced Islam again after the conquest of Mecca), Zubair son of 'Awam, Khalid and Aban sons of Sa'íd, Ubayy son of Ka'b, Hanzala son of Rabi', Mu'aiqab son of Abu Fatima, 'Abdulla son of Arqam, Sharhubail son of Hasana, and 'Abdulla son of Rawaha.* But it is not to be supposed that these were the only persons among the companions who could write, or actually transcribed copies of the Holy Qur-án. These were the men who performed the work of amanuenses for the Holy Prophet, and whose names have been preserved to us in reports. Nor is the list given above a complete list of all the amanuenses.

Besides these reports, which directly establish the fact that every verse of the Holy Qur-án was written at the time of its revelation, there are many other anecdotes supporting the same conclusion. For instance, Muslim narrates a report according to which the Holy Prophet said to his companions: "Do not write from me anything except the Qur-án." This direction, which was meant as a precautionary step against the confusion of the Holy Qur-án with what the Holy Prophet spoke on other occasions, also shows clearly that arrangements had been made by him for the writing of the Holy Qur-án. The direction takes it for granted that the Holy Qur-án was written. If it had not been the practice to write every verse and chapter of the Holy Qur-án, no objection would have been taken to the writing of other words uttered by the Holy Prophet. This conclusion is further corroborated by the circumstance that where there was no danger of confusion on the part of the writers, the writing of certain reports was also allowed.*

There is another report mentioned by Ibn-i-Hisham, in the story of the conversion of 'Umar, which shows that written copies of the chapters of the Holy Qur-án were in common use among the early Muslim converts at Mecca. 'Umar, with a drawn sword in his hand, one day left his house with the intention of murdering the Holy Prophet. On the way he learnt that his own sister and brother-in-law were secret converts to Islam. So he turned his steps to his sister's house. "At that time there was in the house a third man, Khabbab son of Art, who had with him a volume in which was written Ṭá Há (the 20th chapter of the Holy Qur-án), which he was teaching to 'Umar's sister and her husband. When they perceived 'Umar coming, Khabbab hid himself in a corner of the house, and Fatima, 'Umar's sister, took the volume and hid it under herself. But 'Umar had already so far approached them that he had heard the voice of Khabbab reciting the Holy Qur-án. So the first question he asked, when he entered the house, was as to what they were reading. They replied, 'You have not heard anything.' He said, 'Yes, I have heard, and I have been informed that you have followed Muhammad in his religion.' Then he caught hold of his brother-in-law, Sai'd, son of Zaid. His sister advanced towards him to protect her husband and was severely hurt in the struggle. Then 'Umar's sister and her husband told him that they were really converts to Islam and that he might do what he liked. When 'Umar saw his sister bleeding, he was sorry for what he had done, and asked her to let him have the book which they were reading, so that he might see what it was that Muhammad had brought to them. 'Umar himself could read and write. On hearing his demand, his sister expressed the fear that he might destroy the volume. 'Umar gave her his word, and swore by his idols that he would return the volume to her after perusing it. Then she told him that, being a Mushrik (one who set up false gods with God), he was impure and could not touch the Qur-án, because there was a verse in it to the effect that none should touch it except the pure. Then 'Umar washed himself, and his sister handed over to him the book which had Ṭá Há written in it. 'Umar read a portion of it, and began to admire it and showed a reverence for the book. Thereupon Khabbab, seeing that he was well disposed towards Islam, asked him to accept Islam." This long quotation, which is a part of the lengthy report of the conversion of 'Umar, shows conclusively that at that early period copies of the Qur-án were commonly used by the believers. It is sometimes argued that such anecdotes only show that some chapters were written, and that therefore there is no evidence that every verse of the Holy Qur-án was reduced to writing. But there is a fallacy in this argument. The statement that the 20th chapter of the Holy Qur-án existed in a written form before the conversion of 'Umar is not made for the purpose of giving any importance to that chapter, or to show that the reporter mentioned it because of its peculiarity. It is made incidentally in a narrative reported with quite a different object, and hence it is only illustrative of the practice of the Holy Prophet and the Muslims at that early date. Even if there were no other evidence of the writing of the Holy Qur-án except this anecdote, still we should be justified in drawing from it the conclusion that the portions of the Holy Qur-án revealed up to that time existed in a written form, and that it was the practice to write the revelation. The 20th chapter did not possess any peculiarity which could have entitled it to be written while the other chapters were only orally recited. On the other hand, it is not one of the chapters which are mentioned as being commonly recited in public prayers, while numerous other chapters, some of them much longer, are so mentioned, and it can be easily seen that written copies of chapters which were commonly recited in prayers must have been in use to a far greater extent. Hence the existence of the 20th chapter in a written form, and the use made of the manuscript in 'Umar's sister's family, shows that similar use was made of this and other chapters among the believers; and that lady's consciousness that the Holy Qur-án forbade the touching of its manuscripts by impure hands affords us the clearest evidence that written copies of every chapter of the Holy Qur-án existed, even at Mecca, at a time when the converts to Islam were very few in number.

The above conclusion is corroborated by another report related by Bukharee. It runs thus: "We were forbidden to travel to the enemy's land with the Qur-án." This report conclusively proves that written copies of the Holy Qur-án existed in such abundance that it was found necessary to issue an order against the taking of such copies to the enemy's country for fear lest they should fall into the hands of men who might spitefully treat them with disrespect. It is thus clear that the Muslims generally had written copies of the Qur-án in their possession.

The circumstances attending the collection of the Holy Qur-án in the time of Abu Bakr also show that every verse of the revelation had been written down in the presence of the Holy Prophet. Thus we read of two verses which, in spite of Zaid's knowledge that they formed part of the Holy Qur-án, were not admitted until a written copy of them was found with one of the companions. This is clear from the words of Zaid, as recorded in Bukharee: "So I searched the Qur-án . . . until I found the last portion of the chapter entitled Immunity with Abu Khuzaima, one of the Anṣár" (see Bukharee, chapter on the Collection of the Qur-án). In explaining the report, part of which has been quoted here, the famous commentator of Bukharee, the author of the Fat-ḥul-Bári, says: "Abu Bakr did not order the writing of anything (i.e. any verse) which was not already written (i.e. in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet), and it was for this reason that Zaid hesitated to write the concluding portion of the chapter Bará'at (Immunity) until he found it written, though it was known to him and to those who are mentioned with him." And a little further on: "And the whole Qur-án was written in manuscripts, but the manuscripts were dispersed, and Abu Bakr collected them in one volume" (Fat-ḥul-Bári, vol. ix. p. 10). Another report by Ibn-i-Abi-Daood is also mentioned, according to which "'Umar publicly announced (when the collection of the Qur-án was taken in hand by Abu Bakr) that whoever possessed any portion of the Qur-án which he had directly received from the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, should bring it; and they used to write these on paper and tablets and palm branches shorn of leaves. Nothing was accepted from anybody until two witnesses bore witness"; to which the author of the Fat-ḥul-Bári adds: "And this shows that Zaid did not deem it sufficient that a verse was written until somebody bore witness who had heard it directly from the Holy Prophet's mouth, though Zaid himself remembered it. This he did for greater precaution." * There is another report mentioned by Zohri which says: "The Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, died while the Qur-án was written upon palm branches shorn of leaves and skins.* After mentioning some of these reports the commentator adds: "And their object was that nothing should be copied except from what had been written in the presence of the Prophet, not from memory only." † All these reports point to the certain conclusion that every verse and chapter of the Holy Qur-án had been written by the direction of the Holy Prophet in his own presence.

I have already given the names of several scribes. There were so many men among the companions who could write that as many as forty-two of these are related to have acted as scribes for the Holy Prophet. We have seen that copies of the different chapters of the Holy Qur-án were in common use among the faithful, a fact clearly borne out by the report of 'Umar's conversion. This shows that there was no paucity of scribes. Besides the Holy Qur-án, many other things were written. Some of the companions used to write the words uttered by the Holy Prophet, which were generally reported only orally.‡ Letters were written by order of the Holy Prophet to several potentates. The truce at Hudaibiyya was written by 'Ali. Correspondence was also kept up with the Jews in Hebrew.§ Not only could men read and write, but even women were taught the art. Among the wives of the Holy Prophet, at least 'Ayesha and Ḥafṣa could read and write, as many reliable reports show.

2. The Qur-án was committed to memory.

With the Arabs memory was the safest of repositories. In fact, they placed so great a reliance upon memory that they took a pride in being called ummis, i.e. men who did not know reading or writing, and for whom, therefore, memory served the purpose of writing. They had all their poems and long genealogies by heart. Being possessors of wonderful memories, every verse of the Qur-án when revealed was not only reduced to writing but was also preserved in memory. We learn from numerous reports that whenever a passage was revealed, it was recited by the Holy Prophet to those who happened to be present at the time, whether friends or foes, and many of his followers committed it to memory at once, others again learning it from those who heard it from the mouth of the Holy Prophet. The importance of the Holy Qur-án for the companions lay not only in the fact that for them it was a code of moral and social laws. It was not sufficient for them to know only its general purport. They believed every word and every letter of it to proceed from no other than the Divine source, and hence every word of it was for them a heavenly treasure they had on earth, so they secured it in the securest of places, viz. their hearts. For its sake they suffered all kinds of persecution and forsook their friends, their relatives, their properties, their homes. Every new verse revealed breathed new life into them. Hence they tried their utmost to keep themselves acquainted with every fresh revelation. Those among them who followed a trade or a profession spent a part of the day in the transaction of their affairs and the rest in the company of the Holy Prophet. Many of them had made special arrangements among themselves to be kept apprised of the new revelations that came to him. The second Caliph, 'Umar, tells us, according to a report of Bukharee, that he and one of his neighbours from among the Anṣár living in

* See Nihaya, by Ibn-ul-Asir, under the root 'asb.

† Fat-ḥul-Bárí, vol. ix. p. 12.

‡ Bukharee tells us in the Kitáb-ul-'Ilm that 'Abdulla, son of 'Amru, used to write reports in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. Some other cases are also mentioned in the same chapter, according to which some reports were reduced to writing.

§ This is mentioned in a report narrated by Abu Dáood under the heading Reports from the Ahl-i-Kitáb.

one of the suburbs of Medina used to go by turns to the Holy Prophet, each of them remaining in his company for a day while the other did his work. "When I went to the Holy Prophet, I returned to bring him the news of that day relating to revelation and other things, and when he went, then he brought me the news" (Bukharee). There were also companions who, after the flight to Medina, had no work to do because of the interruption of their business by their persecutors. They passed their whole time in the mosque, and were ever ready to commit to memory any fresh revelation that the Holy Prophet might announce.

The Holy Prophet himself laid the greatest stress upon the learning, reciting, and teaching of the Holy Qur-án. Muslim relates in his Saḥiḥ a report from 'Aqba bin 'Amir, who said that one day "the Holy Prophet came out and we were in the Ṣuffah (an annexe) of the mosque, and he asked, 'Which of you likes to go every day to Baṭ-ḥau or 'Aqiq and bring two female camels with large humps upon their backs, without doing any wrong to any body or to a relative?' We replied, 'O Messenger of God, we all like it.' He said, 'Does not one of you come in the morning to the mosque, and teach or repeat two verses of the Book of God, which is better for him than two camels?—and three verses are better than three camels, and four verses than four camels: in this way is any number of verses better than the same number of camels.'" Bukharee reports 'Usman as saying that "the Holy Prophet said that 'the best man among you is he who has learnt the Qur-án and teaches it.'" Other reports to the same effect, and adjudged to be trustworthy by both Bukharee and Muslim, run as follows: "'Ayesha says that the Holy Prophet said: 'The skilful in reciting the Qur-án are classed with the scribes, who are honoured and virtuous; and he who reiterates in reciting the Qur-án, on account of his inability to recite it, has a double reward.'" "Ibn-i-'Umar reported that the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said: 'No one is to be envied but two persons—one, a man to whom God has given the Qur-án, and he recites it day and night and acts upon it, and the other a man whom God has given wealth, and he spends it in the way of Allah day and night." "Abu Musa Ash'ari reported the following words from the Holy Prophet: 'The condition of a Muslim who reads the Qur-án is like the fruit of the orange-tree: its taste is agreeable, and so also is its odour; and the condition of a Muslim who does not read the Qur-án is like the date, which has a sweet taste but no odour.'" The last report contrasts the Muslim who acts upon the injunctions of the Holy Qur-án, but does not recite it, with him who both acts upon it and recites it; and thus it shows that it was not simply acting upon the Holy Qur-án on which the Holy Prophet laid stress, but he made its simple recitation equally important. The recitation was needed not only to guard the text of the Holy Qur-án, but also to keep its injunctions fresh in the mind.

Various other reports of undoubted authenticity, showing that the recitation of the Qur-án was an important obligation which rested upon every Muslim, are contained in the collections of reports. Bukharee has a chapter named the Chapter on the istiẕkár of the Qur-án and its ta'áhud, that is, "reciting the Qur-án frequently and recurring to it time after time." In this chapter various reports are narrated enjoining the frequent recitation of the Holy Qur-án. The same renowned and trustworthy collection has another chapter headed The teaching of the Qur-án to children, a third with the heading, The most excellent of men is he who recites and teaches the Qur-án, and a fourth which is headed The reading of the Qur-án from memory. For the sake of brevity, I give simply the headings of the chapters and refrain from quoting the reports narrated by the learned collector to prove the various assertions contained in them. These headings are sufficient to show that committing the Qur-án to memory was enjoined by the Holy Prophet upon all his followers, and it was considered by the companions to be a duty fraught with great religious merit. Hence it was necessary that every one of them should commit to memory at least some parts of the Holy Book. Though even now there are thousands of men in every Muslim country who can repeat the whole of the Qur-án from memory, the peculiar conditions existing in Arabia facilitated the task to a far greater extent. This is admitted even by a hostile critic: "Passionately fond of poetry, but without the ready means for committing to writing the effusions of their bards, the Arabs had long been used to imprint these, as well as the traditions of genealogical and tribal events, on the living tablets of the heart. The recollective faculty was thus cultivated to the highest pitch; and it was applied, with all the ardour of an awakened spirit, to the Qur-án" (Muir).

It appears from the above reports that the Holy Prophet desired that his companions should try to excel each other in their knowledge of the Holy Qur-an. There were other reasons which made the companions vie one with another in committing the Holy Book to memory. The office of imámat, or leading of public prayers, was as a rule bestowed upon the man who had the greater knowledge of the Holy Qur-án. All authentic reports establish this point. One report tells us that in a certain tribe a boy eight years old used to lead the prayers because he knew a greater portion of the Holy Qur-án than any other member of that tribe. This boy, 'Amru bin Salma, thus relates his own story: "We [i.e. the tribe to which the narrator belonged] had alighted in a place by water, and people who went to the Holy Prophet passed by us. When they returned they used to repeat to us the revelations which they heard from the Holy Prophet. I had a good memory, and so while there I committed to memory a great portion of the Holy Qur-án from these visitors. After a time my father also went to the Holy Prophet with some people of his tribe to declare their acceptance of Islam. The Holy Prophet taught them the prayers, and told them that the prayers should be led by a person who knew more of the Qur-án than others. On account of what I had already committed to memory, I satisfied this condition. So they made me their imám." These people were among the later converts to Islam. Bukharee also tells us that the office of imámat was conferred upon deserving persons irrespective of their nationality or position in society. The distinction of having the office of imámat (the leading of public prayers) conferred on one was a practical incentive to a greater knowledge of the Qur-án. Similarly, when a new tribe accepted Islam, the man who was chosen to be sent to them to teach them the doctrines and principles of the new faith was one who was most acquainted with the Qur-án. And these were not the only ways in which the reciters of the Qur-án were honoured in those early days, for there are many reports which show that the reciters of the Qur-án were highly honoured and respected in every way among the companions.

These were the reasons which led a great number of the companions of the Holy Prophet to engrave the words of the Qur-án on the tablets of their hearts. The Holy Prophet himself set an example in frequently reciting the Holy Qur-án in public as well as in private. It was not only in prayers that long portions of the Holy Book were recited. We have on record instances showing that he recited certain chapters when travelling on the back of a camel,* and that he loved to hear others recite the Holy Word. According to one report he kept awake on a certain night to listen to a person who was reciting the Qur-án in the mosque (Bukharee, chapter on the "Forgetting of the Qur-án"). Another report, also related by Bukharee, represents 'Abdulla as saying: "The Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said to me, 'Recite to me the Qur-án.' I replied, 'What! should I recite to you, and to you it has been revealed?' He said, 'I love to hear others recite it.' Thereupon I began to recite the chapter entitled Women."

These anecdotes show that the Holy Prophet induced his companions by his own example to recite the Holy Qur-án. These inducements were not without their effect. The Muslims treasured up the Word of God in their hearts, and its reading and teaching became very common. So common, indeed, had the recitation of the Qur-án become, that when the Holy Prophet spoke of the disappearance of the knowledge of the Qur-án at some future time, Ziyad, son of Labid, one of the companions, at once cried out: "How would knowledge disappear, O Messenger of God, when we read the Qur-án and teach it to our children, and our children will teach it to their children, so on till the judgment day?" This question arose out of a misapprehension of the words of the Holy Prophet, who meant, not that the words of the Holy Qur-án would disappear, but that people would not act in accordance with the spirit of those words.

There are also reports which show that the injunction of the Holy Prophet relating to the committing of the Holy Qur-án to memory and its frequent recitation were so literally carried out by the companions that he himself had to give them directions against a course which might be a burden to them. In a report recorded in Bukharee (chapter headed, In how many days should the Qur-án be read?) it is stated that one of the companions of the Holy Prophet, who finished the recitation of the whole of the Qur-án once every night, was expressly enjoined by him to finish it at the least in three or five or seven days, and was forbidden to go through the whole once every night. This shows clearly that there were companions who could recite the whole of the Qur-án in a single night. The direction given by the Holy Prophet that the recitation of the Holy Qur-án should not be finished in less than three days was meant to inform them that it should be read thoughtfully. Similarly, in a report received through a different chain of reporters, the same companion, 'Abdulla, son of 'Amru, is represented as asking the Holy Prophet how much time he should take to finish one reading of the Qur-án. The Prophet told him that he should finish it in thirty days. He replied that he could do it sooner, whereupon the Holy Prophet lessened the time by five days. Thus he continued to express his ability to finish the Qur-án sooner, and the Holy Prophet went on lessening the limit every time by a few days, till he reached the number five (according to another report, three) (Darimi). Ibn-i-Mas'ud relates that the Holy Prophet said: "Read the Qur-án in seven days, and do not read it in less than three days." According to another report, 'Ayesha said that "the Holy Prophet did not usually finish the Qur-án in less than three days" (see Fat-hul-Bári, vol. ix. p. 53). All these reports show clearly that the companions vied one with one another in the frequent recitation of the Qur-án, and that many of them could recite the whole in a single day. In fact, so frequently was the recitation of the Holy Qur-án resorted to, that injunctions became necessary to stop a too rapid recitation. It is also clear from these reports that the whole of the Qur-án was committed to memory by many of the companions, otherwise it could not be spoken of as being finished in a stated interval of time. That it was recited from memory is clear from the fact that it was recited at night.

These conclusions are further supported by many trustworthy reports, which show that there were numerous men among the companions who could recite the Holy Qur-án from memory. These men were called the qurrá, or the reciters, and they were known to have committed the Qur-án to memory. The author of the Fat-ḥul-Bári explains the word qurrá as meaning "persons noted for committing the Qur-án to memory and for teaching it to others." Of course, the word also signified persons having a sound knowledge of the Qur-án. Seventy of the qurrá were treacherously put to death at the Bi'r Ma'únah by a tribe of unbelievers. This fact is attested by the most trustworthy and authentic reports related by Bukharee and other reliable collectors. The fact that such a large number of them was murdered in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet shows that there were hundreds of them among the companions. In the chapter headed, The Qurrá from among the Companions of the Holy Prophet, Bukharee relates several anecdotes. In the first of these 'Abdulla, son of 'Amru (who, as we have already seen, had committed the whole of the Qur-án to memory), is reported to have said, when speaking of 'Abdulla, son of Mas'ud: "I shall ever love him, for I heard the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, say, 'Learn the Qur-án from four men, from 'Abdulla, son of Mas'ud, Salim, Mu'áz, and Ubayy, son of Ka'b.'" This, of course, did not imply inability on the part of the other companions to teach the Holy Qur-án, nor did the words mean that none of the companions besides these four retained the whole of the Qur-án in their memory. In fact, to be a good teacher of the Holy Qur-án, it was not sufficient that a person should be able to recite the Holy Book from memory. It was absolutely necessary that he should have a good understanding and a sound knowledge of the Holy Qur-án. The report only shows that the four men named could teach any and every chapter of the Holy Qur-án, and hence they themselves also knew the whole of it. Probably they were named because they always tried to learn the revelations directly from the Holy Prophet. One of them, 'Abdulla, son of Mas'ud, it is reported, used to say that he received over seventy chapters of the Holy Qur-án directly from the mouth of the Holy Prophet. It was probably on account of some such peculiarity that the Holy Prophet named four men only, for other reports tell us that there were many other companions who could recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory.

To take an example, Abu Bakr is not named in the above report, but it is a fact that he retained the whole of the Qur-án in his memory. It was Abu Bakr whom the Holy Prophet appointed on his death-bed to lead the public prayers. Authentic reports, as already stated, show that the person appointed to lead the prayers was always one who knew more of the Qur-án than his congregation. In cases where several persons had equal knowledge, as, for instance, when they all knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart, other tests were applied. Now, it is certain that there were men among the companions who could recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory. Therefore Abu Bakr could not be appointed to lead the prayers if his knowledge of the Qur-án were not as extensive. Hence it follows that Abu Bakr also could recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory. There are many other indications, such as the building of a mosque in the yard of his house, in which he recited the Holy Qur-án every day, his being in daily converse with the Holy Prophet, etc., all of which assist in showing that Abu Bakr knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart. Similarly 'Abdulla, son of 'Umar, retained the whole of the Qur-án in his memory, finishing its recital every night, whereupon the Holy Prophet, learning this fact, told him to finish the recital once in a month. In fact, many persons are mentioned as being able to recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, among these being the four Caliphs, viz. Abu Bakr, 'Umar, 'Usman, and 'Ali, and such renowned companions as Ṭalḥa, Sa'd, Ibn-i-Mas'úd, Salim, Abu Huraira, etc., while three women, viz. 'Ayesha, Hafsa, and Umm-i-Salma, are also named in the same category. Several other persons are also named from among the Anṣár as being able to recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory. But it is not to be supposed that only those persons were the reciters whose names have been preserved to us in reports. Seventy of them were killed by treachery in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and about the same number fell in the battle of Yemamah, which was fought a few months after his death. Among these was also Salim, whose name is clearly mentioned among those who could recite the whole of the Qur-án; yet when 'Umar made a representation to Abu Bakr for the collection of the Qur-án, he did not particularly name Salim, but only said that death had taken away many of the qurrá (reciters) in the field of Yemamah. Had there been none among the slain except Salim who could recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory, 'Umar would not have spoken of the reciters generally.

There is only one report the evidence of which is considered to be conflicting with that furnished by all the reports cited above. This report, which is narrated by Bukharee, runs as follows: "Anas reported that the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, died while none had collected the Qur-án with the exception of four men, Abu Darda and Mu'az, son of Jabal, and Zaid, son of Sábit, and Abú Zaid." In a report to the same effect narrated by the same authority, the name of Ubayy, son of Ka'b, is mentioned in the place of Abu Darda. This report apparently contradicts many other reports, if the "collecting" of the Qur-án is taken to be equivalent to the committing of the whole of the Qur-án to memory and no limitation is placed upon the meaning. The word Jam'a, which means collecting, is generally applied in the reports with reference to the Holy Qur-án in the sense of collecting different manuscripts into a single volume, but it may also mean the retaining of the whole of it in memory. Taking the word in its ordinary significance, viz. collecting the different written chapters into a single volume, the report does not negative the existence of any number of reciters who had memorized the whole of the Qur-án. There is no difficulty in accepting this interpretation, except that when steps were taken for the collection of the Qur-án in the Caliphate of Abu Bakr, no collection prepared in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet was brought forward to facilitate the heavy task before Zaid, who was chosen for collecting the scattered manuscripts of the Holy Qur-án into one volume. But the fact is that Zaid sought the manuscripts that were written in the presence and by the direction of the Holy Prophet, and thus the objection vanishes. But even if the "collection of the Qur-án" in the report under discussion is taken to mean the recitation of the entire Qur-án from memory, there is no difficulty. The meaning is made clear by another report, which gives the circumstances under which these words were spoken by Anas. There were two rival tribes at Medina, the Khazraj and the Aus, and Anas belonged to the former. Before the advent of Islam their relations were hostile, but on their conversion to Islam they both became one. Still, the old feelings of rivalry were sometimes stirred up, and it is to one such occasion that the report relates. The Aus prided themselves on the possession of certain members, four in number, who had earned a good fame. As against this the Khazraj named four of their men who had collected the Holy Qur-án, or who could recite the whole of it from memory. Accordingly, the claim was made only against the single tribe of Aus. This conclusion is corroborated by the fact that the four men named all belong to the tribe of Khazraj, and the exclusion of such famous men as 'Abdulla, son of Mas'ud, Salim, and others from among the refugees, shows clearly that the claim was advanced only for one tribe as against a rival tribe.

Even if we admit, for the sake of argument, the existence of certain differences in the various reports quoted above, the one conclusion upon which they all agree is absolutely certain, viz. that among the companions of the Holy Prophet there were certain persons, whether their number amounted only to four or to more than that, who retained in memory the whole of the Qur-án as taught by the Holy Prophet, and who at his death had the whole of it engraved on the tablets of their hearts. Thus while every companion committed to memory a certain portion of the Holy Qur-án, certain companions committed to memory the whole of it. The entire Qur-án was, therefore, not only guarded by the comparatively few men who could recite the whole of it from memory, but the whole body of the companions had the whole of it safe in their memories by every one having memorized a certain portion. All this was done in obedience to the injunctions of the Holy Prophet, who laid great stress upon the reciting of the Qur-án and the committing of it to memory. And these measures to guard the text of the Holy Qur-án were in addition to writing. It may also be pointed out here that the gradual revelation of the Qur-án afforded great facility in committing it to memory. The interval between the revelation of two verses or two chapters afforded the companions an opportunity to repeat it as often as they liked. The entire Qur-án was revealed in the long period of twenty-three years, and if Muslim boys of the age of ten or twelve years can even now commit the whole Qur-án to memory within one or two years, the Arab possessors of wonderfully retentive memories, to whom the importance of the Qur-án was far greater than to any Muslim of a later age, could not find it difficult to memorize it within the long period of twenty-three years, especially when it was given to them gradually.

The recitation of the Qur-án and its committal to memory were not, however, only optional, for the Qur-án formed a part of public as well as private prayers. Five times a day had the Muslims to pray publicly, while prayers in the latter portion of the night were of a private nature. The recitation of portions of the Holy Qur-án in all these prayers was obligatory, and thus every Muslim had of necessity to repeat certain portions of it every day. Now, it is an established fact that generally very long portions were recited in the prayers, especially in those said during the latter part of the night. The Holy Prophet is himself related to have often recited the long chapters in the beginning of the Qur-án in the latter part of the night, i.e. in the tahajjud prayers. His companions also followed his example. Thus one companion is said, in an anecdote left of him, to have recited in his tahajjud prayers the chapter entitled the Cow, which forms a twelfth part of the Qur-án. Even in the public prayers long chapters were recited. There are many reports from which it appears that such long chapters as the Cow were read in a single rak'at in the morning prayers. The evening prayers are the least suited for the recitation of the longer chapters, but even in these the Holy Prophet recited such chapters as the Túr, or the Mountain, which contains nearly fifty verses. In imitation of the Holy Prophet, his followers, whenever they had occasion to lead the prayers, recited very long chapters. One of them recited the second chapter, i.e. the Cow, in prayer at the nightfall, and a complaint was made against him by one who, tired by a whole day's labour, wanted to go to rest sooner. In their private prayers also the companions recited long chapters. Thus not only was it necessary that every one of them should commit the whole or a certain portion of the Holy Qur-án to memory, but the part so committed was always kept fresh in the mind by constant recitation in prayers, though, as we have already seen, the Qur-án was frequently recited by the companions even outside prayers. Therefore, even if the Holy Qur-án had never been written, no verse of it could have been lost, so great was the publicity which every verse of it received, and so often was it recited by the Holy Prophet and his companions in public as well as in private. One report relates how a certain chapter was learned by heart by a companion from its frequent recitation in the prayers. In fact, if there had been no other means of giving publicity to the Qur-án, its mere recitation in prayers was sufficient to give it such a publication as would have guarded it against any possible alteration or loss.

3. Arrangement of verses and chapters.

It has already been shown that the Holy Qur-án was both written and committed to memory in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. We also know that the Qur-án was revealed piecemeal during a long period, extending over twenty-three years. Some of the chapters were revealed in complete form, but the revelation of many others was fragmentary and extended over long periods. It not infrequently happened that while one chapter was still unfinished a new chapter was revealed, and sometimes verses belonging to more than two unfinished chapters were revealed at one and the same time. Now, the arrangement of chapters and verses in the copies of the Holy Qur-án at present in the hands of the Muslims does not follow the order of revelation. The important question before us now, therefore, is whether the Holy Prophet himself arranged the verses and chapters in an order different from that of their revelation, and, if so, whether the present arrangement of the verses and chapters is the same as that which prevailed in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. In other words, was the Holy Qur-án left by the Holy Prophet in the same condition, as regards the arrangement of its verses and chapters, as that in which we now find it, or is its present condition different from that in which the Holy Prophet left it?

Intrinsic and extrinsic evidence both conclusively show that the present arrangement of the chapters and verses of the Holy Qur-án was effected by the Holy Prophet under the guidance of Divine revelation. For intrinsic evidence on this point I would refer the reader to the introductory notes on the various chapters and to the abstracts of the various sections. The different verses in different chapters, and the chapters themselves, are so well arranged that no better arrangement is conceivable. It is only ignorance of the Holy Qur-án and Arabic idiom which has made some critics remark that there is no connection between certain verses or that there are some chasms. A deep reflection over the Holy Book reveals a close connection between verses which are considered by hasty writers to be disconnected. Apart from intrinsic evidence, there is sufficient extrinsic evidence to prove that the present arrangement of the verses and chapters of the Holy Qur-án is not the work of Abu Bakr or Zaid, but that of the Holy Prophet himself, who did it under the guidance of Divine revelation. Such evidence is not only met with abundantly in reports, but it is also contained in the Holy Qur-án. Thus in 75 : 17, 18 we have: "Surely on Us (devolves) the collecting of it and the reciting of it. Therefore, when We have recited it, follow its recitation." These verses clearly show that the collection of the Qur-án, that is, its gathering into one whole, with an arrangement of its various parts, was brought about by the guidance of Divine revelation. Arrangement and collection were, according to this verse, as much the work of Divine revelation as the reading of a verse to the Holy Prophet, i.e. its revelation. The Qur-án itself, therefore, asserts not only that it is the Word of God, but that its collection and arrangement were also brought about by Divine revelation. It should be borne in mind that the word Jam'a in the above verse implies both collection and arrangement, since no collection could be brought about without an arrangement. Now, the verse shows that this arrangement was different from the order of the revelation of the verses. It describes arrangement and collection as a process different from the revelation of a verse to the Holy Prophet, thus showing that from the first it was meant that the verses and the chapters of the Holy Qur-án should be arranged in an order different from that of their revelation. If the order in collection were to be the same as the order of the reading of the different verses to the Holy Prophet, i.e. the order of their revelation, collection and reading would not have been described as two different things in the verse quoted above.

History bears ample testimony to the truth of the above assertion made in the Holy Qur-án, and we meet with the clearest proof in authentic and reliable reports that the Holy Prophet left at his death the complete Qur-án with the same arrangement of the verses and the chapters that we have now in every Arabic Qur-án. We will consider the arrangement of verses and that of chapters separately, and in each inquiry we shall have to discuss the following points :—

1. Was any arrangement followed by the Prophet himself and by his companions in his lifetime?

2. Was that arrangement different from the order in which the verses or the chapters were revealed?

3. Does the present arrangement differ from that followed by, or which existed in the lifetime of, the Holy Prophet?

That such a large book, treating of so many and such varied subjects, should have been committed to memory and regularly recited in and outside prayers, and taught by one man to another, without there being any settled arrangement of its parts, is a most preposterous proposition, but there is hardly a Christian critic of Islam who has not advanced it. The grounds for this assertion are the same in every case. Not the least regard is paid to historical evidence, and mere supposition that no arrangement is discoverable in the verses and chapters is at present the only basis on which the proposition rests. Even Muir, who sat down to write his Life of Muhammad on a strong historical basis, has in this respect followed the earlier Christian critics, closing his eyes to the whole historical evidence. The following short paragraph from Muir's introduction is not only illustrative of the assertions of Christian critics in general, but it also shows how the author himself has evaded the historical evidence. He says :—

"We are not, however, to assume that the entire Qur-án was at this period repeated in any fixed order. The present compilation, indeed, is held by the Muslims to follow the arrangement prescribed by Muhammad ; *and early tradition might appear to imply some known sequence. But this cannot be admitted ; for had any fixed order been observed or sanctioned by the Prophet, it would unquestionably have been preserved in the subsequent collection. Now the Qur-án, as handed down to our time, follows in the disposition of its several parts no intelligible arrangement whatever, either of subject or time ; and it is inconceivable that Muhammad should have enjoined its recital invariably in this order. We must even doubt whether the number of suras, or chapters, was determined by Muhammad as we now have them. The internal sequence at any rate of the contents of the several suras cannot, in most cases, have been that intended by the Prophet."

Some of the foot-notes given under this paragraph show the struggle in the writer's mind between historical facts and religious prejudice. Thus, while denying the existence of any fixed order in the Qur-án in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, Muir had to admit that "we read of certain companions who could repeat the whole Qur-án in a given time, which might be held to imply some usual connection of the parts." In another foot-note it is admitted that there were four or five persons who could repeat "with scrupulous accuracy" the whole of the Qur-án, and "several others who could very nearly repeat the whole, before Muhammad's death." Again, while denying that even the number of suras was determined by the Holy Prophet, for fear of being contradicted he cautiously adds the following foot-note:—

"But there is reason to believe that the chief suras, including all passages in most common use, were fixed and known by name or other distinctive mark. Some are spoken of, in early and well authenticated traditions, as having been so referred to by Muhammad himself. Thus he recalled his fugitive followers at the discomfiture of Honein by shouting to them as 'the men of the sura Baqr' (i.e. Sura ii.).

"Several persons are stated by tradition to have learnt by heart a certain number of suras in Muhammad's lifetime. Thus 'Abdulla bin Mas'ud learned seventy suras from the Prophet's own mouth, and Muhammad on his death-bed repeated seventy suras, 'among which were the seven long ones.' These traditions signify a recognized division of at least some part of the revelation into suras, if not a usual order in repeating the suras themselves.

"The liturgical use of the suras by Muhammad must, no doubt, have in some measure fixed their form, and probably also their sequence."

In connection with the same subject it is said in another foot-note that "the traditions just cited as to the number of suras which some of the companions could repeat, and which Muhammad himself repeated on his death-bed, also imply the existence of such suras in a complete and finished form."

In this manner, almost every remark made in the paragraph quoted above is contradicted in the foot-notes on the basis of historical facts met with in authentic reports. And though the statements in the foot-notes are made reservedly, yet the contradictions are too clear to escape unnoticed by any careful reader, and the struggle in the writer's mind can be easily discerned. In the text it is asserted that there was no fixed order or arrangement in the verses and chapters of the Holy Qur-án, and historical evidence is produced in the foot-notes showing that there was a connection. The text makes the allegation that even the suras were not distinctly marked out by the Holy Prophet and their number was not determined by him, and the foot-note brings forward historical testimony to the effect that there was a recognized division and that the form of the chapters was no doubt fixed. The reservations contained in such expressions as "some part" and "some measure" were only natural, considering the allegations in the text. It can be easily seen that if "seventy suras, including the seven long ones," existed "in a complete and finished form," as the foot-note admits—and there is no evidence showing that the remaining forty-four short suras, which were, no doubt, generally recited in prayers, did not exist in the same form—the presumption will be that all the suras existed "in a complete and finished form." This conclusion becomes clearer still when it is borne in mind that the same writer has also admitted that there were several companions who could repeat, not only seventy suras, but the whole Qur-án, and that too "with scrupulous accuracy."

The assertion that no arrangement was followed in the case of single verses revealed at different times is so absurd on the very face of it that it hardly requires a refutation. How was it possible for anybody to commit the Holy Qur-án to memory if there was no settled order in which the verses were read? What order did the different copies follow? Or was it that each copy of the Holy Qur-án current at the time followed a different order? And every man who knew any portion of the Holy Qur-án—and every one of the companions knew some portion—followed a different arrangement! Does any evidence support these assertions? And what order did the reciters of the Holy Qur-án follow? Or did each reciter follow a different order? What, again, was the order of the verses followed by those who led the public prayers? Is it conceivable that a book which was so widely committed to memory, and which was so frequently recited by thousands of men, existed in such an orderless state?

If there were no other evidence to show that the verses in the different chapters of the Holy Qur-án followed some arrangement, the mere fact that the Holy Book was committed to memory by the companions would be sufficient to establish that conclusion. There are many chapters containing more than a hundred verses each, and unless these were arranged in a settled order, no one could be said to have committed to memory the whole of any chapter. Take the different permutations of only a hundred verses, and you will see that no two out of a hundred thousand men could have agreed upon one arrangement. In such a case there would have been not one Qur-án, which the companions could learn from each other, but everybody would have his own Qur-án, and no one would be certain of the correctness of what his brother recited. Moreover, we learn from authentic reports that when any person, while reciting a portion of the Holy Qur-án from memory, made a mistake or left out a verse, some one of those who listened to him corrected the mistake or pointed out the particular verse. Now, this could not be done unless the same arrangement of verses was followed by all. In fact, it was simply impossible to commit thousands of verses to memory unless there was some arrangement to be followed.

Considerations such as the above clearly show that some arrangement of verses was necessarily followed. Was it the order of revelation? There is clear historical evidence that the Holy Prophet arranged the verses, not according to their chronological order, but according to matter. There were no doubt many chapters that were revealed complete, but there were others, particularly the longer ones, that were revealed by portions. Chronologically, verses of one chapter were followed by those of another, and hence in the arrangement of verses in chapters the chronological order could not be observed. The practice of the Holy Prophet in such cases is clearly stated in authentic reports. As 'Usman tells us, in a report already quoted, "It was customary with the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, when portions of different chapters were revealed to him, that when any verse was revealed he called one of the amanuenses and said to him, 'Write these verses in the chapter where such and such verses occur.'" From this it appears that the place and chapter for every verse were pointed out by the Holy Prophet himself. With such obviously conclusive testimony before him, no sensible person would deny that the work of the arrangement of the verses in every chapter was done by the Holy Prophet himself, and, as the Holy Qur-án tells us, it was done under the guidance of Divine revelation, and the arrangement did not follow the chronological order of the revelation of verses.

If the arrangement of verses was different from the order of their revelation, the next question that arises is, was that arrangement different from the one upon which the whole Muslim world is now agreed? We must answer this question in the negative. The arrangement of the verses in the Qur-án we have in our hands is not in accordance with the order of revelation, and hence, if there is no trace in the history of the Qur-án of any change having been brought about in the arrangement of its verses at any time, the conclusion that the present arrangement is exactly the same as that followed by the Holy Prophet will be absolutely certain and final. Now, it is admitted on all hands, and the truth of the fact has not been questioned by the most hostile critic of Islam, that there has not been the slightest change in any word or letter of the Qur-án or in the arrangement of its verses or chapters since the time of 'Usman, the third of the Muslim Caliphs. Our copies of the Qur-án are admittedly exact copies, true and authentic in every way, of the collection made by 'Usman, and hence, to prove that the arrangement of verses and chapters at present is the same as that followed by the Holy Prophet, we have only to show that the collection made by 'Usman followed the original arrangement. It can easily be seen that at the time of his making the collection 'Usman had no motive for changing the fixed arrangement which up to that time was followed by the companions of the Holy Prophet. That an arrangement different from the order of revelation was followed by the Holy Prophet, and that the same arrangement was followed by the companions in the learning and teaching of the Holy Qur-án, has already been shown. That that arrangement was changed by 'Usman is for him to show who makes the assertion. When 'Usman began to make his collection, or, more correctly, when he began to make copies of the Qur-án from Abu Bakr's collection, thousands of the companions of the Holy Prophet were still living, and no change in the arrangement of verses could have remained unnoticed. Moreover, the task of making the required copies was not in the charge of 'Usman personally, but in that of several of the most well-known companions, reputed for their knowledge of the Qur-án, and none of these can be shown to have had any motive for altering the arrangement of verses existing at the time. Nor is there the slightest trace in the historical record of the time that the arrangement was altered. No charge has ever been preferred against 'Usman by any sect of Islam or any individual that he had changed the arrangement of the verses in the chapters of the Holy Qur-án. In fact, the only charge against him is that he disallowed certain readings, and the nature of this charge I will describe later on. But of any alteration in the arrangement of verses there is absolutely no mention whatever in any report, authentic or unauthentic.

Besides the negative proof cited above, which conclusively shows that at no time in the history of the Qur-án was the arrangement of its verses altered in the slightest degree, there is positive evidence leading to the same conclusion. This evidence may be gathered from incidental remarks made in certain authentic reports. Under the heading, The Excellence of the chapter entitled Al-Baqarah, Bukharee relates the following: "The Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said, 'Whoever reads the last two verses of the chapter entitled Baqarah on any night, they are sufficient for him." This saying, which reports the exact words of the Holy Prophet, shows two things. Firstly, that the Holy Prophet himself followed an arrangement which he had made known to his companions, and they all followed the same arrangement; for if such had not been the case, he could not have referred to two verses as the last two verses of a certain chapter. The report unmistakably proves that every verse had a known and fixed place in a chapter which no reciter of the Qur-án could change. In the second place, it shows that the verses with which the chapter entitled the Cow now ends were also the concluding verses of that chapter in the time of the Holy Prophet, and therefore the arrangement in the copies of the Qur-án at present is the same as that followed by the Holy Prophet. In support of this, there is another report in which the concluding verses of the chapter entitled the Cow are identified with the 285th and 286th verses of that chapter as enumerated in the present translation (Fat-ḥul-Bári). According to another authentic report, the Holy Prophet told his followers to recite the "first ten verses" of the chapter entitled the Cave at the appearance of the Antichrist. Had there been no arrangement of verses, the "first ten verses" would have been a meaningless phrase, because it would not have indicated any particular ten verses. This report occurs in the Ṣaḥiḥ Muslim. The first ten verses as in our copies of the Qur-án are plainly the verses meant, as in these verses the doctrine of the sonship of Jesus, a doctrine identified with the teaching of the Antichrist by the Holy Qur-án, is refuted in forcible words. This report also shows that the arrangement of verses in the time of the Holy Prophet was the same as it is now.

In no report is any arrangement of verses other than the one which exists in the current copies of the Holy Qur-án hinted at. Had the Holy Prophet left the Qur-án in an unarranged form, different arrangements of verses would no doubt have been followed by different companions, and in the great mass of reports there would have been references to some of these arrangements. But the absence of any such reference conclusively proves that there was only one arrangement of verses, which was followed by all the companions, and that arrangement was the same as we have now in our copies of the Qur-án, because there is no reference at all to any change having been introduced at any time. There is only one report which speaks of 'Ali having made a collection of the Qur-án in the order of its revelation, but this, if true, only supports the conclusion we have already arrived at as to the present arrangement being the one in existence at the time of the Holy Prophet. The fact, if true, is mentioned only on account of the peculiarity of the arrangement, and by reason of its distinction from the recognized and accepted arrangement. Had there been a third arrangement besides these two, we should also have had a reference to it. The order of revelation, as we have seen, was not followed by the Holy Prophet, for his arrangement was according to subject-matter and not according to chronology. 'Ali might have thought of preserving the order of revelation for historical purposes. In the time of 'Usman, when copies of the Qur-án were made for distribution, 'Ali was one of the companions who superintended the copying, and there is no doubt that if he had looked upon the present arrangement as inaccurate, he would have either objected to it or refused to co-operate in such an arrangement. But, along with the whole body of the companions, 'Ali followed an arrangement different from the order of the revelation, though he might also have preserved the chronological order. Had he considered the latter arrangement to be the authentic arrangement, he would no doubt have given currency to it during his Caliphate. But neither in the time of the first three Caliphs nor in his own reign did he ever, privately or publicly, make a statement that the arrangement of verses and chapters in the current copies of the Holy Qur-án was not followed by the Holy Prophet, and that it ought to be superseded by a chronological arrangement. These considerations clearly show that the arrangement of verses in the copies made by 'Usman was recognized by all the companions without a single exception to be the arrangement followed by the Holy Prophet. Had it not been so, there would have been many differences among them as to arrangement. But as a matter of fact, even Ibn-i-Mas'ud, who otherwise expressed his dissatisfaction with the action of 'Usman in having disallowed certain readings which he favoured, never raised any objection to the arrangement of the verses in the copies made by the order of the Caliph, nor did Ibn-i-Mas'ud ever propose a different arrangement.

The above considerations prove conclusively that the division of the Holy Qur-án into chapters and the arrangement of verses in each chapter were both performed under the directions of the Holy Prophet. When a new verse was revealed, a place was assigned to it by the Holy Prophet, and no companion could assign it a place at his own choice. The greater part of the chapter entitled Al-Baqarah, for instance, was revealed during the early days of the Holy Prophet at Medina, but some verses belonging to it were revealed later. Such were the verses relating to the prohibition of usury, as some reports show. The place assigned to these verses is immediately after the verses which speak of alms. The reason for this arrangement is that both injunctions, viz. the injunction relating to the giving of alms and the injunction relating to the prohibition of usury, were meant for the benefit of the poor, and these were two steps in the same direction, that is, the amelioration of the poor. The state of the society whose reform the Holy Qur-án had in view was such that the two injunctions could not be given together. It was necessary that the people to whom the injunction relating to the prohibition of usury was to be given should be first prepared to accept that teaching. Hence the two injunctions were revealed at different periods, but the subjects of which they treated were so closely related that in an arrangement of verses they had to be placed side by side. The division into chapters was marked by the Holy Prophet himself, and we find the names of most of the chapters expressly mentioned in authentic reports. In fact, the division of the Holy Qur-án into chapters, and the arrangement of verses in these chapters, by the Holy Prophet, are such clear facts that there is no indication that a difference of opinion ever existed on these points, either among the companions or the later Muslims. No one can be shown to have ever asserted that a certain verse in a certain chapter in the collection in our hands belonged to a different chapter, or that a verse occupying a certain position occupied a different position at any time. In many reports references to verses are contained in numbers, and this shows clearly that the arrangement of verses was complete in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. To add another example to those already given, there is a report which narrates that Ibn-i-Mas'ud recited forty verses of the chapter entitled Al-Anfál in a certain prayer. This is narrated in the Saḥiḥ Bukháree. Another reporter, 'Abdul Razzaq, has mentioned the same report through a different chain of narrators, with this difference, that instead of mentioning the reciting of forty verses of the chapter, the narrator only says that he recited up to the verse which ends with such and such words (Fat-ḥul-Bári, vol. ii. p. 212). Now, if we compute forty verses from the beginning, as mentioned by the first narrator, we find them ending with the words mentioned by the second narrator. From this it is clear that the present arrangement of verses was well known in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. According to another report narrated by Bukharee, the Holy Prophet used to recite, when he would wake for his tahajjud prayers, the last ten verses of the chapter entitled Ál-i-'Imrán, and in imitation of him the Muslims still recite the same ten verses. This fact also proves that the same arrangement of verses was followed during the lifetime of the Holy Prophet that is followed now, and that the division of the Holy Qur-án into chapters was distinctly marked at the time.

The next question that we have to consider is the arrangement of chapters. In the discussion of this question it may be stated at the very outset that any arrangement in the recital of chapters in or apart from prayers was regarded as unnecessary, except when the whole of the Qur-án was to be recited. As we have seen in reports already quoted, there were men among the companions who knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart, and to keep it fresh in their memory they used to recite the whole within a stated time. Indeed, Bukharee has a chapter with the heading, In how much time should the recital of the Qur-án be finished? Under this heading, as already stated, reports are mentioned according to which the Holy Prophet forbade one of his companions to finish the recital of the Qur-án in less than three days, and forbade another to finish it in less than seven days. These reports show the practice of the companions of the Holy Prophet. Those among them who knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart used to repeat it constantly, and finished the recitation of the whole ordinarily in seven days. Indeed, it would not have been possible to retain such a large book in memory except by its constant recital and repetition. The Holy Prophet himself had told them that they should constantly resort to a recital of the Holy Qur-án, and that otherwise it could not be retained in memory. Hence they constantly resorted to its recital. Now, to finish the Qur-án within a stated time and to recur to it again and again, it was necessary that some arrangement of chapters should have been observed. Ahmad and Abu Daood and others have narrated the following report which shows that the arrangement of chapters was also effected by the Holy Prophet. Anas says: "I was in the Saqif embassy at the time of the Bani Saqif's conversion to Islam. . . . The Holy Prophet said to us, 'My portion of the Holy Qur-án has come to me unexpectedly, so I do not intend to go out until I finish it.' Thereupon we questioned the companions of the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, as to how they divided the Qur-án into portions. They said: 'We observe the following division into portions, three chapters and five chapters, and seven chapters and nine chapters, and eleven chapters and thirteen chapters, and all the remaining chapters beginning with Qáf, which are termed the mufassal.'" There is good reason to believe the authenticity of this report. It divides the Holy Qur-án into seven portions, each portion to be recited in one day, and the recital of the whole Qur-án is thus finished in seven days. From other trustworthy reports we learn that the Holy Prophet had enjoined some of his companions not to finish the Holy Qur-án in less than seven days; and the two reports, communicated through entirely different channels, corroborating as they do the testimony of each other, testify to each other's truth and authenticity. Moreover, they are both accepted by eminent collectors of reports. Hence we have no reason to doubt the truth of the reports. Now, the report quoted above shows clearly an arrangement of chapters, for the division into portions mentioned in this report is observed to this day by the whole Muslim world. The seven portions are called the seven manzils, or stages, and they include the same number of chapters as is mentioned in the report. The seventh portion begins with the chapter entitled Qáf, as stated in the report, and the total number of chapters contained in the first six portions is forty-eight, as in the copies of the Qur-án in our hands. It should be borne in mind that in our copies the Qáf is the fiftieth chapter, the difference arising from the fact that in the report quoted above the Fátihah, or the Opening Chapter, is not included. This report affords the clearest and most conclusive testimony that the arrangement of the chapters of the Holy Qur-án was brought about by the Holy Prophet himself, like that of its verses; and their present arrangement does not differ in the least from the original.

It may perhaps be objected that such an arrangement was not possible, as the Qur-án was not complete till the death of the Holy Prophet, and verses and chapters were constantly being revealed. It is quite true that the Qur-án could not be said to be complete so long as the recipient of the Divine revelation lived, but this could not interfere with the arrangement of verses and chapters. The word "Qur-án" signified the part of the Qur-án that had been revealed. Now, the report quoted above speaks of the conversion to Islam of the Bani Saqif, which did not take place till the ninth year of Hejira, in which year the chapter entitled Immunity, which is looked upon as the latest in chronological order, was revealed. Hence, at the time of which the report speaks, almost the whole of the Qur-án had been revealed, and the division into seven portions, which speaks of the number of chapters in each portion, has in its favour the authority of the Holy Prophet himself, and no objection to it is based on reasonable ground. The verses that were revealed afterwards were put in their proper place in the chapters to which they belonged, and if any short sura was also revealed afterwards (as the Help), it also found its proper place in the arrangement of chapters, and did not interfere with the enumeration of the chapters contained in the first six portions.

There is no evidence that the arrangement of chapters existing in the time of the Holy Prophet was altered in any way by Abu Bakr or 'Usman. Against Abu Bakr no one has ever advanced such a charge, and 'Usman only followed the collection of Abu Bakr. The copies made in the time of 'Usman were made under the directions of the companions who possessed the best knowledge of the Qur-án, and many of them, as Ubayy bin Ka'b, knew the whole of it by heart. The arguments which I have advanced above as to the arrangement of verses apply mutatis mutandis to the arrangement of chapters. But as some reports speak of different arrangements of chapters, I shall consider them before leaving this subject.

Let us take first the chapter headed Tálif-ul-Qur-án in Bukharee. According to the first report mentioned in this chapter, a man from 'Iráq came to 'Ayesha and asked her to show him her copy of the Qur-án. On being questioned as to what he meant to do with it, he said that no arrangement was followed in the recital of the Qur-án, and that he wanted her copy for a right arrangement of the Holy Book. Upon this, the report tells us, " 'Ayesha rebuked him and accosted him in the following words: 'What harm is there which is read first? Verily what was revealed of it first was a chapter from among the mufassal, speaking of paradise and hell. But when people began to accept Islam, injunctions were revealed about the things legal and the things prohibited. Had the first injunction revealed been the prohibition of drinking, they would have said that they could not give up drinking.' . . . Then she brought out her copy of the Qur-án and recited verses of some chapters." In this report we have the objection of a man from 'Iráq, not one of the companions but a new convert to Islam, and the reply of 'Ayesha. In the reply the objector is rebuked for saying that no arrangement was followed in the recital of the Qur-án, and it is explained to him what necessitated an arrangement different from the chronological order. It appears from the reply that his question related to the order of revelation, for he was told that there was no harm in placing a verse revealed before another after it in the arrangement. The copy of the Qur-án which 'Ayesha showed the questioner had also its arrangement different from the order of revelation, for she is stated to have recited verses of different chapters in support of her argument. And the man was satisfied with 'Ayesha's argument and did not take her copy, which he would have certainly done if the arrangement of 'Ayesha's copy had been different from the current copies of the Qur-án.

It should also be borne in mind that the arrangement of chapters to which we have referred above was observed only in the recital of the whole Qur-án, and no such arrangement was observed in its recital in prayers or outside prayers, when only certain portions were recited. In prayers, for instance, if any chapter or any portion of a chapter was recited in one rak'at, any other chapter or portion of a chapter whatever could be recited in the second rak'at. There is ample evidence as to this in reports. Similarly, two or more chapters could be read in a single rak'at, and in some cases there were combinations of such chapters for recital in prayers. In his tahajjud prayers, for instance, the Holy Prophet used sometimes to recite twenty chapters, eighteen of which were termed the mufaṣṣal, or the shorter chapters, towards the close of the Qur-án, beginning with Qáf, and two Ḥá Míms, or chapters commencing with Ḥá Mím. Thus in each rak'at two of these chapters were recited, the total number of rak'ats being ten. The Holy Prophet made a peculiar combination which has been preserved to us through Ibn-i-Mas'ud, and accordingly it is known as the tálíf-i-Ibn-i-Mas'úd, or the combination of Ibn-i-Mas'ud. Now, this combination has nothing to do with the arrangement of chapters in the Qur-án, nor was it followed on all occasions. It was a combination which, according to Ibn-i-Mas'ud, the Holy Prophet followed upon one occasion, or more occasions than one, in his later midnight prayers; and as authentic reports show that the ordinary arrangement of chapters was not followed by the Holy Prophet or his companions in prayers, this peculiar combination does not detract aught from the value of the original arrangement. On the other hand, this peculiar combination was preserved and mentioned only on account of its peculiarity and departure from the original arrangement of chapters. Nor was this peculiar combination followed always, even in tahajjud prayers, for there are other authentic reports showing other combinations and the recital of other chapters. Even in the public prayers the arrangement of chapters was not followed. On one occasion the Holy Prophet recited the fourth chapter, An-Nisá, in the first rak'at and the third chapter, Ál-i-'Imrán, in the second, and the incident has been preserved to us in a report only because a departure was made in this case from the recognized arrangement. Many other instances of the same kind are on record, and as it was not obligatory to follow the arrangement of chapters in reciting them in prayers, such cases furnish only additional testimony to the fact that the arrangement of chapters followed at present is the same as was followed in the recital of the whole Qur-án in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, according to his directions.

The circumstance narrated above as to the peculiar combination of the twenty chapters termed the mufaṣṣal, a combination resorted to by the Holy Prophet sometimes in his tahajjud prayers, has led some men to think that Ibn-i-Mas'ud's copy of the Qur-án followed a different arrangement of chapters. But the only trustworthy evidence to support this is the report quoted above, which speaks of a certain combination of twenty short chapters in the tahajjud prayers; and when it is shown that the observance of the arrangement of chapters was not necessary in prayers, the force of that evidence vanishes altogether. Even supposing for the sake of argument that Ibn-i-Mas'ud followed a different arrangement of chapters, and that it was according to that arrangement that the chapters were written in his copy of the Holy Qur-án, it does not follow that his was the right arrangement or that the arrangement in Abu Bakr's or 'Usman's copy was the wrong one. None of the companions favoured the arrangement of Ibn-i-Mas'ud. On the other hand, all of them recognized the arrangement in 'Usman's copy as the arrangement followed by the Holy Prophet. Among the companions who superintended the copying of the Qur-án in the reign of 'Usman there were such eminent men as 'Ali, Ubayy bin Ka'b, Zaid bin Sabit, and others. 'Usman had chosen, as I will show later on, twelve of the most eminent companions, who were distinguished for their sound knowledge of the Qur-án, and they decided all points on which any dispute arose. They could not be unaware of the particular combination of chapters which the Holy Prophet followed in his later midnight prayers, but they knew that no particular arrangement was adhered to by the Holy Prophet in the recital of chapters in prayers, and no arrangement could in fact be observed. It is absurd to suppose that they were all ignorant of a certain combination, and that Ibn-i-Mas'ud alone knew it. Had the arrangement of chapters been left to private judgment, we could have supposed Ibn-i-Mas'ud's arrangement to be the right one and attributed the error to the rest of the companions. But the matter was to be decided by what the Holy Prophet had ordered. Ibn-i-Mas'ud thought that a certain arrangement which he had seen the Holy Prophet following in his tahajjud prayers was the right arrangement. But he made a mistake. The companions knew that the arrangement followed in prayers was not, and could not be, the right arrangement. Authentic reports related by them show that the Holy Prophet used to recite a portion of one chapter in one rak'at and a portion of another chapter, whether before or after the first in actual arrangement, in the second rak'at. They also knew the case in which a companion who led the prayers in a certain mosque commenced every rak'at with the short chapter entitled Unity, and then followed it with any other chapter, and when the Holy Prophet was apprised of this circumstance he did not object to it. They knew further that in the morning prayers on Fridays the Holy Prophet generally recited the chapter As-Sajdah, the 32nd chapter, in the first rak'at, and the chapter Ad-Dahr, the 76th chapter, in the second rak'at; yet this did not mean that the latter chapter should follow the former in actual arrangement. They knew the actual arrangement and they followed it. Ibn-i-Mas'ud based his arrangement on a certain combination followed in certain prayers, and thus made an error in judgment. Yet in the main even his arrangement was not different from the arrangement followed in 'Usman's copy. The same longer chapters, the Tiwál, were first in his copy as in 'Usman's, with this difference only, that An-Nisá preceded Ál-i-'Imrán, the order of the third and fourth chapters being thus reversed. The reversal of this order is also due to the Holy Prophet having once done it in reciting them in prayers. These are the only two differences as regards the arrangement of chapters that are mentioned to have existed in Ibn-i-Mas'ud's copy. So the error is either to be attributed to Ibn-i-Mas'ud or to those who have supposed that his arrangement of the chapters of the Qur-án differed in these two points from the recognized arrangement followed in the official copies issued by 'Usman. Even the existence of the difference confirms the conclusion that the arrangement of chapters followed by 'Usman was exactly the same as that followed by the Holy Prophet. There is agreement in the main between other companions and Ibn-i-Mas'ud, and the difference arises only out of an error of judgment. Now, we ask, if the order of chapters was not fixed by the Holy Prophet himself, what led Ibn-i-Mas'ud to follow the same arrangement as was followed by 'Usman and the other companions? Such an agreement in the arrangement of 114 chapters was not possible unless both were following one and the same authority who had fixed that order. Such authority could be none but the Holy Prophet. As further testimony that Ibn-i-Mas'ud's arrangement of chapters was materially the same as was followed in 'Usman's copies, and as is followed by us to this day, we have a report in Bukharee in which Ibn-i-Mas'ud names the five chapters in the middle of the Qur-án, Bani Israil, Al-Kahf, Tá Há, Maryam, Anbiyá, in the same order in which they are found in our copies of the Holy Qur-án. All this evidence leads us to the certain conclusion that Ibn-i-Mas'ud's arrangement of chapters was the same as in the copies made by the order of 'Usman, that if there was any difference it was very slight and immaterial, and that this difference arose out of a misunderstanding on the part of Ibn-i-Mas'ud.

Two other persons are named as having followed a different arrangement of chapters in the collection of the Qur-án. These are Ubayy bin Ka'b and 'Ali. The case of the former may be disposed of at once, as there is no testimony worthy the name which shows that Ubayy followed a different arrangement of chapters. The only thing stated about him is that he placed the fourth chapter before the third. If that was the only difference of arrangement, it is quite immaterial, and the error may have arisen from the same source as in the case of Ibn-i-Mas'ud. But, as I shall now show, if Ubayy ever entertained such an opinion, he afterwards gave it up when he came to know the facts. 'Ali is said to have collected the chapters in the order of revelation, and there is a report stating that he did not rest after the Holy Prophet's death until he had collected the Qur-án, arranging its chapters in chronological order. The authenticity of this report has been questioned, for that Qur-án was never handed down to posterity, though 'Ali reigned as Caliph immediately after 'Usman. Moreover, there are reports of a higher authority which do not give to 'Ali such credit. According to one (see Fat-ḥul-Bári, p. 10), 'Ali himself said that "the greatest of men as regards the collection of the Qur-án is Abu Bakr; he is the first man who collected the Qur-án." Therefore the report which makes 'Ali say that he did not rest after the death of the Prophet till he had collected the whole of the Qur-án is contradicted by those whose evidence is corroborated by other historical facts, one of which is that even during his Caliphate 'Ali never referred to or accepted a different copy of the Qur-án or a different arrangement of its chapters. But, besides this, there is another consideration which shows that neither 'Ali nor Ubayy followed any arrangement of chapters other than the one which was followed by 'Usman. Ubayy and 'Ali were among the men under whose directions the copies of the Qur-án were written, and therefore they were as greatly concerned in giving us the present arrangement of chapters as 'Usman or any other companion.

There is one report more which may be mentioned in connection with the arrangement of chapters, as from it a contrary conclusion is sometimes drawn by mistake. Ibn-i-'Abbas thus narrates this report: "I said to 'Usman, 'What led you to put Al-Anfál (the eighth chapter) in juxtaposition with Bará'at, and you did not write between them the Bismillah, thus classing these two chapters with the seven long ones?' Upon this question 'Usman gave me the following reply: 'It was customary with the Holy Prophet, when many chapters were being revealed to him, that when any portion of any chapter was revealed, he sent for one of his amanuenses and told him to write down those verses in the chapter where such and such things were spoken of. Now Al-Anfál was one of the chapters revealed early at Medina, and Bará'at was one of the latest revealed chapters, and the subject-matter of these two chapters was identical. Therefore I believed that the latter chapter was a part of the former chapter, and the Holy Prophet died, and he did not distinctly say to us that it was a part.'" This report, far from ascribing the arrangement of chapters to the judgment of 'Usman, makes it clear that the arrangement of chapters was effected by none other than the Holy Prophet. It shows that, except in the case mentioned in the report, the Holy Prophet had "distinctly" told his companions where a verse or a chapter was to be placed. It also shows that the arrangement was effected according to subject-matter by the Holy Prophet himself, for it was the identity of the subject-matter which decided that the eighth and the ninth chapters should be placed in juxtaposition. In fact, leaving the case of this one chapter, viz. the ninth, out of question, the report relates in express and clear words, not only that the Holy Prophet pointed out the position of every verse, but also that he pointed out the position of every chapter, and distinctly told his companions which chapter should follow which in the collection, and that it was he who arranged the chapters according to their subject-matter. Now, taking the case of the two chapters mentioned in the report, does it follow from what is said in it that the Holy Prophet gave no directions at all as to their arrangement? The chapter entitled Bará'at ("Immunity") was, we know, revealed to the Holy Prophet more than a year before his death, and accordingly it is not right to say that he had no time to give distinct directions as to its place. The fact is that the Holy Prophet himself desired the two chapters to be thus placed side by side, and the Bará'at to be written without Bismillah, the formula with which every chapter begins. The two chapters, although known under two different names, were really parts of a single chapter. The first thirty verses of the Bará'at (according to others thirteen or forty), were proclaimed to the assembled hosts in the days of pilgrimage, and this was the reason that the Bará'at was regarded as a different chapter. Hence the Holy Prophet never told his companions distinctly that the Bará'at was only a part of Al-Anfál, and it was for this reason that it was looked upon as a distinct chapter. But neither did the Holy Prophet commence it with the opening formula, because in a certain sense—that is, the identity of the subject-matter—it was regarded as a part of the eighth chapter. This is what 'Usman explained to Ibn-i-'Abbas.

All these circumstances lead us to the certain and undeniable conclusion that the arrangement of the chapters of the Holy Qur-án and the arrangement of the verses in each chapter were both effected by the Holy Prophet. There is strong internal evidence to the same effect. The chapters, like the verses, have a connection with each other, as is shown in the introductory notes on the different chapters.

4. The collection of the Qur-án.

The next point to be considered is, if the whole of the Qur-án was safe in writing as well as in memory, and if even its verses and chapters were arranged before the death of the Holy Prophet, what was meant by the collection of the Qur-án in the time of Abu Bakr or in that of 'Usman.

As I have already remarked, the primary work of the collection of the Holy Qur-án was done by the Holy Prophet himself under the guidance of Divine revelation. To this the Holy Book itself refers in the following words: "Surely on Us devolves the collecting of it and the recital of it; therefore when We have recited it, follow its recitation" (75 : 17, 18). On another occasion the objection of the unbelievers to the gradual revelation of the Holy Qur-án is thus met: "And those who disbelieve say: Why has not the Qur-án been revealed to him all at once? Thus that We may establish your heart by it, and We have arranged it well in arranging" (25 : 32). Here again it is asserted that the putting together and arranging of parts was the work of Divine revelation. These verses and the facts already mentioned go a long way to show that the primary collection of the Holy Qur-án was effected by the Holy Prophet. But we have seen that such collection was needed only by those who wished to commit the whole of the Qur-án to memory, and that it was in reciting the whole that the arrangement of chapters was needed. Hence, though the whole Qur-án existed in a complete and arranged form in the memories of the companions, it did not exist in a single volume in a written form. Every verse and every chapter was, no doubt, committed to writing as soon as it was revealed, but so long as the recipient of the Divine revelation lived, the whole could not be written in a single volume. At any time a verse might be revealed which it was necessary to place in the middle of a chapter, and hence the very circumstances of the case made the existence of a complete volume impossible. Hence a collection of the Qur-án in a volume was needed, after the death of the Holy Prophet, which should be in accordance with the collection made by the Holy Prophet, as existing in the memories of his companions. Such a collection was also needed to facilitate reference to and circulation of the Holy Word, and to give it a more permanent form than was secured to it in being consigned to memory. Such was the object with which the collection of the Holy Qur-án was taken in hand by Abu Bakr.

A reference to the report which describes the circumstances necessitating the collection of the Qur-án confirms the statement made above. The account is given by Zaid bin Sabit, the Holy Prophet's amanuensis at Medina, and it has been preserved to us in an authentic report recorded in the Sahih Bukharee. Soon after the death of the Holy Prophet, Abu Bakr had to send an expedition against the impostor Musailma. A battle was fought at Yemamah, in which great carnage occurred among the Muslims, and many of the reciters of the Holy Qur-án lost their lives. Since the Holy Qur-án existed as a whole up to this time only in the memories of the reciters, and the written fragments had not been collected in a single volume, 'Umar apprehended a great danger if more reciters fell in some other battle. Straightway he went to Abu Bakr and advised him to give immediate orders for the collection of the written portions of the Qur-án into one volume. "A great number of the reciters of the Qur-án have been slain in the battle of Yemamah," he said, "and I fear that slaughter may again wax hot among the reciters of the Qur-án in other fields of battle, and that much of the Qur-án may be lost therefrom. In my opinion it is absolutely necessary that you should give immediate orders for the collection of the Qur-án." But the companions of the Holy Prophet were so faithful to their master that the doing of a thing which the Holy Prophet had not done seemed to them a departure from the path which he had shown to them. "How can I do a thing," replied Abu Bakr, "which the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, has not done?" "But," urged 'Umar, "that is the best course under the circumstances." Abu Bakr was convinced, after some discussion, and Zaid was sent for. "You are," said Abu Bakr to him when he came, "a young man and wise, against whom no one amongst us can cast an imputation of any kind, and you were wont to write the revelations of the Holy Prophet. Search therefore (the written portions of) the Qur-án and collect it (into one volume)." The first impulse of Zaid was the same as that of Abu Bakr. "How can you do a thing," said he, "which the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, has not done?" And so heavy did the task appear to him, that at that time he thought: "It would not have been more difficult for me if I had been asked to remove a mountain." But at last he was prevailed upon, and began the search.

The report quoted above proves several points. Firstly, it shows that the whole of the Qur-án was safe in the memories of the reciters who had learned it in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. There was nothing to be feared so long as the reciters were safe, but if they perished in a battle, then, it was feared, certain portions of the Holy Qur-án might be lost, because the manuscripts of different chapters and verses had not been up to that time collected in one place. Secondly, it appears from it that the collection of the Qur-án undertaken in the time of Abu Bakr was meant only to supply the place of the reciters if by some mishap in a battle they were all lost. The apprehensions in the mind of 'Umar arose because he feared that, as many reciters had perished in the battle of Yemamah, many others might be lost in some other battle. Hence he insisted upon a collection of the Qur-án which should have nothing to fear from the death of certain persons. From this it is clear that the original collection of the Qur-án, with an arrangement of its chapters and verses, was effected by the Holy Prophet himself, and 'Umar only desired to supplement the collection of the Qur-án in memories with a collection in writing. The report does not allege that the Qur-án had not been collected up to that time: on the other hand, it asserts that the Qur-án was safe in men's memories, but that a written collection was needed in view of the possible loss of the reciters in a field of battle. Memory was a good repository, no doubt, but such a collection could at any time be entirely lost by the loss of those who retained the Holy Book in memory. Thirdly, the report proves that up to the time when Abu Bakr took in hand the collection of the written Qur-án no portion of it had been lost, and that there were still many reciters who had it safe in their memories. 'Umar only feared loss of portions of the Qur-án by the loss of the remaining reciters in some other battle that might ensue. It was only a contingency: certain reciters who were alive at the time at which 'Umar was speaking might be lost in some future battle. Nothing had been lost up to that time, but something might be lost in the future if immediate steps were not taken for a collection in writing. To sum up, the report shows that the entire Qur-án was safe in the memories of the reciters, that 'Umar only desired to make a collection of the Qur-án in writing in addition to the collection existing in the memories of the reciters, and that nothing had been lost from the collection existing in their memories when the collection in writing was undertaken. These are three important points which settle the matter that the collection of the Quranic revelations in our hands does not differ in any way from the collection existing in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and that nothing was added to or lost from it at any time. It must also be borne in mind that the report which disposes of these points is not only one of the most authentic and trustworthy, but no one has ever questioned its accuracy.

We have now to explain what was meant by Abu Bakr when he said that he could not do a thing which had not been done by the Holy Prophet. 'Umar's question related, not to the mere collection of the Qur-án, but to the collection of the Qur-án in writing. Now, it is a fact admitted on all hands that, though the complete Qur-án with a perfect arrangement of its chapters and verses existed in the safest of repositories, the memories of the companions of the Holy Prophet, the different writings containing different portions of the Qur-án had never been collected together and arranged. Nor could this be done so long as the Holy Prophet was alive. For whereas, as already pointed out, it was easy for the reciters to place any verse of any chapter revealed at a subsequent time in its proper place in that chapter as pointed out by the Holy Prophet, a complete volume could not admit of such a course. Hence the Holy Prophet did not order the collection of the different writings. Now, 'Umar asked Abu Bakr to collect these writings, and this was what the Holy Prophet had not done, and therefore, in the first instance, Abu Bakr refused to do it. It shows only how scrupulous the companions were not to interfere with the Divine revelation. But 'Umar's case was based on strong and sound reasoning, and hence he argued it with Abu Bakr until the latter was convinced of the truth and advisability of what he said. Thus there is nothing in the report to show that the Holy Qur-án had not been collected up to the time of the incident. It only shows that the different writings had not been collected and arranged, and that the completely arranged Qur-án was entrusted only to the memories of men.

Another point to be elucidated in the report quoted above is the statement of Zaid as to the great difficulty which he thought he was likely to experience in the performance of the task with which he was entrusted. Indeed, he thought that it would not have been more difficult for him if he had been asked to remove a mountain. What were his difficulties? A report narrated by Ibn-i-Abi-Daood makes it clear. "'Umar rose and declared that whoever had received anything directly from the Holy Prophet should bring it (to Zaid), and they (i.e. the companions) used to write it upon papers and tablets and palm branches in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and nothing was accepted from anybody until two witnesses bore testimony" (Fat-ḥul-Bári, vol. ix. p. 12). The report clearly confirms the conclusion already arrived at, that the object of the collection undertaken in the time of Abu Bakr was to gather together what had been written in the presence of the Holy Prophet. Zaid's collection was meant to secure the original writings, and this was the great difficulty to which Zaid alluded. A great portion of the Holy Qur-án had been revealed at Mecca, and even the portion that was revealed at Medina was not wholly in the possession of Zaid. Zaid had to search not only writings, but writings which had been written in the presence of the Holy Prophet. He was chosen for the task because he had written the greater portion of the revelation at Medina, and was presumed to have all those copies safe in his custody. But the task before him was a very difficult one. He had to search all the original writings and then give them an arrangement in accordance with that of the verses and chapters as followed in the recitation of the entire Qur-án from memory, in obedience to the directions given by the Holy Prophet. That these writings were safe cannot be doubted. Everything relating to Divine revelation was preserved with the utmost care. But the task was no doubt an arduous one, and required hard labour and diligent search; hence Zaid, with a true appreciation of the difficulties before him, said that it was equivalent to the removing of a mountain.

These are clear considerations showing that the service with which Zaid was entrusted was the collection and arrangement of the original copies of the different verses and chapters made in the presence of the Holy Prophet. The object of Abu Bakr and 'Umar was not to have a volume of the Holy Qur-án prepared by Zaid writing down the Holy Book as recited by the reciters, but to prepare a book by collecting the original writings. This is the reason that the word collection (Ar. Jam'a) is always used in connection with this task, not arrangement or compilation. Hence also the first direction of Abu Bakr to Zaid was to "search the Qur-án and collect it," and it is easy to see that a search had only to be made for writings. The words of 'Umar, expressing a fear that much of the Qur-án might be lost if the reciters fell in other fields as in that of Yemamah, clearly imply that he was sure that no portion of the Holy Qur-án had been lost up to that time, and accordingly, if the object of the new collection for which 'Umar contended were simply to reduce the Qur-án to writing as recited by the experts, Abu Bakr would not have told Zaid to "search the Qur-án and collect it." Nor would Zaid, in such a case, have considered the task to be as difficult as the removing of a mountain. Sufficient accuracy could have been obtained by gathering together a few reciters, and Zaid had only to write out the Holy Qur-án as dictated by them and approved by the companions. But 'Umar's object was to gather the original writings, which had been written according to the directions of the Holy Prophet himself, and thus to make the accuracy of the text doubly certain. And the report further tells us that Zaid actually followed this course; for, after being convinced that Abu Bakr and 'Umar were right, he thus describes what was done: "Then I began to search the Qur-án, and to collect it from palm branches and tablets of stone and the hearts of men, until I found the concluding verses of the chapter entitled Immunity in the possession of Abu Khuzaima Anṣári, and I did not find them in the possession of anybody else." This shows that Zaid had two things to do: to search the writings and to collect them in a single volume. Now, collection required an arrangement of verses and chapters, for the writings themselves were found in the possession of different men, and they could give no clue to the arrangement that was to be followed. It was for the sake of arrangement that Zaid had to resort to the reciters, and it is to this that the words "hearts of men" refer in the report quoted above. Moreover, memory had also to be resorted to, to test the accuracy of the writings. In fact, without the help of reciters the collection of the writings in the form of a complete volume was not possible. It was for this reason that 'Umar urged that the collection should be commenced whilst a large number of reciters were still alive, and it is for this reason that Zaid mentions that in collecting the writings he had to resort to memory, or "the hearts of men," as he puts it. The words do not indicate that he sought for some chapters from writings and for others from memory, for if he limited his inquiry to memory in the case of one part of the revelation, he had no need to search for writings for the rest, and the whole could have been easily written down from the dictation of the reciters.

The most important question with regard to the collection made under the orders of Abu Bakr is: Did it accord in every respect with the Qur-án as stored and collected in the memories of the companions, and as repeated and recited, publicly as well as privately, in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet? There is not the least reason to believe that it did not. In the first place, none of the compilers was actuated by any motive to make any change in the text. The earnest desire of all those engaged in the task was to have a complete and faithful reproduction of what had been revealed to the Holy Prophet, and Zaid had only undertaken the task after a full appreciation of the difficulties. Secondly, the collection began only six months after the death of the Holy Prophet, while almost all of those who had heard the Qur-án from his lips were still alive. The Qur-án as recited by the Holy Prophet was still fresh in the memories of the companions, and any tampering with the text could have been easily brought to notice. Thirdly, we find the companions so cautious even in reporting the words of the Holy Prophet that we cannot imagine that they would tamper with the Divine revelation only six months after his death. They held the Divine word in such great awe and reverence that it is impossible they should have fabricated a word or sanctioned the omission of any part of the Holy Book. Fourthly, as we have already seen, there were many among them who could repeat the whole of the Qur-án from memory. There were others who knew large portions, and these were kept fresh in memory by constant recitation in and apart from prayers. It was impossible that any variation from the text as prevalent in the time of the Holy Prophet should have found its way into the collection in the presence of such men. Fifthly, there were many transcripts of the revelation current among the companions. And since every verse was written at the time of its revelation, and copies of it were then made by the companions, there were ample means for testing the accuracy of the collection of Zaid. These writings were in the possession of different companions, and so they all had a chance to see for themselves that the collection made by Zaid was a faithful copy of the original writings. Moreover, the writings in the possession of one man could be compared with those in the possession of another, and thus, as in the case of recitation, there was no probability of any error creeping into the text. Memory and writing corroborated the already unimpeachable testimony afforded by each, and thus placed beyond the shadow of a doubt the accuracy of the text of the Holy Qur-án. Sixthly, there is no mention at all in any report whatever that anything was left out of the collection made under the orders of Abu Bakr, or that anything had been added to it which was not considered to be part of the Divine revelation. As Sir William Muir says: "We hear of no fragments, sentences, or words omitted by the compilers, nor of any that differed from the received edition. Any such would undoubtedly have been preserved and noticed in those traditional repositories which treasured up the minutest and most trivial acts and sayings of the Prophet."

Thus there are strong and conclusive arguments showing that the copy made from the transcripts under the orders of Abu Bakr agreed in every way, in text as well as in arrangement, with the collection made under the directions of the Holy Prophet himself and preserved in memory by the reciters. Unless there had been a complete agreement in the text as received through the two sources, memory and writing, the companions would never have been satisfied with the collection. The copy thus made remained, we are told, in the possession of Abu Bakr, and after his death in that of 'Umar. After the latter's death, the copy was transferred to the custody of Hafsa, the daughter of 'Umar, and a widow of the Holy Prophet. Thus the copy of the Holy Qur-án transcribed by the orders of Abu Bakr came down to the reign of 'Usman without any alteration in its text or arrangement. It is highly probable that copies were made from this collection by those who needed them, and thus it was sufficiently circulated. But some circumstances coming to the notice of 'Usman, he deemed it necessary to circulate official copies, transcribed by official scribes, and suppress all those made by private persons, either from the collection of Zaid or other writings still prevalent among them. An authentic report narrated by Bukharee thus describes the circumstances: "Anas son of Málik relates that there came to 'Usman Huzaifa, who had been fighting with the people of Syria in the conquest of Armenia and with the people of Iraq in Azerbaijan, and who was alarmed at their variations in the modes of reading, and he said to 'Usman: 'O Commander of the Faithful! stop the people before they differ in the Holy Book as the Jews and the Christians differ in their Scriptures.' So 'Usman sent word to Hafsa, asking her to send him the Qur-án in her possession, so that they might make other copies of it and then send the original copy back to her. Thereupon Hafsa sent the copy to 'Usman, and he ordered Zaid bin Sabit and Abdulla bin Zubair and Sa'id-ibn-il-'As and 'Abdul Rahman bin Haris bin Hisham, and they made copies from the original copy. 'Usman also said to the three men who belonged to the Quraish (Zaid only being a Medinite): 'When you differ with Zaid in anything concerning the Qur-án, then write it in the language of the Quraish, for it is in their language that it was revealed.' They obeyed these instructions, and when they had made the required number of copies from the original copy, 'Usman returned the original to Hafsa, and sent to every quarter one of the copies thus made, and ordered all other copies or leaves on which the Qur-án was written to be burned."

The report states clearly the circumstances which led 'Usman to destroy all private and substitute in their place official copies transcribed from the collection of Zaid made in the time of Abu Bakr. The Caliph was told by one of his generals who had been fighting in Armenia and Azerbaijan that there were variations in the modes of reading the Qur-án in such distant parts of the kingdom as Syria and Armenia. No such differences are pointed out to have existed at Medina or Mecca, or anywhere within Arabia. It was only in newly converted countries, where Arabic was not spoken, that these differences were noticed. As to the nature of these differences, it is stated in clear words that they were only differences in qirá'at, or the modes of reading. Nor were they of such a serious nature as those existing among the Jews and the Christians with regard to their Scriptures, but it was feared that if nothing was done to put a stop to the slight differences existing at that time, they might, after the lapse of a few generations, develop into serious ones. What the differences exactly were it is difficult for us to say, but a reference to earlier anecdotes casts some further light upon their nature. We are told in authentic reports that different modes of reading certain words were allowed by the Holy Prophet himself, and companions unacquainted with the permission at first severely took to task anybody whom they heard reading any word of the Holy Qur-án in a different method. Thus 'Umar on one occasion heard Hisham pronouncing certain words of the Qur-án in a different method, and in great wrath dragged him into the presence of the Holy Prophet, who approved Hisham's reading. The reason for this permission was that people belonging to certain tribes could not pronounce certain words in the ordinary way. These people were allowed to read them in the manner in which they could easily pronounce them. But I do not wish to enter into details here, as I intend to discuss under a separate heading the subject of the various readings. From what I have stated above, it will be seen that the permission to read any word in a different method was based on a necessity. Only those could avail themselves of this permission who, on account of their being accustomed from their very childhood to pronounce certain words in a certain manner, could not pronounce them in the pure dialect of the Quraish. But when Islam spread beyond Arabia, the need to read certain words in a different method disappeared, for the foreigners could pronounce a word in the dialect of the Quraish with the same facility as in any other dialect. Some of the companions, however, still taught the Qur-án adhering to certain readings which were not in accordance with the pure style of the Quraish. Some of them may have even abused the permission and favoured certain readings, though they had no need for them. This evil seems to have spread at Kufa, and it was to this that Huzaifa referred when he was alarmed at the variation in the readings. According to certain reports he strongly reproved those who took to peculiar readings, some saying that they followed the reading of Ibn-i-Mas'ud, others that of Abu Musa, and others still of Ubayy-ibn-i-Ka'b, whereas they could without any difficulty recite the Qur-án according to the original reading, that is, in the dialect of the Quraish. This conclusion is corroborated by an anecdote relating to a period earlier than the time of 'Usman. 'Umar was told that Ibn-i-Mas'ud read 'attá ḥín instead of ḥattá ḥín. Now, in the dialect of the Huzail and the Saqeef ḥattá was pronounced 'attá (see Lane's Lexicon under the root 'attá). Ibn-i-Mas'ud did not belong to either of these tribes, but he favoured a peculiar reading which had been permitted only because people belonging to certain tribes could not utter the word otherwise. When 'Umar was told that Ibn-i-Mas'ud taught 'attá instead of ḥattá, the Caliph wrote to him that the Qur-án was revealed in the language of the Quraish, and that he should not read it in the dialect of the Huzail. The words of 'Umar as given in the report are: "Surely the Qur-án was revealed in the language of the Quraish and not in the dialect of the Huzail, so teach it to the people in the language of the Quraish and not in that of the Huzail." Another evil that had sprung out of these variations in readings was that the new converts, unable to realize the need for which they had been permitted, began to attribute heresy one to another for a difference in the reading of certain words. It was this evil which made Huzaifa and 'Usman have great apprehensions, as many reports show, and the only remedy for it was that the variations for which there now remained no need should be entirely suppressed in reading as well as in writing, and that the pure language of the Quraish, in which the Qur-án had been revealed, should be used by all.

The considerations and the anecdotes given above help us to understand the nature of the differences and the evil at which Huzaifa was alarmed, and to remove which was the object of 'Usman in destroying all private copies of the Qur-án. The instruction which 'Usman gave to the syndicate of the scribes further supports this conclusion. To the members of the committee who belonged to the tribes of the Quraish he gave the direction in plain words: "When you differ with Zaid in anything concerning the Qur-án, then write it in the language of the Quraish, for it is in their language that it was revealed." This direction, we are told, was obeyed. 'Usman then went no further than 'Umar. Only the variations of readings became more pronounced in his time, and became the source of much evil, and he took a step which was calculated to wipe off once for all those variations which 'Umar also wanted to put a stop to. It may be asked what was meant by differing with Zaid in anything concerning the Qur-án. In another report, also related by Bukharee, instead of "When you differ with Zaid in anything concerning the Qur-án," we have the words, "When you differ with Zaid in an 'arabiyyat in the 'arabiyyat of the Qur-án," the word 'arabiyyat signifying the Arabic language. The word clearly implies that by difference in the report is meant difference in the method of pronouncing a word in different dialects. Zaid, as previously stated, did not belong to the tribe of the Quraish, and hence, where there was a difference in the manner of reading or writing a word, the decision of the Quraish members was to be accepted. The only example of the difference alluded to has been preserved to us in a report. On the authority of Ibn-i-Shaháb, the same narrator as in Bukharee's report, Tirmazi adds the following anecdote to the report accepted and narrated by Bukharee: "And they differed on that occasion as to tábút and tábúh. The Quraish members said that it was tábút, and Zaid said that it was tábúh. The difference was reported to 'Usman, and he directed them to write it tábút, adding that the Qur-án was revealed in the dialect of the Quraish." This anecdote illustrates the nature of the differences at which Huzaifa was alarmed. It shows that the differences whose removal was aimed at by 'Usman were not ordinarily more serious than this. But since the companions of the Holy Prophet believed every word to proceed from a Divine source, they could not tolerate even such slight differences. And since the need for which such variations in the reading of certain words were previously permitted ceased to exist, and the danger of differences being accentuated increased with the influx of large numbers of foreigners into the holy religion of Islam, 'Usman thought it expedient to put a stop to all variations by circulating copies of the Holy Qur-án transcribed and superintended by competent men under his own orders, and suppressing all private copies which contained such variations.

Did the copies transcribed under the orders of 'Usman differ from the original collection made by Zaid in the time of Abu Bakr? The report tells us that when variations of readings in the distant parts of the kingdom were brought to the notice of 'Usman, the first idea to which he gave expression was to obtain the copy in the possession of Hafsa, and to have other copies transcribed from it for circulation among the Muslims. And from this intention he made no departure. The copies of the Qur-án transcribed under his orders were true and faithful copies of the collection of Zaid, which, as we have seen, was in the custody of Hafsa after the death of 'Umar. It was Zaid who transcribed the copy in the time of Abu Bakr, and it was Zaid who was called upon to make fresh copies from it in the time of 'Usman. To remove any difference of dialect or variation in the mode of reading certain words that might possibly arise, 'Usman gave, no doubt, the orders that the reading of the Quraish should be adopted in preference to any other reading. But the only example of such variation that has been preserved to us in reports is that Zaid read a word as tábúh and the Quraish read it as tábút, there being a very slight difference as to the manner in which the final letter of the word was to be written, without there being the slightest change in significance; and such importance was given to this trifling difference that the matter was reported to 'Usman for decision. There is no mention at all of any other departure having been made from the writing of Zaid in the copy of Hafsa. Hence we have conclusive testimony in our hands showing that the copies of the Qur-án made and circulated under the orders of 'Usman were exact and faithful copies of the original collection of Zaid. Again, the message of 'Usman to Hafsa was: "Send us the copy of the Qur-án that we may make copies from it, and then we will return it to you." In accordance with this, the copy of Hafsa was returned after the requisite number of copies had been made. Had there been any difference between the original and the copies made, it would no doubt have come to light in the long reign of 'Usman or in that of 'Ali, when the Muslims had been divided into factions, and that copy was still in the possession of Hafsa. The men who murdered in cold blood the aged and venerable prince 'Usman could not have failed to bring to light any difference that might have existed between the copy of Hafsa and the copies made by him. But there is nothing on record to show that any such difference really existed, and this evidence further corroborates the conclusion that the copies made by 'Usman were true and faithful copies of the original collection made by Zaid in the time of Abu Bakr.

Had the action of 'Usman in destroying all private copies of the Holy Qur-án been arbitrary or unjustifiable, the companions of the Holy Prophet would never have yielded to it. But it appears that they not only approved of his action, but also assisted him with willingness in the execution of his designs. Huzaifa, one of the learned companions, had come to him in all haste from distant Syria to request that he should take immediate steps to put a stop to variations in readings, and this he could not do except by issuing official copies of the Holy Qur-án as collected by Abu Bakr and suppressing all private copies, which were perhaps not made with sufficient care and contained any variation of reading. Nor did 'Usman take this step without consulting the companions. According to a report narrated by Ibn-i-Abi-Daood through a chain of narrators which has been admitted as trustworthy (see Fat-ḥul-Bári, vol. ix. p. 16), 'Ali said: "Do not say aught of 'Usman but what is good, for he did not take the step with regard to the suppression of the private copies of the Qur-án except after consultation with us. He spoke to us, saying, 'What do you think about this reading? I have been informed that some of them say to others, "My reading is better than thine." This, I think, may amount to unbelief.' We asked him what step he thought it advisable to take in this matter. He replied that he thought it necessary to gather people on one reading. To this we all heartily agreed." This anecdote shows that it was only after consultation with the general body of the companions that 'Usman took any step. There are said to have been twelve members in the syndicate which superintended the transcription of the copies. Among these were Zaid, Sa'id, Ubayy, Anas bin Málik, 'Abdulla bin 'Abbas, and others. It appears that originally there were four members only, as the report in the Bukharee tells us, but that others were added later on, perhaps because a larger number of copies than that imagined at first was required. 'Abdulla bin Mas'ud was the only companion noted for his knowledge of the Qur-án who was not included in the committee, but his exclusion was not due to any prejudice against him, but to his residence at a considerable distance from Medina. 'Abdulla lived at Kufa, and much delay would have been caused in the progress of the work if he had been included in the committee. And as 'Usman began his work after due consultation with the general body of the companions, they approved of his action after its completion. According to a report, Mus'ab bin Sa'd said that he met many companions when 'Usman gave orders for burning all private copies of the Qur-án, and they were all pleased with it, and none of them took exception to it. In fact, 'Usman's apprehensions and those of the companions, as the words of 'Ali reported above show, were not due so much to the existence of variations in readings as to the differences resulting from these variations. Those who had newly entered into Islam were unaware of the circumstances as a result of which the Holy Prophet permitted certain variations in readings, and adopting the reading of a particular companion, they were severe upon others who adopted a different reading, and thus the slight variations in the mode of reading certain words began to lead to great controversies and quarrels. 'Usman and the other companions saw that the people were falling into errors and making a wide departure from what the Holy Prophet intended to be the use of variations, and they adopted the best way of remedying the evil.

Ibn-i-Mas'ud, for the reason stated above, could not take any part in the supervision of the transcription of copies made under the orders of 'Usman, and he is the only person who in some reports, by no means of the highest authority, is said to have made certain remarks against Zaid. For instance, he is reported to have disliked the appointment of Zaid for transcribing the copies, and to have remarked: "What! the transcription of the Qur-án is taken away from me and it is entrusted to a man who was in the back of an unbeliever when I was a Muslim," referring to his older age and priority in the acceptance of Islam. Either this report is not true or Ibn-i-Mas'ud, if he actually uttered these words, made a grievous error. Zaid was the person who had collected and transcribed the Qur-án in the time of Abu Bakr. Abu Bakr and 'Umar could not think of a better man than Zaid, and they entrusted to him the task of collection. When 'Usman felt a similar need, he inquired of the companions as to who was best qualified for the task and who excelled others in the art of writing, and he was told that Zaid was the man. This was the reason for his selection of Zaid to do the work of transcribing, and with him was joined a syndicate of several other companions to superintend the work, and it was in accordance with their directions that he transcribed the copies. Ibn-i-Mas'ud was, therefore, hardly right in speaking of Zaid in disparaging terms, if he spoke those words. But we may entertain grave doubts as to his having spoken them, for on the earlier occasion, when more important work was done than mere transcription, Ibn-i-Mas'ud never spoke a word against Zaid. The remarks which he is said to have made would have been more appropriate if they had been uttered at the time when Zaid was entrusted by Abu Bakr and 'Umar with the work of collecting the Holy Qur-án from writings in manuscripts. It is strange that such remarks should have been made when nothing had to be done except transcription from an earlier original. But if the report be true, then its concluding words are sufficient to show that Ibn-i-Mas'ud was really in error, for we are told that "the most eminent companions disliked this remark of Ibn-i-Mas'ud." Moreover, according to this report, Ibn-i-Mas'ud did not find any fault with 'Usman. There are certain reports of very doubtful authenticity which assert that Ibn-i-Mas'ud had really refused to give up his copy of the Qur-án or to accept that sent by 'Usman, but these reports have not been accepted by any reliable collector. Even supposing them, for the sake of argument, to be authentic, they do not throw any discredit upon the copies made under the orders of 'Usman. Ibn-i-Mas'ud read certain words, we are told, in a manner different from that in which the Quraish read them, and even 'Umar had enjoined him to give up such readings. On that ground he may have refused to give up his copy, but not a single other companion ever supported his views. They were free to express what view they liked, but they all, without any exception, sided with 'Usman.

These considerations can leave no doubt that the copies circulated by 'Usman were true and faithful copies of the collection of Abu Bakr, which again agreed in every word and point with the Qur-án as taught by the Holy Prophet. When 'Usman issued his copies, thousands of the companions were still living, and many of these, such as Ubayy, 'Abdulla son of 'Umar, and others, were among the men who had committed to memory the whole of the Qur-án in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, while hundreds of others might have learnt it by heart after his death, as it was then in circulation. It was only thirteen years after the death of the Holy Prophet that 'Usman had given orders for making official copies of the Holy-Qur-án, and if these had in any way differed from the original copy or from what had been preserved in memory, the companions would certainly have raised their voices against such maltreatment of the Holy Book. The Qur-án was still their most precious treasure, and they could not suffer a word of it to be changed. They would rather have given up their lives than permitted any tampering with the Qur-án. They were not only sincere and earnest in their professions, but they had also ample means to judge the correctness of the copies made under the orders of 'Usman. Anything left out from the Qur-án or anything added to it would at once have been pointed out by hundreds of the companions. But even Ibn-i-Mas'ud, with all the ill-will which he is reputed to have borne against 'Usman and Zaid, never pointed out a single word in the Qur-án that had been either altered, omitted, or added by 'Usman. He only remonstrated that he should be allowed to retain his peculiar reading of certain words, an example of which has been given in the word ḥattá, which he pronounced 'attá, following the dialect of the Huzail.

'Usman, then, made no alteration in the Qur-án as it was collected by Abu Bakr immediately after the death of the Holy Prophet. He employed the same scribe who was employed before him by Abu Bakr and in his lifetime by the Holy Prophet himself. He acted after consultation with the companions, securing the services of the most eminent who were noted for their knowledge of the Qur-án to superintend the work of transcription. The copies made by his orders were recognized as true copies by the whole Muslim world. Nor could any alteration in the copies alter the text as preserved in the memories of thousands of men. The bitterest foes of 'Usman, those who cut off his head while he was reading the Qur-án and who had the whole power in their hands, never charged him with having tampered with the Qur-án, though ordering the burning of the copies of the Holy Book was one of their charges against him. But this latter charge was advanced because the act of burning papers on which the Holy Word was written was considered sacrilegious. Even during the reign of 'Ali no one pointed out a word which had been omitted by 'Usman, and 'Ali is himself stated to have transcribed copies of the Qur-án from the official copies circulated by 'Usman.

As regards the copies in our hands, it is admitted by the bitterest enemies of Islam that the copies made by 'Usman have been handed down to later generations entirely unaltered. The purity of the text of the Qur-án is thus conclusively demonstrated. The collection of Abu Bakr was a faithful reproduction of the revelation as reduced to writing in the presence of the Holy Prophet, and agreed every whit, in text as well as in arrangement, with the Holy Qur-án as preserved in the memories of the companions; the copies circulated by 'Usman were true and faithful copies of Abu Bakr's collection, and these copies have admittedly remained unaltered through the thirteen hundred years that have since elapsed.

5. Differences of readings.

Alleged differences of readings are said to interfere with the purity of the Quranic text in two ways. It is alleged that certain readings which had been permitted by the Holy Prophet were suppressed by 'Usman, and thus with their loss a portion of the original text was lost. This is one objection, and the other is that the variety of readings existing at the present time makes it difficult to decide with any degree of certainty as to which is the original or the authentic reading. These objections really arise out of a misconception of the significance of the word "readings" when used with regard to the Quranic text, and out of a confusion between the meanings of ḥarf and qirá'at when used to denote "reading," and, accordingly, it is necessary to inquire first into the true nature of the "differences of readings."

In the first place it is important to bear in mind that the Arabic word used in the reports to denote reading is ḥarf. This word means "a dialect, an idiom, or a mode of expression, peculiar to certain of the Arabs," according to Lane's Lexicon, which is based on the best Arabic authorities. It is this meaning which the word conveys in the reports speaking of the variety of readings, as Lane himself adds: "So in the saying of Muhammad (TA), the Qur-án has been revealed according to seven dialects, of the dialects of the Arabs (A'Obeyd, Az, I As, Q): or this means, according to seven modes or manners (Mgh, Msb) of reading: whence (you say) such an one reads in the manner of reading of Ibn-i-Mas'ud." These quotations would show that the differences spoken of in certain reports were only those arising from the variations of dialects, which necessitated the reading or expressing of certain words in a different manner by various tribes.

Let us now turn to the reports and see how far this conclusion is supported by them. The following reports bear on this subject:—

(1) Bukharee reports from Ibn-i-'Abbas: "The Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said, 'Gabriel taught me to read the Qur-án according to one ḥarf only. I addressed him repeatedly, and asked him to read it in other dialects also, and this I continued to do until he read it to me in seven dialects.'" Muslim gives the same report in the same words through a different chain of narrators, the original narrator being still Ibn-i-'Abbas, but the following words are added: "Ibn-i-Shahab said, 'It has been brought to my knowledge that seven ḥarfs (dialects) are in a matter which remains the same (that is to say, reading in any one of these dialects does not change the meaning), and they give rise to no difference as to what is lawful and what is forbidden.'"

(2) Bukharee reports from Ibn-i-Mas'ud: "I heard a man recite the Qur-án, and I had heard the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, read it differently. So I brought him to the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him. When I informed him of what had happened, I perceived displeasure in his countenance, and he said, 'Both of you read correctly; therefore do not differ, for surely there were those before you who differed and they perished.'"

(3) Bukharee and Muslim report from 'Umar bin Khattab: "I heard Hisham bin Hakim bin Hizam read the chapter entitled Furqán in a manner different from that in which I read it, and it was the Holy Prophet himself, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, who had taught me to read it thus. So I was about to stop him hastily, but I waited and let him read until he had finished. Then I threw my mantle round his neck, and brought him to the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, and I said, 'O Messenger of God, I have heard this man recite the chapter entitled Al-furqán in a manner different from that in which you taught me to read it.' The Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, ordered me to release Hisham, and then ordered him to recite the chapter. He read in a manner in which I had heard him read it. The Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said, 'Thus has it been revealed.' Then he ordered me to read it, and when I read it he said, 'Thus has it been revealed. Surely this Qur-án has been revealed in seven dialects; therefore recite it in the manner in which you find it easy to do so.'"

(4) According to another report by Muslim, Ubayy bin Ka'b heard two persons read the Qur-án in a manner different from that in which he had been taught to read it. On his bringing the matter to the notice of the Holy Prophet, the latter approved of their reading. This perplexed Ubayy, whom the Holy Prophet satisfied by the following explanation, of which Ubayy himself is the reporter: "O Ubayy, the Holy Qur-án was revealed to me to be read in one dialect only. I asked for permission to read it in other dialects, so that it might be easy for my people to recite it. Thereupon I was permitted to read it in two dialects; and again I asked for permission for more, so that it might be easy for my people, and I was permitted to read it in seven dialects."

(5) Muslim reports from Ubayy bin Ka'b to the following effect: "The Prophet of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, was near the place known as the 'pool of the Bani-Ghafár' when Gabriel came to him and said, 'Surely God commands you to make your people read the Qur-án in one dialect only.' The Holy Prophet replied,'I crave the pardon of God and His forgiveness, for my people cannot bear this.'" We are then told that the Holy Prophet continued to ask for permission to read the Qur-án in other dialects until he was permitted to read it in seven dialects.

(6) Abu Daood makes Jábir narrate the following words: "The Holy Prophet came to us, and we were reading the Qur-án, among us being Arabians as well as foreigners, and he said, 'Keep on reading, for every one's reading is good. And there will come crowds of men who will read the Qur-án straight on (that is to say, with good voices), like as an arrow is made straight, and they will hasten their reward in this life and will not look for it in the next.'"

(7) Tirmazi reports the following from Ubayy bin Ka'b: "The Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, was visited by Gabriel, and he said to him, 'O Gabriel, surely I have been sent to a people who are without learning; among them is the old woman and the old man, and the boy and the girl, and the man who has never read a book.' Gabriel said, 'O Muhammad, surely the Qur-án has been revealed in seven dialects.'"

These are the only important reports dealing with the subject of various readings as permitted by the Holy Prophet. The one conclusion upon which they all agree is that the alleged differences were not differences of text, but differences in the manner of reading or pronouncing certain words. To make this point clearer, I would discuss the several points mentioned in them at some length. The first question is, can the time to which these reports relate be fixed with any degree of certainty? In other words, was the permission to read the Qur-án in seven dialects granted contemporaneously with the commencement of the revelation or at a later time, and in the latter case, what was the probable date? This circumstance will serve to throw much light on the question of the nature of the differences, as I will show later on. It will also settle the question of the text. One inference as to time can be drawn from the fifth report given above, which tells us that at the time when the permission was granted the Holy Prophet was near the place known as the "pool of the Bani-Ghafár." This place, as is well known, is situated at Medina, and consequently one thing of which we are certain as regards the time of the permission is that it was after the flight of the Holy Prophet to Medina. No variety of readings was therefore permitted at least during the first thirteen years at Mecca, when Islam was properly limited to the Meccans. There is another point, however, which shows that the permission to read in different dialects was not granted until after the conquest of Mecca; that is to say, about the ninth year of Hejira. In one of the reports given by Bukharee, Hisham bin Hakim bin Hizam is mentioned as the person who surprised 'Umar by reading the Qur-án in a manner or dialect different from that in which 'Umar read it. Now, Hisham did not become a convert to Islam until after the conquest of Mecca, which event took place in the eighth year of Hejira, or nearly two years before the death of the Holy Prophet. The inference which can be drawn from this circumstance is that the permission as to reading in various dialects was granted about this time, for if it had been granted before, a man like 'Umar could not have remained ignorant of it. 'Umar was the man who had made arrangements with another companion to remain alternately in the company of the Holy Prophet in order to be kept informed of every new revelation and every new circumstance, and with the close relation which he had with the Holy Prophet, it is inconsistent that he should have remained ignorant of the permission to read the Qur-án in dialects other than the pure idiom of the Quraish for any very long time—say several months, or at most a year. Not one of the reports, moreover, names any of the earlier converts as having read the Qur-án in a dialect different from the pure idiom of the Quraish in which it was revealed originally.

Considerations such as the above show that the permission to read the Qur-án in other dialects was granted when many of the Arabian tribes had embraced Islam, i.e. towards the close of the Holy Prophet's ministry. And it is a fact that more than nine-tenths of the Qur-án had been revealed before the conquest of Mecca, and the whole of that was revealed in the language of the Quraish. This also shows that the permission was meant originally for such other tribes, and this point settles conclusively that the text of the Holy Qur-án was that in which it was revealed originally. The differences of the readings were only such as were naturally necessitated by the influx into Islam of unlearned tribes, who spoke an idiom which was Arabic to all practical purposes, but which in the pronunciation of certain words differed slightly from the pure idiom of the Quraish. Examples of these differences have already been given. The Quraish say ḥattá (meaning until), while the Huzail pronounce the same word as 'attá, there being no difference in the significance of the two words. (See Lane's Lexicon, which explains 'attá as being "a dial. var. of ḥattá of the dial. of Hudheyl and Thakeef.") Other variations of the same kind are ti'lamún instead of ta'lamún, as the tribe of Asad read it; yásin instead of ásin in 47 : 15; the reading of hamzah (one of the letters of the alphabet) by the Tamím, where the Quraish did not read it; and so on.

In support of the above are certain anecdotes left by early authorities. Thus Abu Sháma reported from one of the earlier authorities (vide Fat-ḥul-Bári, vol. ix. p. 24) that "the Holy Qur-án was first revealed in the language of the Quraish and such of the Arabs as were in their neighbourhood and spoke the chaste Arabic idiom; then it was permitted to the other Arab tribes to read it in their own idioms, to the use of which they were habituated from their childhood, and they differed (from the pure idiom) in the pronunciation of certain words and the vowel-points. Therefore none of them was compelled to leave his own idiom for that of another, because of the difficulty which they would have experienced in doing so, and because of their great regard for their own idioms, so that they might easily understand the significance of what they read. All this was subject to the condition that there should be no change in the significance."

Most of the reports given above point out the reason for which the permission was granted, and in each case we find the reason to be in accordance with the view of the differences as advanced above. For instance, according to one of the reports the Holy Prophet asked the angel to "make it easy" for his people, showing that they experienced a difficulty in reading it otherwise. According to another, he is made to say that his people "could not bear it"—in other words, all the Arab tribes could not read in one dialect; according to a third, he pleads for his people, saying that they were unlearned, and among them were the old woman and the old man, and the boy and the girl, and the man who had never learned to read a book. Of course, if they had been educated, they could have easily spoken the literary and chaste idiom of the Quraish, but as most of them were unlearned, it was very hard for them to utter every word in the manner of the Quraish. Hence they were permitted to read certain words according to their own dialects. We have also one report ending with the words: therefore read it in the manner in which you find it easy to do so, which shows that the permission to read the Qur-án in dialects other than that of the Quraish was meant to afford facility to certain people.

Another remarkable circumstance is that among the earlier converts to Islam no such differences can be shown to have existed, nor were there any differences of readings among such eminent and learned companions as, for instance, Abu Bakr and 'Umar or Abu Bakr and 'Ali. This leads us to the same conclusion as we have arrived at above, viz. that the different readings were not variations of texts, but only different modes of pronouncing the same word in various dialects. It was, as we have seen, an actual need. It was very hard for the uneducated Arab tribes, whose dialects slightly varied from the standard of the Quraish—whose idiom was regarded as the purest and most chaste of all Arabic idioms—to speak every word exactly as the Quraish spoke it. It was necessary for every person who embraced Islam to know and to be able to recite a certain portion of the Holy Qur-án, and they were allowed the facility, with Divine permission, to express a word according to their own idiom when they found it hard to express or utter it in accordance with the chaste idiom of the Quraish.

To what extent the various dialects in which the recital of the Qur-án was permitted differed from each other is not a question of much importance, but there seems to be no doubt, as many instances preserved in reports show, that the variations were very slight and generally very unimportant. But while holding this on the basis of historical evidence, so far as access can be had to it, we have no reason for denying that in certain cases a word of one dialect may have been allowed to be expressed by its equivalent in another dialect, where the latter dialect did not possess the original word. This is what is meant when it is said in certain reports that the expression of meaning by a synonymous word was allowed in certain cases. Such a case is exemplified in one report by the use of any of the words ta'ál, halumma, and aqbil, all meaning "come." This is not an actual case of variation of reading in the Holy Qur-án according to different dialects, but the example is only given to show the nature of the variation in such cases. This example shows that it was only in cases where the idea expressed by a word was so plain as not to be mistaken by a man of even ordinary understanding that the use of one word for an equivalent one of a different dialect was permitted. Other variations of reading in these dialects were of a much more insignificant nature, and related to certain changes in vowel-points. Thus the meaning was in no case altered. There were differences in the utterance of certain words, but there was no difference at all in the significance conveyed. This is attested by the report which tells us that by reading the Qur-án in any one of the seven dialects no difference was caused as to the things allowed and the things prohibited.

It has been objected that, if the differences had been so slight as to have naturally arisen in the utterance of certain words by an illiterate people speaking different dialects, the companions would not have dealt so harshly with each other. 'Umar was about to stop Hisham in his prayers, as the report tells us, and at last brought him before the Holy Prophet with his mantle thrown round his neck, as if he had been guilty of some great offence. Such an incident, it is alleged, could not have taken place unless Hisham were reading a text totally differing from the text as known to 'Umar. This is, of course, a mere conjecture. We have produced above the strongest historical evidence showing that the differences of readings among the companions of the Holy Prophet arose only from the variations of dialects. But the companions were so scrupulous about every word and every letter of the Divine revelation, that the slightest change in any word or letter of the Holy Qur-án was to them the greatest of sins. This is a fact which every right-minded critic must bear witness to. Hence it was that 'Umar was so impatient when he heard Hisham reading.

Another objection against the variety of readings being only dialectic is that Hisham and 'Umar both belonged to the tribe of the Quraish, and that hence the dialect of Hisham could not have been different from that of 'Umar, whereas the report shows that there was a difference between them. To understand this point, it must be borne in mind that once the necessity of dialectic variation was recognized and permission was granted, that permission could not be limited to a particular tribe. The Holy Qur-án was taught by the companions to each other, and hence to a certain extent the peculiarities of one dialect or tribe found their way into another. Moreover, it was not necessary that, if one tribe was unable to utter a certain word according to the dialect of another tribe, the latter should also be unable to utter the equivalent word of the former. To give an example, the tribe of Huzail said 'attá for ḥattá (meaning until), the latter pronunciation being that of the Quraish, but the Quraish could pronounce it in both ways, and they had no aversion to either form of the word. Though they ordinarily said ḥattá, they could also pronounce the word as 'attá, as the case of Ibn-i-Mas'ud shows, who read 'attá ḥin instead of ḥattá ḥin. The Quraish, in fact, seem to have had the aptitude to speak freely in the dialects of the other Arabian tribes, the reason of this probably being that thousands of men from every corner of the country flocked every year to the Ka'ba, when, besides paying a visit to the Holy Temple, they had also literary assemblies and commercial transactions in which the Quraish took part. On account of their being guardians of the Ka'ba, the Quraish had to come into contact with every tribe, and this intercourse had become more permanent by the establishment of commercial relations. It had also facilitated for them the utterance of certain words according to the peculiar modes of other tribes.

Now, Hisham became a Muslim after the conquest of Mecca, and this was the time when many Arabian tribes were embracing Islam. It is therefore probable that Hisham learned the chapter Al-Furqán, which gave rise to the difference, from the Holy Prophet when the latter was teaching it to some other tribe, and thus certain dialectic variations found their way into Hisham's recital.

It must not be thought that every word of the Holy Qur-án was pronounced in seven different ways. What is meant is only this, that the variations of reading permitted belonged to one or other of the seven dialects. These variations were very few, for had there been a greater number of them, authentic reports would no doubt have preserved them in large numbers. The confusing of these dialectic variations with the readings which are mentioned in certain commentaries is a blunder. The nature of these readings I will describe later on. But so far as the dialectic variations permitted by the Holy Prophet (the sab'at-i-aḥruf of the reports) are concerned, there are wonderfully few traces of them in the reports, showing that they were actually very few. For if there had been a large number of them, there is no reason why reports should not have preserved a good many. 'Usman's action in not allowing the writing of these variations in copies of the Holy Qur-án could not bring about their entire extinction, for the numerous sayings of the Holy Prophet were never written, yet the minutest details have come down to us in reliable reports. Indeed, as I have shown above, the regular intercourse of the Arab tribes with the Quraish, and their commercial relations, had left no difference of importance in their dialects, and the variations that existed were very few and unimportant. Hence the dialectic variations permitted in the readings of the Qur-án were also very few. The seven dialects in which the readings were permitted were those which were considered as the most chaste by the Arabs, and some authorities have named them, while according to others the number seven is not meant to convey a definite numerical significance, but only to express that some dialectic variations were permitted.

The above considerations clearly show that the variations at no time formed a part of the text of the Holy Qur-án, nor were they ever meant for permanent retention. The necessity which had given rise to them was of a purely local and temporary nature. Almost the whole of the Qur-án had been revealed before the time that these variations were permitted. The more we ponder over them, the more are we convinced that these variations were only allowed for the facility of certain tribes, and they did not in any way alter the text of the Holy Qur-án as it was originally revealed. The Holy Prophet himself never recited in his public prayers any portion of the Holy Qur-án in any dialect other than that of the Quraish, for if he had done so, men like 'Umar and Ubayy, who said their five daily prayers with the Holy Prophet, would not have found fault with dialectic variations, as they are reported to have done. The practice of the Holy Prophet, therefore, shows that the permission to use certain dialectic variations did not alter the original text of the Holy Qur-án in the slightest degree. This was the text which the Holy Prophet used in his public recitals and public prayers. Another evidence that the Holy Prophet intended only the dialect of the Quraish to be retained for permanent use, and permitted the variations only for a temporary need, is to be met with in the circumstance that the writing of the Qur-án, even after the permission as to dialectic variations, suffered no change. The text as it was written was still the same, i.e. in conformity with the dialect of the Quraish. These two points, viz. the writing of the Qur-án and the Holy Prophet's own recital, conclusively show that the dialectic variations permitted towards the close of the Holy Prophet's ministry did not in any way affect the original text. Perhaps one of the reasons why Zaid was ordered by Abu Bakr and 'Umar to collect the Qur-án from the original writings made in the presence of the Holy Prophet, and not to trust to memory alone, was that they knew that the originals were all free from dialectic variations, and therefore, to avoid them and secure the pure text, the safest course was to search those writings and copy them.

We are now in a position to consider the first of the objections stated in the beginning of this article. I have shown the true nature of the variations which were permitted by the Holy Prophet himself. I have also shown that these variations were meant to answer only a temporary need, and that the Holy Prophet did not order them to be written, nor did he ever use them when leading the public prayers. Nor do we find any trace of any scribe having ever been directed by the Holy Prophet to note any of the variations. And in spite of the permission to use in oral recitation of the Holy Qur-án certain dialectic variations, the Qur-án was generally spoken of as having been revealed in the dialect of the Quraish only. We find 'Umar writing during his Caliphate to Ibn-i-Mas'ud, who then taught at Kufa, not to teach the Qur-án according to the dialect of the Huzail, for it was revealed in the dialect of the Quraish. This order was given by 'Umar on hearing that Ibn-i-Mas'ud taught the people to read 'atta, a dialectic variation, as used by the Huzail, of the word hattá. Again, when 'Usman ordered copies to be made from the collection of Zaid, he gave the express direction that when there was any difference as to the mode of writing a word, it should be written according to the dialect of the Quraish, for the Qur-án was revealed in that dialect. Thus it appears that neither the Holy Prophet himself nor his eminent companions ever gave any importance to the dialectic variations, nor did they ever consider them to have the effect of altering the text of the Holy Qur-án. Just as before the permission, so after it, the text was regarded as one which remained unaltered during the whole ministry of the Holy Prophet and has remained pure and unaffected to this day.

From the above it becomes clear that 'Usman did not suppress any part of the text of the Holy Qur-án by disallowing the writing of the dialectic variations, for these were never a part of it. Whatever may be said of 'Usman's action, it cannot be claimed that he suppressed a part of the text of the Holy Qur-án by disallowing certain dialectical variations. The text of the Holy Qur-án could not suffer anything by losing that which never formed a part of it. 'Usman only followed the example of the Holy Prophet and his two predecessors in the Caliphate. The Holy Prophet never ordered the variations to be written, nor did he ever use them in his public prayers. In the time of Abu Bakr, when the necessity of having a complete copy of the Qur-án was felt, that Caliph gave orders for the search of original writings, so that no variation should find its way into the authentic copy. Coming to 'Umar, we find him writing to Ibn-i-Mas'ud not to teach the people the dialectic variations of the Huzail. 'Usman, therefore, only followed in the footsteps of his eminent and worthy predecessors. The circumstances which obliged him to take this step have been narrated elsewhere. Islam had spread far and wide beyond Arabia, and people whose mother-tongue was not Arabic were embracing Islam in large numbers. To teach the Qur-án to these people was a task different from teaching it to the Arabian tribes. The latter, when they embraced Islam, had special facilities for learning the Qur-án, for it was in their language. But they had their special difficulties. They were accustomed to a particular idiom and particular way of pronouncing certain words from their childhood, and it was very difficult for them to dispense with their own idioms. The people of other countries had, however, to learn Arabic before learning the Holy Qur-án, and hence it was as easy for them to read the original text as the dialectic variations. It was, however, brought to the knowledge of 'Usman that some people were teaching these dialectic variations to the new converts, and as these new converts could not easily understand the true nature and significance of such variations, differences and quarrels were the result. 'Usman's object was to put a stop to such quarrels. It was for this reason that he ordered copies of the Qur-án to be made from the collection of Zaid, as made in the time of Abu Bakr, and all other copies to be destroyed. He knew that the collection made in the time of Abu Bakr was made with the utmost care, and the original writings made in the presence of the Holy Prophet had all been gathered together after diligent search, and that, therefore, that was the only copy which contained the pure and original text of the Holy Qur-án. Individuals teaching in distant centres were not so careful, and had probably put into writing in their private copies certain dialectic variations which they were permitted to recite orally in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. Hence it was to secure the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án that other copies were ordered by 'Usman to be destroyed. It was a most judicious and most necessary step. At all events, Usman only prevented the writing of the dialectic variations, and we know for a fact that even the Holy Prophet did not order their writing. 'Usman's action was, therefore, entirely in accordance with the wishes of the Holy Prophet. By the suppression of the writings containing dialectic variations the text of the Holy Qur-án did not lose anything, but had its purity firmly established.

We may now consider the second objection referred to in the beginning of this article. It is alleged that the existence of certain readings which are to be met with in certain reports and commentaries makes it uncertain which is the original and the revealed text, and that thus the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án is destroyed. Now, whatever may be the nature of the readings referred to above, the one consideration which settles the absolute purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án, as in our copies of the Holy Book, is that no different text is met with in any copy of the Holy Qur-án anywhere in the world. During all the ages and in all the countries, with all the differences, there has been only one text. Not a single one of the alleged various readings has ever replaced any word of the current text anywhere in the Muslim world. There are Muslims in countries situated farthest off from each other, there are Muslims who have been separated from each other for long ages, there are Muslim sects bearing the utmost enmity towards each other, yet they have always followed the same text of the Holy Qur-án, and not a single copy can be produced with a varying text. Yet if temporal authority could not or did not interfere with the recital of these readings, there is no reason to believe that it could or did interfere with their writing in the text. In fact, temporal authority could not have access to what millions of men possessed and had in their hearts. Therefore, if the men to whom those readings are attributed had given them the same value as the critics now give, they would certainly have introduced them into their private copies and replaced the text by those readings, and to-day we should have had many such copies in circulation in the Muslim world. But, strangely enough, there does not exist a single copy varying from the received edition in the slightest degree. The text is in all cases the same, and thus the variety of readings in no way detracts from the value of the purity of the Quranic text.

Let us now consider the nature of the readings. It should be borne in mind that the readings of which traces are met with in certain reports and commentaries are not identical with the dialectic variations permitted by the Holy Prophet, though they may contain some of the latter. It is a great error to confuse the two. But this error has been committed by some, owing to the confusion arising from the circumstance that the various readings were considered to be seven, which number corresponded with the seven dialectic variations. Now, the various readings may be dealt with under the following heads. Firstly, there are the dialectic variations. 'Usman could not stop their recitation. Though, therefore, these variations ceased to affect a wider circle, they could not at once come to an end. Some of these must have been preserved in reports by the admirers of those who used them, and by others for the sake of curiosity. With a few exceptions, it is difficult to say now which of the existing readings belong to this class. It has been pointed out by some that those readings which do not agree with the writing of the Qur-án belong, if authentic, to this class, but this is a mere conjecture. Indeed, it does not concern us to know which readings may be brought under this head, for, as we have seen, they have never been considered parts of the text of the Qur-án. Secondly, there are differences in the number of wáos (meaning "and"), and some other such unimportant differences in the number of one or two other letters, not affecting the meaning in the slightest degree. Thirdly, apart from the necessity of dialectic variations there may have been some revelations in which an optional reading, differing from the text which has been safely preserved to us, may have been permitted. Readings belonging to this class can be accepted only on the highest authority, and the trustworthiness of the report must be clearly established. There can be no objection to the existence of such readings, but neither is it necessary for a reader of the Qur-án to know them, for the text is complete even without them. Such readings, if traced with certainty to the Holy Prophet, are considered to have the value of an authentic report in explaining the meaning of the text. Fourthly, a number of readings have been introduced by misapprehension of an expository word or phrase as part of the text of the Holy Qur-án. Some companion might have explained a word when reading the Qur-án by some other word or phrase, or he might have noted it on the margin of his copy of the Holy Qur-án, which some hearer of his words or reader of his copy mistook for an alternative reading. The copies of the Qur-án we possess are free from all such readings, as has been shown above, for the greatest care was taken by Abu Bakr and Usman in the collection and copying of the Holy Volume, and with them were associated all the other companions. Fifthly, there are said to be certain readings introduced after 'Usman had sent the official copies in various directions. The original writings are said to have been without dots and without vowel-points, and this is stated to be the reason of certain differences in readings having arisen in different centres. It is further asserted that these different readings were actually followed in reciting the Qur-án by reciters in different centres, each one thinking his reading to be the only true reading. There are two very strong objections to this theory which do not permit us to believe in its truth. In the first place, if the Qur-án was publicly recited in different ways in the different centres, and at each centre a peculiar reading was considered to be the only correct reading, and as such actually the true text of the Holy Qur-án, why were not these readings made to supplant at that centre the text of the Qur-án as we now have it? Why were not these readings introduced into the copies of the Qur-án? Is it not strange that the copies of the Qur-án made and circulated at a particular centre continued to follow the original text, while that text was not followed in reciting or teaching or learning the Qur-án? What use did the writing serve in such a case, and why did not those very men make their copies of the Qur-án tally with their recital? Certainly they had nothing to fear from the authorities, for the authorities, according to the supposition, did not interfere with their public recital of the Qur-án and their publicly teaching it in a different manner. Hence there was no reason why persons who believed a certain reading to be the true reading, and followed the same in their prayers or in teaching the Qur-án to others, should not introduce such reading into their copies of the Qur-án. But as no copy of the Qur-án with a text differing from ours is ever known to have existed, we may be sure that no such readings were ever publicly promulgated.

The second objection to the above theory is that if at different centres different readings of the Qur-án had been followed and taught, these differences, at least in oral recitation, would have become permanent, and we should have had to-day a different version followed, not only in every different country, but also in every important city of even a single country; and thus we should have had to-day no two persons belonging to two different countries or towns agreeing in the same reading. But do we find this to be the case as a matter of fact? Not at all. On the contrary, take any two Muslims from the most distant places who can recite the Qur-án and they will be found to be following one and the same text, the text that we have in our copies. Hence we cannot believe that at some earlier time different readings were followed by different reciters in different centres. If such differences had existed, their scope would have widened day by day, and they could not have vanished all of a sudden. But their utter absence to-day shows that different readings of this class never existed, or, if they existed, they were never considered, even by those who favoured them, to be part of the Divine revelation to supersede the text, but only as possible alternatives by adopting which the meaning was not changed.

It should also be borne in mind that writing was not the only means of preserving the text, and therefore the possible want of dots and vowel-points in the copies of 'Usman would not have left the text undecided. Memory was another safe repository in which the text of the Holy Qur-án was preserved with the utmost care, and when recited from memory no uncertainty or doubt of any kind was left. Therefore, side by side with writing, memory also guarded the text, and the combined evidence of the two could not leave the least doubt. There were even in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet many reciters of the Qur-án, that is to say, men who could repeat the whole of the Qur-án from memory, and their number fast increased with the spread and progress of Islam. At every centre of learning there were hundreds of these reciters, and thus there was ample means to decide any moot point concerning the text if a doubt ever arose.

It should also be noted that the number of readings alleged to have been reported by earlier authorities was very small, and the great mass of readings, like the great mass of reports, developed later. This is a very significant circumstance, as it shows that the number of authentic readings must be insignificantly small. The number of companions and tábi'in (immediate followers of the companions) who are mentioned to have reported readings is very small, but after them came a generation who made recitation their profession and multiplied the number of readings. Therefore it is only on the highest and most trustworthy authority that any reading can be accepted, and it would then have to be seen to which class that reading belongs. The mere circumstance that a reading can be traced with certainty to an earlier authority or even a companion does not show that it is actually an alternative Divine revelation. But the one point which is certain, and which is the only point which requires practical settlement, is that, whatever the nature of a reading, the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án remains unassailed.

As regards the readings of the last class, I think that they may have been put forward as possible alternatives which did not substantially affect the meaning of the text. This appears to be the only reasonable conclusion when all the circumstances are considered, and especially when it is borne in mind that these readings never supplanted the text which was always followed when the Holy Qur-án was recited on any important occasion, as, for instance, in public prayers, or when, by transcribing copies, permanence was meant to be given to it.

The above discussion conclusively settles the true significance of the word "readings" when applied to the Holy Qur-án and the true nature of such readings. The term "reading" does not carry its general application. The existence of a reading generally makes the text uncertain, but not so in the case of the Holy Qur-án. In fact, the term "reading," in this case, has a significance totally different from that which it conveys when applied to other codices, as, for instance, to the codices of the Jewish or the Christian scriptures. The copies of the Qur-án throughout the world are free from all differences, errors, imperfections, interpolations, or corruption, and they have ever remained free from all these defects during the thirteen centuries that have elapsed since the first promulgation of Islam.

6. Allegations against the purity of the Quranic text.

Though the testimony produced under the previous headings of this important subject is sufficient to convince an intelligent reader of the absolute purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án, and quite conclusive as to the fact that the Holy Book has been handed down to us without any addition, alteration, or loss, yet it seems necessary for a comprehensive discussion of the subject to deal separately and at some length with the few objections which are met with in Christian writings on the Muslim religion. These objections may be briefly summed up as follows:—

(1) The existence of some passages in a fragmentary form leads to the logical conclusion that these passages must have been complete originally, and that some portions must have been lost in the transmission of the Holy Book.

(2) The suppression by 'Usman of some codices of the Qur-án in the possession of the companions must have resulted in the loss of some portions of the Qur-án.

(3) Certain passages might not have been intended by the Holy Prophet for permanent insertion in the Holy Qur-án, or might have been abrogated, and Zaid, on account of his ignorance of the circumstances, might have retained them in the Holy Book.

(4) The existence of some reports showing that certain passages were recited in the time of the Holy Prophet, combined with the circumstance that those passages are not now met with in the Qur-án, is a proof that the Qur-án has not been handed down to us complete.

(5) The existence of a Muslim sect (the Shias) holding the belief that the Qur-án is not complete leads to the same conclusion.

This is a brief summary of all the objections I have been able to gather from different writings by Christian critics of the Qur-án. Taking these objections in the order given above, I shall first consider the position of the critics who, like the author of the article on "Muhammadanism" in the Encyclopædia Britannica, assert that 'Usman's copies of the Holy Qur-án were not complete because "some passages are evidently fragmentary." An intelligent reader will easily see that such a poor contention against the strong historical testimony in support of the absolute purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án must be rejected as absurd. It is an erroneous conclusion, and utterly illogical, that because a certain passage appears to a certain reader to be incomplete and fragmentary, therefore some portion must have been lost, and the speaker must have uttered it in another form. To apply such a test to historical facts is dangerous logic. When there is the strongest historical evidence that among the companions of the Holy Prophet there were many men and women who had committed the whole of the Qur-án to memory, and that most of them were still alive when a complete copy was prepared by Zaid from a collection of the transcripts made in the presence of the Holy Prophet, it is a mere delusion to think that some portions might have been overlooked by him. The report which describes the work of collection tells us that he not only sought out all the manuscripts, but that he also called in the assistance of the memory of the reciters. And what is the alleged fragmentariness of certain passages but a form of rhetoric, the beauty and force of which cannot be realized by critics unacquainted with Arabic idiom? The so-called fragmentary passages are really expressions of exquisite beauty, and it is only a superficial knowledge of Arabic idiom that makes the European critics think that some portion has been lost.

As if to support the assertion that the fragmentariness of certain passages is evidence of something having been lost, the writer in the Encyclopædia Britannica, whose objection I have quoted above, adds, probably thinking it to be corroborative testimony, that "a few detached pieces are still extant which were originally parts of the Qur-án, although they have been omitted by Zaid." Now, this properly relates to the fourth objection, where the nature of such "detached pieces" and the trustworthiness of the reports containing them will be fully inquired into. But the critic would no doubt have given some weight to his assertion if he had shown that any of the "detached pieces" which are met with in certain reports so fit in with any of the alleged fragmentary passages that the whole may become a complete sentence. Proceeding upon the supposition that reliable reports have preserved some of the lost passages, the question is, do the passages so preserved answer to the allegations made in the first and the fifth objections? In other words, can they be regarded as parts of some fragmentary passages in the Holy Qur-án, or do they favour the higher pretensions advanced for 'Ali, the immediate successor of 'Usman? The answer to both these questions must be given in the negative. What according to the critics was lost, therefore, is nowhere to be found, and what is preserved in some of the reports was never lost.

Take the second objection now. 'Usman gave orders for the destruction of all copies of the Qur-án current in his time with the exception of the original collection made in the time of Abu Bakr, from which his own copies were made. Of the copies destroyed, or ordered to be destroyed, the greatest importance is attached to two, that of Ubayy and that of Ibn-i-Mas'ud. Regarding the nature of the differences between these copies and the official copies of 'Usman, I would take, as representing sane hostile criticism at its best, the opinion of the author of the article "Muhammadanism" in the Encyclopædia Britannica. Under the heading "other editions" he writes:—

"At the same time, the other forms of the Qur-án did not at once become extinct. In particular we have some information about the codex of Ubayy. If the list which gives the order of its suras is correct, it must have contained substantially the same materials as our text; in that case, Ubayy must have used the original collection of Zaid. The same is true of the codex of Ibn-i-Mas'ud, of which we have also a catalogue. It appears that the principle of putting the larger suras before the shorter was more consistently carried out by him than by Zaid. He omits I, and the magic formulæ of CXIII, CXIV. Ubayy, on the other hand, had embodied two additional short prayers which we may regard as Muhammad's. One can easily understand that differences of opinion may have existed as to whether and how far formularies of this kind belonged to the Qur-án. Some of the divergent readings of both these texts have been preserved, as well as a considerable number of their ancient variants. Most of them are decidedly inferior to the received readings, but some are quite as good, and a few deserve preference."

To do justice to the author of this article, I may also quote the following paragraph in which grounds are given for believing' Usman's text to be the only valid text. This paragraph immediately follows the one quoted above, and runs thus:—

"The only man who appears to have seriously opposed the general introduction of 'Usman's text is Ibn-i-Mas'ud. He was one of the oldest disciples of the Prophet, and had often rendered him personal service; but he was a man of contracted views, although he is one of the pillars of Muslim theology. His opposition had no effect. Now, when we consider that at that time there were many Muslims who had heard the Qur-án from the mouth of the Prophet, that other measures of the imbecile 'Usman met with the most vehement resistance on the part of the bigoted champions of the faith, that these were still further incited against him by some of his ambitious old comrades until at last they murdered him, and, finally, that in the civil wars after his death the several parties were glad of any pretext of branding their opponents as infidels; when we consider all this, we must regard it as a strong testimony in favour of 'Usman's Qur-án that no party, not even that of 'Ali, found fault with his conduct in this matter, or repudiated the text formed by Zaid, who was one of the most devoted adherents of 'Usman and his family."

Two points deserve to be discussed in this connection. It is admitted that substantially the copies of Ibn-i-Mas'ud and Ubayy agreed with the copy of 'Usman in text as well as in arrangement of the verses and the chapters, so much so, indeed, that the writer of the article from which the above quotations are taken thinks that the collections of Ubayy and Ibn-i-Mas'ud must have been based on the original collection of Zaid, made in the time of Abu Bakr. But, as I have already shown, the text and arrangement were complete in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and there were many companions who could recite the whole of the Qur-án by heart before the Holy Prophet died. It was this fact which made the collections of Ubayy and Ibn-i-Mas'ud substantially agree with the copies made by Zaid, because all drew their knowledge from the same source. The differences of these two copies from the copy of 'Usman were, according to the same writer, only on two points, viz.: firstly, Ubayy had in his copy two short prayers besides the known suras, and Ibn-i-Mas'ud omitted from his copy the last two chapters which are contained in our copies of the Qur-án, and also the opening chapter which is called the Fátiḥah: and secondly, both had a certain number of readings differing from the copy of 'Usman.

Accordingly, we have only to see whether Ubayy and Ibn-i-Mas'ud had their own copies, whether they differed from 'Usman's copies in the number of chapters and in the variety of readings, and if so, how far. We take Ubayy first. There is no reliable report showing that Ubayy had a copy of the Qur-án differing from the ordinary copies in circulation, or that it had two short formulæ of prayer added at the end as two more chapters of the Holy Qur-án. Vague reports to this effect are mentioned by Jalal-ud-Din Sayuti in his Itqán, but Sayuti is unanimously looked upon as the last person on whom any reliance can be placed in the matter of the authenticity of reports. The following remarks of Shah 'Abdul 'Aziz in his 'Ujálah Náfi'ah are an echo of the general opinion of all authorities on the trustworthiness of reports: "To the fourth class belong all those reports of which no trace at all is to be met with in the earlier generations, and which were reported only by people of a later time. With regard to these reports one of two things must have happened: either the earlier collectors, after inquiry into them, found them to be unauthentic or fabricated, and therefore they did not report them, or they did not think them to be fabricated, but found some of their narrators to be untrustworthy. Upon whatever supposition we may proceed, it follows that the reports of this class are not reliable. . . . The whole stock of reports on which Jalal-ud-Din Sayuti depends in his writings and pamphlets belongs to this class."

From the above, the reader will see how far the Itqán may be relied upon when there is nothing to support its conclusions in reliable collections. Nay, more than this, reliable reports, accredited by Bukharee and others, contradict the Itqán. There are some reports which clearly state that Ubayy was one of the men whom 'Usman had entrusted with the supervision of the work of transcription when he ordered the making of official copies from the original collection of Zaid. There are other reports which show that even in the time of Abu Bakr he assisted in the work of collection. Indeed, even the writer in the Encyclopædia arrives at the conclusion that Ubayy must have based his copy on the first collection of Zaid. But if we suppose, for the sake of argument, that Ubayy had a copy of the Qur-án in which he wrote down two additional chapters containing short formulæ of prayer, even then it does not follow that these two prayers actually formed a part of the Qur-án, and that the copies circulated by 'Usman are defective for omitting them. Among more than a hundred thousand companions of the Holy Prophet there was not a single person who supported Ubayy's views. Even Ibn-i-Mas'ud, with his strange opinions on some other questions, did not share Ubayy's views. Now, the Qur-án was not the property of one or two individuals, so that any portion of it might have been known to Ubayy alone and thousands of other companions should never have heard of it. Every verse of the Holy Qur-án was, when revealed, proclaimed widely and circulated among friends as well as foes. One person could make an error, but this could be immediately rectified by the testimony of hundreds of others. The one thing which placed the Qur-án beyond the danger of the loss of any portion of it was that every verse obtained a wide publicity at the time of its revelation, and thus it had not one guardian or custodian, but hundreds of them. It is the collective testimony of the whole body of companions that settles the point. It is not a case of difference between 'Usman and Ubayy, so that a critic might think that the truth might have been with this person or that, but it is a case of the solitary view of one person opposed to the combined testimony of all the companions. In such a case and under such circumstances, when sufficient publicity was given to every verse revealed, it cannot be admitted that the two chapters were brought only to the knowledge of Ubayy while the other companions remained ignorant of them, and even opposed his views. All this, of course, is based on the supposition that the report mentioned in the Itqán is true in fact, which, as I have shown above, is really not the case.

We may, however, make this point clearer still by a reference to the words of the alleged additional chapters in Ubayy's codex. The Itqán tells us that they were only two short formulæ of prayer, the first running thus*: "O Allah! we beseech Thy help and ask Thy protection, and we laud Thee in the best manner, and we cast off and forsake him who disobeys Thee!" And the second thus: "O Allah! Thee do we serve and to Thee do we pray and make obeisance, and to Thee do we flee, and we are quick, and we hope for Thy mercy and we fear Thy chastisement, for surely Thy chastisement overtakes the unbelievers!"

The Muslim reader will at once see that this is the du'á-ul-qunút (lit. the supplication of the standing), which is still repeated by many Muslims in their prayers, others substituting for it any of the other prayers taught by the Holy Prophet. I may mention only one form of an alternative prayer which is even more authentic than this. It runs thus: "O Allah! guide me among those whom Thou hast guided, and protect me among those whom Thou hast protected, and befriend me among those whom Thou hast befriended, and bless me in what Thou hast granted me, and save me from the evil of what Thou judgest, for Thou judgest and art not judged; surely he whom Thou befriendest is not disgraced: Blessed art Thou, our Lord! and High" (vide Mishkat, chapter Witr). It is easy to see that the first and the second prayers are both contained in reports of the Holy Prophet, and have nothing to do with the Holy Qur-án. Early and later Muslims all used these formulæ in their nightly prayers called the witr, and the Holy Prophet taught them to do so. If there is any difference it is this, that the second form is met with in more reliable reports than the former. It was not, then, only that the companions of the Holy Prophet had never been taught these words as part of the Qur-án, but they had been taught, and they knew, that they were not part of the Holy Qur-án. The Holy Prophet himself recited this formula in his prayers, as did also his companions. They were recited not as part of the Qur-án following the Fátiḥah, or the opening chapter of the Qur-án, but they were specially recited as prayer formulæ. Similarly, other prayer formulæ are recited in the prayers when standing or sitting or when prostrate, and these are not verses of the Qur-án. If Ubayy actually wrote down the two formulæ in his copy of the Qur-án, which we have very strong reasons to doubt, he made a mistake, probably thinking that their recital in prayers entitled them to a place in the Holy Qur-án. But thousands of the other companions who had also heard the Holy Prophet reciting the same formulæ in his prayers, and who themselves also recited them, knew that they were not parts of the Divine revelation. Ubayy was clearly in error and he soon renounced it, for when 'Usman had the official copies made after consultation with all the companions, Ubayy, who was himself one of the supervisors, recognized their authority. It was the consensus of opinion of the companions which made Ubayy conscious of his error, if he was ever guilty of that error, and, having then seen that his view had neither authority nor reason on its side, he gave it up.

As regards the variation of certain readings, I have already discussed the question, and will now proceed to deal with the alleged rejection by Ibn-i-Mas'ud of the two concluding chapters, and, as some add, of the opening chapter also. On this point Bukharee has only this much, that somebody said to Ubayy that "Ibn-i-Mas'ud said so and so" with reference to the Mu'awwazatán (the last two chapters). Ubayy's answer to this question is reported to have been to the following effect: "I asked the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, and he said to me that they were so read out to him and so he read." Then he said: "So we say as the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said." The wording of this report is not quite clear, and, accordingly, the concluding words are understood by some to have been spoken by Ibn-i-Mas'ud, and by others they are taken to be the words of Ubayy. Both opinions have other reports to support them. In the former case, Ibn-i-Mas'ud accepted Ubayy's opinion, and in the latter Ubayy stated his own belief. But even supposing that Ibn-i-Mas'ud entertained a different opinion, he was alone in this case, and his opinion was not supported by a single other companion of the Holy Prophet. This is not only clear from their support of 'Usman, but we have it also on record that "not a single other companion followed Ibn-i-Mas'ud in this opinion" (see Fat-hul-Bári under the report quoted above). And, as we have seen, even Ubayy opposed Ibn-i-Mas'ud on this point. It is rather an interesting circumstance that the two men, who are said to have differed from the other companions on one or two points, did not agree among themselves: each objected to the opinion of the other on the point on which he differed. The result is, that if they differed at all, neither of them had his views supported by any other companion on the points in which he differed, and his solitary opinion stands condemned by the consensus of opinion of the whole body of the companions.

Against Ibn-i-Mas'ud's view there are other circumstances also. It is clear from many of the reports that the two chapters objected to by Ibn-i-Mas'ud were well known to the companions as part of the Divine revelation. There are reports which tell us that the Holy Prophet used to recite these two chapters in his prayers. Now, it is an established fact that he always followed the recital of the Fátiḥah with some other portion of the Qur-án, and since these two chapters were so recited, it follows conclusively that they were regarded as part of the Qur-án by the Holy Prophet. Ibn-i-Mas'ud based his opinion on certain grounds, but he was wrong. One report ascribes to him the words: "Surely the Holy Prophet, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said that they [the two chapters] taught men how to seek refuge in the Lord." The reference in these words of Ibn-i-Mas'ud is to 16 : 98: "So when you recite the Qur-án, seek refuge with Allah from the accursed devil," so that he thought that the two chapters were only meant to teach how to seek refuge in the Lord. But it does not follow from this commandment of the Holy Qur-án that they were not part of the Qur-án, and the mistake made by Ibn-i-Mas'ud thus becomes manifest. It has been suggested by Qazi Abu Bakr Baqalani, and Qazi 'Ayaḍ entertains the same view, that Ibn-i-Mas'ud did not deny their being part of the Qur-án, but only objected to their being written in the same column because he had not, probably, heard the Holy Prophet ordering them to be written down. It may be further mentioned that some of the reports speaking of Ibn-i-Mas'ud's views with regard to these two chapters describe him as "blotting them out" from his copy, as if it were an afterthought on his part that these two chapters should not be written in the Qur-án. Be that as it may, the conclusion is undeniable that Ibn-i-Mas'ud's view was not supported by a single other companion, and accordingly his opinion, standing thus condemned by the agreement of all the companions, is utterly devoid of weight, and must be rejected as erroneous. As regards his omission from his copy of the Qur-án of the Fátiḥah, or the opening chapter, no reliable report bears testimony to it, and the only report which speaks of it belongs to the unreliable class. If the report be true, the error may have arisen from the circumstance that the Fátiḥah was looked upon as a kind of abridgment of the whole Qur-án, and therefore Ibn-i-Mas'ud did not write it with the rest of the Qur-án. In view of the great importance universally attached to the Fátiḥah, it is impossible to think that any Muslim should ever have entertained the idea that it did not form part of the Divine revelation.

The third objection is a mere conjecture. What the Holy Prophet intended, he pointed out to the scribes who wrote the Holy Qur-án and to others of his companions who committed it to memory. Had the collection of the Qur-án been the work of Zaid alone, unaided by any other companion, there might have been room for such doubts as that he might have overlooked certain passages or embodied others in the Holy Book which were not meant for insertion. But as the concurrent testimony of numerous reports received through different channels shows, Zaid was assisted on each occasion in the task of the collection by the whole body of companions whose assistance was available. In such a case it was impossible, when many of those who knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart were still living, that anything which the Holy Prophet had taught to his followers as being part of the Qur-án should have been overlooked, or any words should have found their way by mistake into it which the Holy Prophet had not meant to be included in the Divine revelation. Such an error could have been made by one man, but it could have been easily rectified by the testimony of the reciters and by the manuscripts written in the presence of the Holy Prophet and the companions, who day and night heard the Holy Qur-án recited by the Holy Prophet and other reciters. No one would deny the possibility of error on the part of one or two individuals, but the fact is self-evident that there were ample means for the correction of all possible errors. Zaid, who did not depend upon writing alone, sought out the writings chapter by chapter where complete chapters had been revealed, and verse by verse where separate verses were revealed, and he had the testimony of the reciters—who had committed to memory the whole of the Qur-án during the lifetime of the Holy Prophet —to corroborate that which was supplied by the writings. To avoid mistakes, he did not rely upon one or two reciters; but in order to correct all possible errors, he sought the evidence of many reciters, comparing their recitals with the written word, for as a rule every verse of the Holy Qur-án was reduced to writing immediately after its revelation. These two mutually corroborative measures precluded all possibility of any error finding its way into the collection or of anything being overlooked. It was the double test which Zaid applied to every verse of the Qur-án that he referred to when he spoke of his collecting the Qur-án from writing and from memory.

I shall now proceed to consider the fourth objection, relating to the existence of reports which speak of certain passages being recited in the time of the Holy Prophet or the existence of the "detached pieces," as the writer in the Encyclopædia Britannica calls them. That there are some reports showing the existence of some such passages I admit, but they are neither authentic nor reliable, though I am bound to add that misconception with regard to the meaning of certain words has given rise to much misunderstanding as to the true significance of some of these reports. Before considering each of these reports separately, I shall make some general remarks which will, I hope, help the reader to a clear understanding of the subject. To establish the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án we have to prove two points: firstly, that nothing has been added to the original text, and secondly, that nothing has been omitted. As regards the first of these points, no report, reliable or unreliable, authentic or fabricated, makes the assertion that anything contained in the Holy Qur-án was not part of the Divine revelation in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, except the solitary report which relates that Ibn-i-Mas'ud blotted out from his copy the last two chapters as contained in our copies of the Holy Qur-án. This I have already discussed, and have clearly shown that Ibn-i-Mas'ud was in error, and that the whole body of the companions opposed him on this point. Ibn-i-Mas'ud thought that these two chapters were meant only to be recited after any portion of the Holy Qur-án was recited, and that, therefore, they could not be embodied in the written copy of the Qur-án; as some men thought of Bismilláh, the opening formula of every chapter of the Qur-án, that it was only meant to begin with, and was not a part of every chapter. It was exactly in this way that Ibn-i-Mas'ud thought that the last two chapters should not be written along with the rest of the Divine revelation. But the opinion of a solitary person, especially when it is clearly seen to be based on a misconception of the real facts, can have no weight against the unanimous testimony of all the other companions, based as that testimony is on their sure and certain knowledge. But, besides this, there is no other report whatever showing that anything which forms a part of the Qur-án at present was not a part of it in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. This circumstance is very valuable in considering the question whether any passage which is not to be found in our copies of the Holy Qur-án was at any time a part of it. Only by means of a profound investigation and searching inquiry could the Holy Qur-án be so collected that nothing might find its way into it which could not be considered a part of it; and as the collection in our hands has been admittedly successful in this respect, it follows that such an inquiry was made. But the same searching inquiry which successfully kept everything out of the Holy Qur-án which was not part of it, must reasonably be taken to have been successful in embodying in the Holy Book everything which was a part of it. Such an inquiry was possible on account of the presence of many of those who knew the whole of the Qur-án by heart, and whose collective testimony as to whether any passage was or was not a part of the Holy Qur-án was the most conclusive and certain proof that could be obtained. Had there been any carelessness, it was as probable that anything should have been lost as that something should have been added. But the absence of all proof as to addition indirectly leads to the conclusion that no passage was overlooked.

The next point on which I wish to lay special stress is the wrong method of drawing inferences from certain reports, a method which is generally followed by all European critics. It is not the collective evidence of reports on which conclusions are based in all cases, but sometimes, when there is a preconceived idea, or where there is a proneness to hostile criticism, a solitary report is made to yield a conclusion which contradicts the strongest historical testimony, however absurd on the face of it such a conclusion may be. There is a large element of historical unreliability in many of the reports, and it was only after great patience and diligent search that the more reliable and authentic reports were compiled by some of the collectors. The chief place among these is occupied by the Bukharee, and, accordingly, it is safest to resort to it where some reports give rise to conflicting evidence. The first rule, then, which should be followed in interpreting reports is to distinguish the reliable from the unreliable generally. Without this we can never be safe in drawing a conclusion from any report. The second rule which should be followed, in the case of conflicting testimony afforded by certain reports, more or less reliable, is to see on which side the weight of evidence lies. But the most important and the surest test of all is, what conclusion is supported by practice?

These tests I shall now apply to the different reports which are relevant to the question of the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án. But before doing this, I will quote the reports on which the objections are based. They are as follows:—

sūra which we likened in length and warning to the Barā'at, but I have forgotten it except this piece: 'If there were for the son of man two valleys of wealth, he would desire a third, and nothing can fill the belly [i.e. satisfy the desire] of the son of man except dust'; and we used to recite a sūra which we likened to one of the Musabbiḥāt [the shorter chapters at the end of the Holy Qur-án], but I have forgotten it, and now remember only this much: 'O you who believe! why do you say what you do not do; surely the testimony of this is written in your necks, and of this you will be questioned on the day of judgment.'"

(b) In the Saḥiḥ Muslim, Kitáb-ur-Riḍá', the following is reported as having been related by 'Ayesha: "Surely in what was revealed of the Qur-án there was this injunction, that ten known acts of suckling are effective in the prohibition of marriage relations, but these were abrogated and replaced by five acts of suckling, and the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, died, and this was among what was recited of the Qur-án."

(c) In the Saḥiḥ Muslim, Kitáb-ul-Ḥudúd, there is a report from 'Abdulla, son of 'Abbas, who quoted the words of 'Umar, son of Khattáb, spoken while he sat in the pulpit: "Surely God raised Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, with truth, and He revealed to him the Book, and there was among what was sent down upon him the verse relating to stoning [of the adulterer and the adulteress]; we read it, and guarded it, and understood it, and the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, stoned [the offenders], and after him we also stone [them]. But I fear that when time lengthens with the people, a sayer will say, 'Surely we do not find stoning in the Book of God,' and thus they will go astray by forsaking an injunction which God has sent down; and surely stoning is truly in the Book of God a punishment for the person who commits adultery, whether man or woman, either after its having been proved by witnesses, or by the woman's conception or the confession of the accused."

(d) In the Itqán, vol. ii. p. 30, 'Ayesha is reported to have said that "there used to be recited two hundred verses in the chapter Al-Aḥzáb in the time of the Holy Prophet, but when 'Usman wrote the copies of the Qur-án, we could not get more of it than what we have now."

(e) In the Itqán, vol. i. p. 81, there is a report from Málik saying that "when the first part of it [the chapter entitled Immunity] came down, the Bismilláh [or the opening formula] also came with it, from which it appears that it was like the Baqrah in its length. And in the copy of Ibn-i-Mas'ud there were 112 chapters, for he did not write the Mu'awwazatán [the last two chapters], and in the copy of Ubayy there were 116 chapters, for he wrote at the end two chapters, Ḥafd and Khala'."

These are the five reports on the basis of which it is sought to establish that some verses, passages, or chapters which once formed part of the Holy Qur-án are not now contained in it. The first question is, Are there any reports which contradict the conclusion that is sought to be drawn from these? If there are, then the next point to be settled will be which set of reports is more reliable, on which side the weight of evidence lies, and which is the conclusion which early practice and established historical facts confirm. It is in the Itqán that the two last-mentioned reports are met with, and the Itqán is the work of Jalal-ud-Din Sayuti, the material for whose writings, as already shown, is entirely drawn from reports of the lowest value—reports of which no trace is to be met with among the earlier generations. Such reports cannot be depended upon even if their evidence is not contradicted by reliable reports, for their own unreliability is sufficient to condemn them. Thus there remain the three reports contained in the Sahih Muslim. In accordance with the first principle laid down above, let us now resort to the Bukháree and see if it supports any of these three narratives of the Muslim, for it must be borne in mind that the Bukháree is our best and highest authority on reports, and so the Muslim world has regarded the work ever since it became public. The Sahih Bukháree, according to the unanimous verdict of all learned Muslims, not only surpassed in authority and reliability all the collections which were made before it, but even the later collections do not approach its trustworthiness. If, then, any report in the Muslim or any other collection contradicts the Bukháree, we should without any hesitation reject such a report. In the present case, however, it is not the testimony of the Bukháree alone which contradicts the three reports quoted above, but there is ample testimony in the Muslim itself and other collections which is against those reports.

Let us take these three reports separately and see how far they can be relied upon. The first mentions an address of Abu Musa Ash'ari to certain reciters of Basrah to the effect that he and the other companions of the Holy Prophet used to recite two súras, but that with the exception of one passage of each of these súras he had forgotten the whole. Both external and internal evidence supplied by the Muslim itself condemns the trustworthiness of this report. For external evidence we will consider first the chain of narrators on whose authority Muslim believed the report to be authentic. On referring to the chain of narrators we find Suwaid bin Sa'id to be the immediate informer of Muslim, and much depends on the circumstance as to how far he can be relied upon. The Mizán-ul-I'tidál by Zahabi is the best and the most reliable work which criticizes the narrators. Referring to this work, we find a long article on Suwaid bin Sa'id, in which a few of the collectors of reports express a good opinion about him, but the majority discredit him. It is, however, agreed upon by all that he attained to a very old age and became blind during his latter days, and in this condition he reported and taught reports which were not really his. Bukharee rejected his evidence as absolutely untrustworthy, and so did most of the other collectors. From an anecdote related of him in the same work it also appears that he had a tendency towards Shi'ism, for we are told that when a person came to him with a book on the excellences of the companions, he placed 'Ali first and then Abu Bakr. Some have gone so far as to condemn him as a liar, but there is no doubt that with the exception of some two or three collectors, Muslim being one of them, all the others agree that reports narrated by him could not be accepted. Abu Daood judges him to be "worth nothing," while Ibn-i-Habban tells us that he was accused of being a zindeeq, or one who concealed unbelief and made an outward show of belief. Muslim's most important and immediate informer, therefore, possessing so unenviable a record for unreliability bordering on mendacity, it is hardly necessary to consider the question of the reliability of the other narrators of this report.

There is another kind of external evidence supplied by Muslim which also contradicts the testimony of the report under discussion. Immediately preceding this report there are recorded in the Muslim four other reports to the same effect, with this difference, that they describe the words here attributed to Abu Musa Ash'ari by the said Suwaid as being remnants of a forgotten chapter of the Qur-án, not as portions of the Holy Qur-án, but as words uttered by the Holy Prophet. According to the first of these, three men, Yahya bin Yahya, Sa'id bin Mansur, and Qutaiba bin Sa'id, informed Muslim, through a chain of narrators ending with Anas, that the Messenger of God, may peace and the blessings of God be upon him, said on one occasion (referring to man's love of riches) that "if there were two valleys of wealth for the son of man, he would still desire to possess a third, and nothing but dust can fill the belly of the son of man, and God certainly repents on him who repents." It will be seen that the words reported here to have been spoken by the Holy Prophet are exactly the same as are related to be a portion of a súrah in the report of Suwaid. Of the three men who vouched the truth and authenticity of this report, two, viz. Sa'id bin Mansur and Yahya bin Yahya, are expressly mentioned in the critical work of Zahabi, the Mizán-ul-I'tidál, as being trustworthy, while of the third it is related that nothing is known about him. This report, therefore, stands on a far firmer basis than that under discussion. As against a single man who has been pronounced a zindeeq, liar, untrustworthy, by the almost unanimous testimony of the collectors, we have here the evidence, furnished by Muslim himself, of three men, two of whom at any rate are admitted to be trustworthy, that the passage in question did not form any part of the Qur-án, but was only the word of the Holy Prophet himself. Three other reports are narrated by Muslim, each of which ascribes the utterance of these words to the Holy Prophet, and none asserts that they were portions of chapters of the Qur-án which were quite forgotten. In one of these reports, to Ibn-i-'Abbas, the first narrator in this case, are ascribed the words that he was not aware "whether it was or was not a portion of the Qur-án," but these words are immediately contradicted by a second narrator, who does not mention the name of Ibn-i-'Abbas in connection with their utterance.

If we turn to Muslim himself, we find that of all the five reports which he has narrated relating to the passage, "If there were two valleys of wealth for the son of man, he would desire a third," such being the heading of his chapter, he has given the least credit to the report related by Suwaid bin Sa'id, who makes the passage in question a remnant of a lost chapter. He begins his chapter with the report related by the three narrators quoted above, then follows it with three others, none of which makes the passage in question a portion of the Qur-án, and then relates the report in dispute, which, by placing it last, he himself hints to be the least credible of all and the lowest in authority. This is not a mere conjecture, for Muslim himself tells us in the introduction to his collection that under each heading he gives the priority in relation to those reports which he considers to be the more reliable. His words, literally translated, run as follows: "We have set this rule before ourselves, that we should mention first those reports which are freer from defects than others, and which on account of the reliability and righteousness of their narrators are purer. . . . And we follow reports of this class with other reports, among whose narrators are men who cannot be relied upon to the same extent as narrators of the first class of reports, because they are not marked by the same degree of truthfulness and the same good memory." These words clearly show that Muslim considered the report under discussion to be the least reliable of all, and hence we should not have the least hesitation in condemning it as false.

I will now consider the internal evidence afforded by the report itself. In the first place, the style of the passage is remarkable. Any one who has any acquaintance with the Arabic language will see that it has no resemblance whatever to the style of the Holy Qur-án, and this consideration is alone sufficient to show that the passage never formed a part of the Holy Qur-án. Secondly, the words attributed to Abu Musa Ash'ari are a clear evidence of the falsity of the report. He is made to say, "We used to recite a sūra," indicating that he was not the only man who could recite the whole of that chapter by heart, but that there were others too. In fact, by "we" he means the companions of the Holy Prophet. The alleged chapter, therefore, must have been well known to the companions. Supposing it was possible that Abu Musa Ash'ari should forget the whole of it with the exception of a single passage, how was it that all the other companions also forgot it at the same time? None of the companions makes the slightest mention of such a chapter having ever formed a part of the Qur-án; none, including Abu Musa Ash'ari, brought it to the notice of Zaid in the time of Abu Bakr, at the time when public announcement was made that any one who had received any portion of the Qur-án from the Holy Prophet should bring such portion, or in the time of 'Usman, when a large number of companions were associated with Zaid to assist him in making copies of the Holy Qur-án. No reciter of the Qur-án ever pointed out that such an important chapter was missing from the Holy Book. Even the codices of Ibn-i-Mas'ud and Ubayy, with their alleged differences, did not contain any trace of such a chapter. Not a single voice out of thousands of the companions was raised in support of Abu Musa, if he ever uttered these words. And, wonder of wonders, men who made long journeys for the sake of ordinary reports made no inquiry about these long chapters of the Qur-án which Abu Musa had unfortunately forgotten. And how was it that Abu Musa himself, who had forgotten these chapters, did not care in the least for their recovery? In fact, the statements made in the report are too absurd to be believed by any sensible person for a single moment. Thus both external and internal evidence clearly show the report to be absolutely false, and not a tittle of evidence can be produced in support of its authenticity or truth. The mere fact that Muslim has recorded it in his collection is no evidence, for, as I have shown, even Muslim did not give it any credit.

A detailed critical examination of the remaining two reports would perhaps be tiresome, and from what has already been written on one, the reader can easily see how unreliable reports of this sort are. It will, therefore, be sufficient to consider briefly the internal evidence which the remaining two reports supply. According to one of these, 'Ayesha is reported to have said that there was a verse in the Holy Qur-án plainly saying that ten known acts of suckling were effective in marriage prohibitions; that this injunction was abrogated by another, by which the number was reduced to five, and that this was recited in the Qur-án at the death of the Holy Prophet. This report must have been wrongly attributed to 'Ayesha. The statement attributed to 'Ayesha in the report gives us to understand clearly that the verse was recited by others than herself. In fact, if there had been any such verse, it could not have remained unknown to the companions generally, for it contained an injunction of daily application. On the other hand, it would have been the best known of all verses. It contained an injunction as to marriage prohibition, and in a society in which the infants were generally suckled by others than their mothers, it was of the utmost importance that everybody should know which were the women with whom marriage was forbidden by reason of foster relationship. Hence the knowledge of the verse could not be limited to a single person. The collectors of reports have laid down a principle that when an event from the very circumstances of the case ought to be known by a large number of people who all disclaim a knowledge of it, this is clear evidence of its fabrication. This principle is a very reasonable one, and it will be easily seen that, judged by it, the report relating to acts of suckling and attributed to 'Ayesha is a clear fabrication. As we have seen, such a verse should have been one of the most well known of all verses. Up to the death of the Holy Prophet, 'Ayesha had heard it recited generally. Six months after this, her father, Abu Bakr, ordered the collection of the Holy Qur-án, and no such verse was brought to his notice or that of Zaid. 'Ayesha herself never told the collectors that any such verse existed. Even at the time when 'Usman made transcripts, 'Ayesha was still living, and no such verse was pointed out even then by her. How was it that she spoke of such a verse to 'Urwa years afterwards and had nothing to say of it to her own father when a collection of the Holy Qur-án was being made under his orders? How was it, again, that no one besides 'Ayesha knew anything of such a verse? As in the case of the report already discussed, there is further evidence in the report recorded by Muslim himself that no such verse was ever known to any of the companions of the Holy Prophet. 'Ayesha and other reporters are represented as giving expression to reports according to which the Holy Prophet was on different occasions asked as to whether one or two acts of suckling were effective in marriage prohibitions. Had there existed a verse plainly stating that ten or five acts of suckling had such an effect, the question would never have been asked. Nor can it be supposed that the verse was revealed on such questions being asked, for in such a case the report would have clearly stated that such and such a revelation was received by the Holy Prophet on the question being asked. Therefore all considerations point to the fabrication of the report we are discussing.

The third report that remains may now be disposed of in a few words. The conclusion which is drawn from the words of 'Umar is that a passage regarding the punishment of adulterers and adulteresses was known to 'Umar and the other companions to be a part of the Qur-án, but that it was not met with in the Qur-án. 'Umar is said to have also related that that passage was recited and kept in memory and understood, and that the Holy Prophet acted upon it and so did his successors after him. Now, it may be asked—'Umar himself being the man who had the greatest hand in the collection of the Qur-án, and the copy made being in his possession during his caliphate—what was it that led to the omission of the passage? With regard to the passage in question there can be only two propositions: (1) 'Umar and the other companions agreed that the passage was a part of the Qur-án; (2) 'Umar held the opinion that it was a part of the Qur-án, but the other companions rejected his view. Now, if they all agreed that the passage was a part of the Qur-án, who withheld them from placing it in the Holy Book? The first proposition is, therefore, evidently absurd. As regards the second proposition, there is no evidence at all that 'Umar's statement was contradicted by any of the companions. But if it were actually contradicted, 'Umar must himself have been convinced of his error by not finding any support from any of the other companions. Thus either the report must be rejected as having been wrongly attributed to 'Umar or it should be taken that there was a misconception on the part of 'Umar. Possibly there can be a third explanation, that the words "Book of God" as used in the report do not indicate the Qur-án, but simply an ordinance of God, as in the Holy Qur-án, 4 : 24, where Kitáb-Alláh-i 'alaikum means Allah's ordinance to you.

It will be seen from the above that no reliability can be attached to all these reports. But it will be asked, How was it that fabricated reports derogatory to Islam found a currency among the Muslims and were embodied in their collections by some well-known collectors? It should be borne in mind that the fabrication was effected at a later period by the zindeeqs. In the case of one of these reports, the character of whose first reporter has been laid bare, we have seen that he was accused of being a zindeeq. Yet Muslim accepted his authority, though he did not attach much weight to it. One reason of this, probably, was that at the time when Muslim wrote his hidden feelings had not been seen into. It was in this way that some false reports derogatory to the dignity of Islam found currency and gained credit. But in most cases critical inquiry regarding the narrators of reports has successfully sifted the unreliable from the reliable reports. And, even if external evidence did not exist, a critical study of such reports is in itself sufficient. And lastly, when differing statements clash with one another, we have to see on which side the weight of evidence lies. For instance, take the report traced back to Abu Musa Ash'ari. Even if Muslim himself had not discredited it, even if Suwaid were not known to be a zindeeq, we should have, on the one hand, the evidence of Abu Musa Ash'ari that two chapters were recited by the companions, but that he had forgotten them at the time when he mentioned this circumstance; and on the other hand we have the evidence of all the companions disclaiming all knowledge of any such chapters. No reciter of the Qur-án, no one who possessed any transcription of the Holy Book, had ever heard of them. How can the evidence of one man carry any weight against the unanimous testimony of all the companions?—especially when that evidence relates to a circumstance the existence of which, if it ever existed, must have come to the knowledge of a very large number. Had there been the evidence of even two or three companions, there might have been cause for doubt in the mind of the historian, but such a claim made on the evidence of a single person, when negatived by the evidence of thousands of better informed witnesses, is the most preposterous claim that has ever been made. And what is true of this one report is true of every other report belonging to the same class. In each case we have the evidence of only one person, whose testimony is quite unsupported. Abu Musa Ash'ari is said to have asserted that two chapters were lost: there is nobody else to support him; 'Ayesha is alleged to have asserted the loss of some verses: she cannot produce the evidence of a single other witness from among thousands of companions; and so with all the others. Where Ibn-i-Mas'ud makes an assertion, Ubayy's evidence, along with that of the whole body of companions, goes against him, and where Ubayy makes an assertion, Ibn-i-Mas'ud's evidence, along with that of all the rest of the companions, contradicts him. In fact, each of these reports has but a single companion to support it. It may be added that the evidence of one witness could not prove that any verse really belonged to the Holy Qur-án, for it is a fact borne out by numerous reports that every verse of the Qur-án was widely published at the time of its revelation, and was secured in the memories of many reciters. The anecdote related at the end of the report, speaking of Zaid's collection in the time of Abu Bakr, which is to the effect that a certain verse of the chapter entitled Bará'at was not found in the possession of anybody except Abu Khuzaima, does not negative this conclusion, for, as I have already shown, it is the verse in writing that is meant there, as other reports show that there was a considerable number of men who could recite the whole of the Qur-án from memory. In short, the evidence of a single companion as against the unanimous testimony of all the others is absolutely devoid of weight.

The third criterion by which such reports may be judged is to ascertain how far early practice supports the conclusions to which they give rise. The Qur-án, after the Holy Prophet, was the most valuable thing which the Muslims had in their possession, and every Muslim, no doubt, did his best to have it preserved and transmitted in all its purity to the next generation. Now, supposing for the sake of argument that 'Usman arbitrarily suppressed certain copies, was it in his power to destroy every transcript of every verse or chapter in the possession of the widely spread community of the Muslims? Supposing he could seize the copies of such prominent men as Ibn-i-Mas'ud, how could he get hold of the numerous transcripts that must have been made from Ibn-i-Mas'ud and others? For the practice of early Muslims shows that transcripts of the Holy Qur-án were extensively made. If any of the Muslims had therefore considered 'Usman's copy to be defective, and they had in their possession any transcript substantially differing from it, they would experience no difficulty in keeping it hidden during the reign of 'Usman. In such a case, however, such copies would have become abundant as soon as 'Usman's power declined, or at least during the reign of 'Ali, who could not have any motive to continue the policy of 'Usman with regard to the suppression of variant copies. During the reign of 'Ali, therefore, many other copies would have come into circulation, and even if he had not the courage to stop the circulation of 'Usman's copy he would have favourably regarded the circulation of other copies. But the wonder is that even the men who murdered 'Usman did not interfere with the circulation of 'Usman's copy of the Holy Qur-án, nor did they put into circulation a different edition or a new chapter or even a single new verse. They never pointed out that a single word in the Divine revelation had been changed by 'Usman. When 'Usman's power ceased to exist, or when he himself was murdered in cold blood by the insurgents, what hindrance was there then to the circulation of parts which 'Usman might have suppressed? Even if the transcripts could by some extraordinary means be all destroyed, the words imprinted on the living tablets of Muslim hearts could not be blotted out by any means in the power of a mortal. It was simply impossible. The end of 'Usman's reign would have seen the circulation of all these parts which, it is alleged, had been suppressed by him, and such parts would no doubt have then been embodied in the copies of the Qur-án. But history shows no trace of any such happening. With all their differences, different men and different sects have always used one and the same copy of the Qur-án. Had any difference actually existed, such difference must have appeared in subsequent copies of the Qur-án; but the use of the same Qur-án by sects which have sometimes had the deadliest designs against each other shows clearly that no difference actually existed.

The recent "discovery" of Dr. Mingana, who has given us Leaves from Three Ancient Qur-áns, has proved from a critical point of view as great a failure in assailing the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án as the unwarranted assertions of earlier writers. Certain leaves are said to have been bought by Dr. Agnes Lewis from a commercial antiquary, containing three writings crossing each other, the oldest of these writings being some passages of the Qur-án. When these passages were written and who wrote them are questions which Dr. Mingana has not answered. All statements to the effect that they are pre-'Usmanic, or copies made from pre-'Usmanic manuscripts, are simply conjectures, boldly put forward as "facts" to attract public attention. And what are the differences that are shown to exist? That certain words are written in a different style of writing; that there are some variants (three in all); that there are three omissions, huwa, káffah and má-lakum, in three places, and that there is one addition, the word Allah.

This "discovery" is, I think, additional proof that the text of the Holy Qur-án is the one and the same. and has always remained the same, for these leaves do not show the omission, addition, or variation of any verse or part of a verse, or any change in the order of a chapter or in the order of the verses contained in a chapter, nor do they show that any verse was misplaced. Substantially, the Qur-án as found in these manuscripts is the same as that of the received text. If there are any differences, they are such as would necessarily arise in the transcription of copies by inexperienced hands. Mistakes would necessarily occur in making transcriptions from other copies, and it was to guard against such mistakes that 'Usman caused the official copies to be prepared, so that all copies made should be compared with them and mistakes arising in transcription should thus be corrected. It is clear that the very few mistakes discovered in these ancient leaves are the mistakes of transcription by inexperienced hands, as the text given by Dr. Mingana clearly shows; for instance, writing ضلل instead of ضلال ; واعرضن instead of واعرض ; قرن instead of قرآن ; يناللوا instead of ينالوا ; اذنا instead of اذاننا ; and so on. These are clear mistakes of transcription, as recognized by Dr. Mingana, and it is rather amusing to find him contesting the purity of the text of the Holy Qur-án on the basis of certain stray leaves, containing unknown and uncultured writing, once obliterated to give place to quite another writing. If there is an omission in these leaves it is not due to a clerical mistake of the writer, according to Dr. Mingana, but it is a clear proof that the received text was interpolated, and this in spite of the admission that it is uncertain which of the two was written first. It is clear from this that bias against the Holy Qur-án quite unbalanced the mind of Dr. Mingana. The "discovery" of the manuscripts only shows that there has always been only one text of the Holy Qur-án. As for the alleged variations, it may be said, without entering into details, that they are partly due to a slip of the pen of the scribe, partly to the rubbing off of the vellum for a second writing, partly to cross super-impositions, and partly, perhaps, to doubtful reading on the part of Dr. Mingana himself. The smallest variation in the style of writing has been proclaimed to be a variation giving an entirely different meaning, as in the case of the word báraknà, occurring in 17:1, which means We have blessed, whether written as بٰرکنا, or as بارکنا, the former being the style adopted by the Qur-án, the variation in Dr. Mingana's manuscript only omitting the alif written over the letter bá.

As regards the fifth objection, viz. that the Shias regard the Qur-án as incomplete, the following remarks from Muir's Life of Mohammad, which has raised and answered this question, will be a sufficient answer. He says :—

"Assuming, then, that we possess unchanged the text of 'Usman's recension, it remains to inquire whether that text was an honest reproduction of Zaid's, with the simple reconcilement of unimportant variations. There is the fullest ground for believing that it was so. No early or trustworthy tradition throws suspicions upon 'Usman of tampering with the Qur-án in order to support his own claims. The Shias, indeed, of later times pretend that 'Usman left out certain súras or passages which favoured 'Ali. But this is incredible. When 'Usman's edition was prepared, no open breach had taken place between the Omeyyads and the 'Alyites. The unity of Islam was still unthreatened. 'Ali's pretensions were as yet undeveloped. No sufficient object can, therefore, be assigned for the perpetration by 'Usman of an offence which Muslims would have regarded as one of the blackest die. Again, at the time of the recension, there were still multitudes alive who had learnt the Qur-án by heart as they had heard it originally delivered; and copies of any passages favouring 'Ali, if any such passages ever existed, must have been in the hands of his numerous adherents, both of which sources would have proved an effectual check upon any attempt at suppression. Further, the party of 'Ali, immediately on 'Usman's death, assumed an independent attitude, and raised him to the Caliphate. Is it conceivable that, when thus arrived at power, they would have tolerated a mutilated Qur-án, mutilated expressly to destroy their leader's claim? Yet we find that they continued to use the same Qur-án as their opponents and raised not the slightest objection against it."

The Shias, however, do not all believe that portions of the Holy Qur-án have been lost or that passages favouring 'Ali's claims were intentionally omitted by Zaid or 'Usman. The vast majority of them admit that the Holy Qur-án has been handed down to us in all its purity. Such is the belief of the more learned Shias, while it is largely the ignorant masses that think that some portions have been lost. In the Tafsir Sáfi, an important Shia commentary on the Holy Qur-án, the author, Mulla Muhsin, thus denounces the ignorant Shias who taught that certain portions were lost:—

"Certain men from among us and the Hashwia masses have reported that the Qur-án has suffered loss and alteration. But the true belief of our friends is against this, and such is the belief of the vast majority. For the Qur-án is a miracle of the Holy Prophet and the source of all knowledge relating to law and all religious injunctions, and the learned Muslims have taken the utmost pains for its protection, so that there is nothing relating to its vowel-points, its recital, its letters, and its verses, which they do not know. With such strong measures of protection and such faithful preservation of the Holy Book [by the Muslims] it cannot be supposed that any alteration or loss could take place" (p. 14).

The learned author goes on to say:—

"Surely the Qur-án was collected and arranged in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet exactly as it is in our hands. This is inferred from the fact that the Qur-án was even then recited and committed to memory as a whole, and there was a body of the companions whose duty it was to commit it to memory. It was also recited and read out as a whole to the Holy Prophet [by the angel]. A large number of the companions, as 'Abdulla bin Mas'ud and Ubayy bin Ka'b, had finished the Holy Qur-án in the presence of the Holy Prophet several times. All these facts show conclusively that the Holy Qur-án was complete and collected in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and it was not dispersed or scattered. It has been stated that those from among the Hashwia and Imamia sects [of the Shias] who hold a contrary view are nothing when compared with the vast majority who hold the right view. It should also be borne in mind that the contrary view was held only by some of the reporters who gave circulation to very weak and unreliable reports."

After this, Mulla Muhsin quotes the opinions of several learned Shias, honoured and respected by the whole Shia world, who taught in clear words that "the Qur-án as sent down by God to His Prophet is exactly what is now between the two boards [that is, in the written volume] and in the hands of the people." He also quotes a report the trustworthiness of which has never been questioned by any Shia. That report also supports the conclusion that the Holy Qur-án has come down to us without the alteration or loss of a single word or letter.

The above quotations are sufficient to show that learned Shia theologians agree with all the other Islamic sects in holding the contents and arrangement of the Qur-án to be exactly in the condition in which the Holy Prophet left them. In fact, it is easy to see that if, as is admitted on all hands, the Holy Qur-án could be handed down to us from the time of 'Usman without any alteration or loss, during a long period of nearly thirteen hundred years, with the Muslims spread in every country and in all corners of the world, all agreeing upon one and the same book with no variation, not even so much as of a letter or a vowel-point, it is the height of absurdity to suppose that alteration or loss could take place in the thirteen years after the death of the Holy Prophet, when the Muslims were all yet in one place, and when many of those were still living who had learnt the whole of the Qur-án by heart direct from the Holy Prophet. The circumstances which contributed to the preservation of the purity of the text and arrangement of the Holy Qur-án after 'Usman were present even in a greater degree in the early Muslim society. The companions of the Holy Prophet and the early Muslims all knew and believed that nothing had been lost or omitted from the Holy Qur-án. Bukharee tells us in a report, the truth of which has never been questioned, that when Ibn-i-'Abbas and Muhammad bin Hanfiah ('Ali's son by a wife belonging to the Hanafi tribe) were asked as to what the Holy Prophet had left behind him, they both replied: "He left nothing but what is contained between the two boards," i.e. in the copies of the Qur-án as circulated by 'Usman, for it was to these copies that the words má bain-ad-daffatain, or "what is contained between the two boards," were first applied.

In conclusion, I should like to say that my object in dealing at some length with the above two points, viz. the summary of the teachings of the Holy Qur-án and its collection and arrangement, is to give the reader of this volume an idea how religion has been made perfect in Islam and then guarded against every corruption; and thus I have established the two points which demonstrate Islam to be the final religion of the world, under the banner of which all the nations may gather together and form one vast brotherhood of humanity. We know that not only has no other scripture ever advanced the claim of being a perfect and final manifestation of the Divine will, as the Qur-án has done, but further, that every religious scripture revealed before the Holy Qur-án has undergone alterations in the course of time, and the Holy Qur-án is therefore the only Book that can be a true guide for an ever-advancing humanity.

Chief features of the work.

So much for the sacred work of which a translation is offered in this volume. As regards the translation itself, I need not say much. That a need was felt for a translation of the Holy Book with full explanatory notes, in spite of the existing translations, is universally admitted; that this translation satisfies that need, only time will decide. I may, however, say that as regards the translation (as distinguished from the explanatory notes) I have tried to be more faithful to the words of the Holy Writ than all existing translations in the English language, among which Palmer has remained nearest to the words. I have, however, given up the antiquated thou (except when the Divine Being is addressed), but have in all such cases, and in other cases where sense would have been sacrificed by a too literal rendering, given the exact significance of the original in the margin, showing the departure by the use of italics. It will be noticed that additional words as explaining the sense of the original have generally been avoided, and where necessary—and these cases are very few—they are given within brackets. Occasionally, alternative significances of words have also been noted in the margin, the use of italics in the translation pointing to the other significance. Wherever a departure has been made from the ordinary or primary significance of a word, reason for this departure has been given in a foot-note and authorities have been amply quoted.

There are some novel features in this translation. The Arabic text has been inserted, the translation and the text occupying opposite columns. Each verse begins with a new line in both the text and the translation, and verses are numbered to facilitate reference. Necessary explanations are given in foot-notes in running numbers, and generally either authorities are quoted or reasons given for the opinion expressed. This made the work very laborious, but I have undertaken this labour to make the work a real source of satisfaction to those who might otherwise be inclined to be sceptical regarding many statements which will appear new to the ordinary reader. I have tried to avoid repetition in the explanatory foot-notes by giving a reference in the margin where repetition was necessary, but I must confess that these references are far from being exhaustive. When the significance of a word has been explained in one place it has been thought unnecessary, except in rare cases, to make a reference to it in the margin. For the reader's facility I have, however, added a list of the words explained, and the reader may refer to it when necessary. This list, however, contains only those words and phrases about which the reader is likely to feel any difficulty.

Besides the foot-notes, ample introductory notes have been given at the commencement of each chapter. These introductory notes give the abstract of each chapter in sections, at the same time showing the connection of the sections and also explaining that of the different chapters with each other. And at the commencement of each section is added an abstract of that section, which explains the connection with each other of the verses of that section, being supplemented, when necessary, by an explanation in the foot-notes. The arrangement of the verses in a chapter and the arrangement of the chapters themselves is thus made clear. This feature of the translation is altogether new, and will, I hope, in course of time, prove of immense service in eradicating the idea which is so prevalent now that there is no arrangement in the verses and chapters of the Holy Qur-án. It is quite true that the Qur-án does not classify the different subjects and treat them separately in each section or chapter. The reason of this is that the Holy Qur-án is not a book of laws, but essentially a book meant for the spiritual and moral advancement of man, and therefore the power, greatness, grandeur, and glory of God is its chief theme, the principles of social laws enunciated therein being also meant to promote the moral and spiritual advancement of man. But that there exists an arrangement will be clear even to the most superficial observer of the introductory notes on these chapters. It will be further noted that the Meccan and Medinian revelations are beautifully welded together, and there are groups of chapters belonging to about one time and relating to one subject. The introductory notes also show whether a particular chapter was revealed at Mecca or Medina, and also the probable period to which it belongs. Exact dates and specified order of the revelation of different chapters are often mere conjectures, and therefore I have avoided this useless task. On account of the various events referred to in Medina revelation, it is often easier to give a probable date of the Medinian revelations, but no such help being obtainable in the case of the Meccan revelation, I have thought it safer to divide the Meccan revelation into three periods, and any chapter can with a certain degree of probability be referred to one or other of these periods. I take the early Meccan period to about the first flight to Abysinnia, the middle Meccan period to four years previous to the Hejira, while the last four years of that period I designate as the last Meccan period.

The references to the authorities quoted in the notes are explained in the list of abbreviations given on p. cxiii. Among the commentators, I have made the greatest use of the voluminous commentaries of Imam Fakhr-ud-Din Razi (known as Tafsir-i-Kabir, or the Great Commentary), Imam Asirud Din Abu Hayyan (known as the Baḥr-ul-Muḥiṭ), and Ibn-i-Jarir Tabri, and the shorter but by no means less valuable commentaries of Zamakhshari (known as Kashsháf), Baiḍáwi and Jámi'-ul-Bayán. Among the lexicons, the Táj-ul-'Arús and the Lisán-ul-'Arab are voluminous standard works and have been freely consulted, but the smaller work of Imam Raghib Isphhani, known as the Mufradát fi gharib-il-Qur-án, has afforded immense help, and it undoubtedly occupies the first place among the standard works in Arabic lexicology so far as the Qur-án is concerned. The valuable dictionary of Hadees, the Niháyah of Ibn-i-Asir, has also proved very serviceable in explaining many a moot point. It will, however, be noted that I have more often referred to Lane's Arabic-English Lexicon, a work the value of which for the English student of Arabic can hardly be overestimated; this has been done purposely, so that the reader of this volume may have the facility to refer to an easily accessible work. Besides commentaries and lexicons, historical and other works have also been consulted. Among the collections of reports, Bukharee's Kitáb-ut-Tafsir, or chapter on the commentary of the Holy Qur-án, has been before me throughout. And lastly, the greatest religious leader of the present time, Mirza Ghulam Ahmad of Qadian, has inspired me with all that is best in this work. I have drunk deep at the fountain of knowledge which this great reformer—Mujaddid and Mehdi in Islam, of the present century—and founder of the Ahmadiyya movement, has made to flow. There is one more person whose name I must mention in this connection, the late Maulvi Hakim Nurud Din, who in his last long illness patiently went through much the greater part of the explanatory notes and made many valuable suggestions. To him, indeed, the Muslim world owes a great debt of gratitude as the leader of the new turn given to the exposition of the Holy Qur-án. He has done his work and passed away silently, but it is a fact that he spent the whole of his life in studying the Holy Qur-án, and must be ranked with the greatest expositors of the Holy Book. It is a pity that his valuable Arabic commentary has not yet been given to the world, but when that manuscript sees the light, it will reveal that he was one of the master minds.

The principle of the greatest importance to which I have adhered in interpreting the Holy Qur-án is that no word of the Holy Book should be interpreted in such a manner as to contradict the plainer teachings of the Holy Qur-án, a principle to which the Holy Word has itself called the attention of its reader in 3 : 6; see 387. This rule forms the basis of my interpretation of the Qur-án, and this is a very sound basis, if we remember that the Holy Qur-án contains metaphors, parables, and allegories side by side with plain teachings. Practice (sunnat) and sayings of the Holy Prophet when contained in reliable reports are the best commentary of the Holy Word, and I have therefore attached the greatest importance to them. Earlier authorities have also to be respected, but reports and comments contradicting the Qur-án itself cannot but be rejected. I have also kept before me the rule that the meaning to be adopted in any case should be that which suits the context best, and the only other limitation to which I have subjected myself is that the use of that word in that sense is allowed by the lexicons or by the Arabic literature. Existing translations have rendered me great help, but I have adopted an interpretation only after fully satisfying myself and having recourse to original authorities. Many of the stories generally accepted by the commentators find no place in my commentary, except in cases where there is either sufficient historical evidence or the corroborative testimony of some reliable saying of the Holy Prophet. Many of these stories were, I believe, incorporated into the Islamic literature by the flow of converts from Judaism and Christianity into Islam. Nor have I placed much reliance upon the stories of sha'n-i-nazúl (i.e. the occasion on which a particular verse was revealed), accepting their evidence when necessary as affording an illustration of the significance underlying a verse. A full discussion as to the principles and rules of interpretation I reserve for a separate exposition. But I must add that the present tendency of the Muslim theologians to regard the commentaries of the Middle Ages as the final word on the interpretation of the Holy Qur-án is very injurious, and practically shuts out the great treasures of knowledge which an exposition of the Holy Book in the new light reveals. A study of the old commentators, to ignore whose great labours would indeed be a sin, also shows how freely they commented upon the Holy Book. The great service which they have done to the cause of truth would indeed have been lost to the world if they had looked upon their predecessors as uttering the final word on the exposition of the Holy Qur-án, as most theologians do to-day.

The laborious work which I now place before the public has kept me occupied for about seven years, and has had, in fact, to be hastened on account of the impatience of the public. I am conscious of the many defects which will be met with in the present volume, and only hope that when there is a demand for a second edition I shall be able to revise this work thoroughly. I cannot, however, bring this Preface to a close without acknowledging the heavy debt of gratitude I owe to my learned friend and brother, the Maulvi Sadr ud Din, B.A., B.T., at present Imam of the Mosque at Woking (England), who has, while pressed with heavy work in connection with the Woking Muslim Mission, helped me with untiring energy and zeal in bringing out this work. He has not only thoroughly revised and corrected the proofs, which work would have been impossible for me at such a distance, but he has, in fact, been solely responsible for getting this work through the press, looking carefully to the minutest details of the work. And lastly, all those gentlemen are to be thanked who have assisted the Ahmadiyya Anjuman-i-Isha'at-i-Islam, Lahore, with generous donations, and thus enabled it to bring out the first edition of this work. And all praise is due to Allah, the Lord of the worlds, who enabled us all to perform our share in this noble undertaking.

PART I

CHAPTER I

THE OPENING

(Al-Fâtiḥah)

REVEALED AT MECCA

(7 verses)

Abstract:
1. ALLAH, the Lord of the whole creation, brings the creation to its goal of completion. 2. His loving beneficence and mercy are exercised both before and after man makes himself deserving of them. 3. His dealing with man is as that of a master with his servants, and therefore His law of requital is characterized by forgiveness. 4. Man's dependence on Him and His assistance of man. 5–7. Prayer for being kept always on the right or the middle path and not to be diverted to either side.

General Remarks.

The Fâtiḥah or the Opening is known under various other names. It is spoken of as Sab'an minal Masânî or the Seven Oft-repeated Verses in the Qur-án itself (15 : 87) because its seven verses are constantly repeated by every Muslim in his prayers at least thirty-two times a day. It is spoken of as the Fâtiḥat-ul-Kitâb or the Opening of the Book in a saying of the Holy Prophet in which it is said that "No prayer is complete without the recitation of Fâtiḥat-ul-Kitâb" (AD, Tr.). Hence it is also called Sûrat uṣ Ṣalât, i.e. the chapter of Prayer, being essential to every prayer whether performed in congregation or in private. It is also called Sûrat-ud-Du'â, i.e. the chapter of Supplication, because the entire chapter is a supplication or a prayer to the Great Master, and because as a prayer it not only occupies the highest place among the prayers of other sacred books, but also among those taught by the Holy Qur-án itself. It is also called Ummul-Kitâb, i.e. the Basis of the Book, because it contains the whole of the Qur-án as it were in a nutshell. Some of the other names given to this chapter are the Praise, the Thanksgiving, the Foundation, the Treasure, the Whole, the Sufficient, the Healer, and the Healing.

Al-Fâtiḥah or Fâtiḥat-ul-Kitâb contains seven verses in a single section, and was revealed at Mecca, being without doubt one of the earliest revelations. Muir, who divides the whole of the Meccan revelation into five periods, places the Fâtiḥah in the first period—though he is mistaken in placing it before even the 96th chapter, for which there is overwhelming evidence as being the first revelation. It is, of course, impossible to give the exact date or even the exact order in which the various chapters were revealed, but there is not the least doubt that the Fâtiḥah must be placed among the earliest revelations. It is referred to in 15 : 87 as the Seven Oft-repeated Verses, a name by which this chapter is generally known, and the 15th chapter, which is undoubtedly Meccan, can by no means be placed among the latest Meccan revelations. Again, it is a fact that the Fâtiḥah formed an essential part of the Muslim prayers from the earliest days when prayer was made obligatory for the Muslims, and there is a vast mass of evidence showing that this happened very early after the Prophet's call. For not only is the fact referred to in the earliest revelations, such as the 73rd chapter, but there are also other historical incidents showing that prayer was observed by the earliest Muslim converts. The Holy Prophet's removal to the house of Arqam is a historical fact of undoubted truth, and it occurred at the latest in the fourth year of his preaching, and this removal was necessitated by the troubles caused to the Muslims on account of their saying prayers in places which were not safe from the interference of the unbelievers. Thus the story of Sa'd, who "retired for prayer with a group of believers to a valley near Mecca," and the occurrence of an affray with some of his neighbours, as narrated by Muir, may be taken as a preliminary to the choice of Arqam's house so as to avoid interruption.

The chapter is headed by the words Bismilláh-ir-Raḥmán-ir-Raḥím, which also head every one of the other 114 chapters of the Holy Qur-án with the exception of one only, the ninth, while the same sentence occurs once in the middle of a chapter, viz. in 27 : 30, thus occurring 114 times in the Holy Qur-án. The phrase has besides acquired such a wide usage among the Muslims that it is the first thing which a Muslim child learns, and in his everyday affairs the Bismilláh is the first word which a Muslim utters.

The Bismilláh is the quintessence of the chapter Fatiḥáh, in the same manner as the latter is the quintessence of the Qur-án itself. By commencing every important affair with the Bismilláh the Muslim in fact shows in the midst of his everyday life affairs that the right attitude of the human mind towards the Great Mind of the universe is that it should always seek a support in the Mighty One who is the source of all strength, and thus Divine Unity finds expression in the practical life of man in a manner unapproached anywhere else in the history of religion.

The revelation of the Bismilláh seems to have soon followed the first revelation of the opening verses of Chapter 96, for it forms a part of even the shortest chapter revealed to the Holy Prophet. Moreover, the words of the Bismilláh show a deep connection with the account of the first revelation as given by the Holy Prophet himself. He was in the well-known cave of Hira when the first message came to him. This message was brought by an angel, who asked the Holy Prophet to read. "I am not one who can read," was the reply. The request and the answer were repeated thrice, when the angel said: "Read in the name of your Lord Who created, He created man from a clot; read and your Lord is most Honourable" (Bkh). And as the Prophet, who on the most trustworthy testimony did not know either reading or writing, was able to read with the help of the Lord, even so is every Muslim taught to seek the help of Allah, the Beneficent the Merciful, in everything that he seeks to do. The Bismilláh must thus have immediately followed the very first revelation.

Besides the word Alláh, which in the Arabic language is the proper name of the Divine Being, there occur in the Bismilláh the two chief attributive names Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím, which signify respectively the Beneficent One Who exercises His love towards all His creatures in providing for them before they come into existence, and the Merciful One Who deals mercifully with His servants in making their humble deeds bear fruit. Thus, in addition to the dependence of man on his Divine Maker, the Bismilláh teaches the absolute and transcendental Unity of the Divine Being in the use of the word Allah, which was never applied to any other object of worship by the Arabs, and His great and unbounded love and mercy for His creatures in the use of the two words Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím. So great is His love that He requires no compensation for its exercise, as the Christian doctrine of atonement teaches, and so great is His mercy that He can make the deeds of man bear an unbounded fruit, and the gift of His salvation is therefore permanent and not temporary, as taught by the Vedic religion.

Rodwell's suggestion that the Bismilláh in the form in which it appears in the Holy Qur-án was first taught to the Quraish by the poet Umayya of Táif seems to have been due to some misconception, for there is unimpeachable testimony to show that the Quraish not only did not know the name Ar-Raḥmán of the Divine Being, to which they asserted themselves to be utter strangers (25 : 60), but that they were averse to the use of the Bismilláh itself in the form in which it was taught by the Holy Prophet. For so late as the sixth year of Hejira, when a truce was drawn up between the Muslims and the Quraish, Suhail ibn-i-'Amru, on behalf of the Quraish, refused to prefix Bismilláh-ir-Raḥmán-ir-Raḥím to the agreement, saying "I do not know this," and the agreement was therefore headed by Bismika Alláhumma, the form in common use among the Quraish (Tb). That some nations had some such form which they prefixed to their writings cannot be denied, but the mere existence among any other people, as the Jews or the Sabeans or the Zoroastrians, of any expression which they prefixed to their writings does not show that the Holy Prophet had borrowed the idea from here or there. It is in the choice of the words that the real beauty lies, for the real message of Islam was the perfection of religion, and this perfection is made clear in its Bismilláh, in the very first words with which it opens. Islam has never claimed that what it preached was never preached to the world before; on the other hand, it lays claim to purifying and making perfect the old doctrines (5 : 3). Even the words Bakhsháishgar and Dádár, meaning respectively the Pardoner and the Just, make no approach to the beauty of the two fundamental attributes of love and mercy made manifest in the words Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím. The choice of these two attributes of love and mercy as the prime attributes of the Divine Being is sufficient comment on the misstatements of the carpers at Islam, who misrepresent the God of Islam as a Cruel and Wrathful Being.

The Fátiḥah has a special importance as a prayer, being an essential part of every prayer, whether offered in congregation or in private. Its Oft-repeated Seven Verses constitute the prayer for guidance of every Muslim at least thirty-two times a day, and therefore it has a much greater importance for him than the Lord's prayer for a Christian. And there is another difference too. The latter is instructed to pray for the coming of the kingdom of God, whereas the Muslim is instructed to seek for his right place in that kingdom, which had already come, the hint no doubt being that the coming of the Holy Prophet was really the advent of the kingdom of God about whose approach Jesus preached to his followers (Mark 1 : 15). Thus the prayer is a model prayer taught to the Muslims, and the objection as to the inconsistency of the form of address adopted here with the Divine authorship of the Book vanishes in the light of these facts. The numerous prayers contained in the Holy Qur-án follow the same rule and are never preceded by the word "say" or any other word to that effect. For instance, compare the prayer contained in the concluding verse of the 2nd chapter, and also the prayer contained in 3 : 7, 8 and 3 : 190-193 and elsewhere. That a form of prayer or supplication is meant for the supplicant is so clear that any introductory word commanding men to pray in that form would have been superfluous.

Some hostile critics have suggested that such a prayer is suited only for blind and sinful men groping in the dark to find out the way. Surely it is a very distorted view of the sublime words, which express the natural yearning of the sincere soul to be kept on the right way and to be saved from stumbling. The prayer contained in this chapter is the sublimest of all the prayers that exist in any religion, and occupies the first place among all the prayers contained in the Qur-án itself. A chorus of praise has gone forth for it from the greatest detractors of the Holy Qur-án, and they have been compelled to "admire its spirit." The entire chapter is composed of seven verses, the first three of which speak of the four chief Divine attributes, viz. providence, beneficence, mercy, and requital, thus giving expression to the grandeur and praise of the Divine Being, and the last three lay open before the Great Maker the earnest desire of man's soul to walk in righteousness without stumbling on either side, while the middle one is expressive of man's entire dependence on Allah. The attributes referred to are those which disclose Allah's all-encompassing beneficence and care, and His unbounded love for all of His creatures, and the ideal to which the soul is made to aspire is the highest to which man can rise, the path of righteousness, the path of grace, and the path in which there is no stumbling. If, on the one hand, the narrow views which addressed the Divine Being as the Lord of a particular nation are swept off before the mention of His equal providence and equal love for all mankind, nay for all the creatures that exist in all the worlds, and the idea of paternal care and affection contained in the word Father dwindles into insignificance before the all-embracing beneficence and love of the Rabb of all existence Who provides and regulates the means of existence, nourishment, and perfection of the creatures long before they come into existence, there is, on the other, the high aspiration of the soul for an unbounded spiritual rise unhampered by all considerations of cares of the body which craves for the "daily bread," and even of solicitude for forgiveness of wrongs done and injuries inflicted, for the soul seeks to rise to a place where wrongs and injuries are not known. It makes the soul aspire to the great spiritual eminence to which arose those to whom Allah was gracious, the prophets, the truthful, the faithful, and the righteous (4 : 71). It sets before the eye that high goal, the goal of Divine grace wherein is no displeasure and which is beyond the reach of error. With all its beauty, even the Lord's prayer sinks into insignificance before the all-comprehensiveness and majestic glory of the Fátiḥah, and one would in vain turn over the pages of sacred books to find anything approaching the grand and sublime ideas contained in this chapter of the Holy Qur-án.

The four attributes of the Divine Being mentioned here are, moreover, a refutation of the wrong conceptions of the fundamental principles of faith met with in some of the prominent religions of the world. The name Rabb, for instance, which signifies Divine providence, indicates that all things in creation are so made as to attain gradually to a state of perfection within their spheres of capacity, and thus points out the erroneousness of the doctrine of the "Fall of man," which upholds that an original state of perfection has given place to degeneration. The designation of the Divine Being as Lord of the worlds gives a death-blow to all narrow views of the spiritual blessings and their limitation to certain territorial bounds, racial distinctions, or particular times, and thus makes clear that the highest of these blessings, the gift of Divine revelation, could neither be limited to a particular country nor to a particular nation, nor yet to a particular age. The attribute of loving beneficence in Ar-Raḥmán is a refutation of the doctrines of atonement and sonship, as it directs attention to the fact that benefits are conferred on man by the Divine Being without exacting any compensation from him, Ar-Raḥmán being the Beneficent Lord whose manifold blessings are conferred on man without his ever having done anything to deserve them. The attribute of mercy in Ar-Raḥím points out the error of the Vedic doctrine which teaches that the Divine Being is unable to give manifold and unlimited reward for limited acts of man and that therefore his salvation, even when it has been earned after going through innumerable states of life, must be shortlived, for Ar-Raḥím signifies the Merciful Being Who multiplies rewards to an unlimited extent. And the last attribute, mastership of the day of requital, is directed against those doctrines which deny the quality of forgiveness in the Divine Being, the most prominent of these being the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, for Málik is not the king or the judge whose duty is to hold the balance equally between two parties, but He is the Master, and those that are guilty are only His creatures, whom He can wholly forgive without any idea of injustice or favouritism being attributed to Him.

I have also said that the seven verses of the Fátiḥah contain the whole of the Qur-án in them. It is for this reason that in 15 : 87, already quoted, it is spoken of as the Great Qur-án (Bkh). And so in fact it is, as the name Umm-ul-Qur-án, a name given to it by the Holy Prophet himself, shows (Bkh). For the Qur-án is a Book which declares the glory of Allah and teaches the right way to man, and both these themes find expression in the Fátiḥah. The fundamental principles of faith, the prime attributes of the Divine Being, which are the basis of all other attributes, the relations which ought to hold between man and his Creator, are all contained in their essence in the seven short sentences of which this wonderful chapter is made up. And to crown all, this chapter opens with the broadest possible conception of the Lordship (this word is intentionally adopted in the place of Fatherhood) of the Divine Being and the brotherhood of man, nay of the oneness of all creation, for the unity of the creation necessarily follows the unity of the Creator.

اَلْحَمْدُ لِلّٰهِ رَبِّ الْعٰلَمِيْنَ ۙ

1 I retain the ordinary translation of the particle bá, but I must warn the reader that the sense of this particle is not the same in Arabic as the sense of the word in in the equivalent phrase in the name of God, in in the latter case signifying on account of, whereas the bá in Arabic signifies by, or through, or, to be more exact, with the assistance of. The phrase is in fact equivalent to: I seek the assistance of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful (AH).

2 Alláh, according to the most correct of the opinions respecting it, is a proper name applied to the Being Who exists necessarily by Himself, comprising all the attributes of perfection (TA-LL), the al being inseparable from it, not derived (Msb-LL). Al-iláh is a different word, and there is nothing to show that Allah is a contraction of Al-iláh. The word Alláh is not applied to any being except the only true God, and comprises all the excellent names (TA-LL), and the Arabs never gave the name Allah to any of their numerous idols. Hence, as being the proper name of the Divine Being, and not having any equivalent in any other language, I have adopted the original word in this translation.

3 Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím are both derived from raḥmat, signifying tenderness requiring the exercise of beneficence (Rgh), and thus comprising the idea of love and mercy. Ar-Raḥmán and Ar-Raḥím are both active participle nouns of different measures denoting intensiveness of significance, the former being of the measure of fa'lán and indicating the greatest preponderance of the quality of mercy, and the latter being of the measure of fa'íl and being expressive of a constant repetition and manifestation of the attribute (AH). The two words have been explained by the Holy Prophet himself, and though the words are different, the ultimate significance is the same as that which is the result of the grammatical consideration. He is reported to have said: "Ar-Raḥmán is the Beneficent God Whose love and mercy are manifested in the creation of this world, and Ar-Raḥím is the Merciful God Whose love and mercy are manifested in the state that comes after" (AH), i.e. in the consequences of the deeds of men. Thus the attribute of mercy in Ar-Raḥmán is manifested before man comes into existence in the creation of things that are necessary for his life here, and therefore without his having deserved them, while the same attribute in Ar-Raḥím is manifested when man has done something to deserve it. Thus the former is expressive of the utmost degree of love and generosity, the latter of unbounded and constant favour and mercy. Lexicologists agree in holding that the former includes both the believer and the unbeliever for its objects, while the latter particularizes more the believer (LL, Rgh, LA, TA). Hence I render Ar-Raḥmán as meaning the Beneficent God, because the idea of doing good is predominant in it, though I must admit that the English language lacks an equivalent of Ar-Raḥmán even making an approach to giving expression to the all-comprehensive love and goodness manifested in that word.

It may also be noted that Ar-Raḥmán, though manifesting an attribute, is like a proper name and applicable only to the Divine Being. The word is, in fact, used as an alternative with Allah, very clearly so in 17 : 110. Hence it is not applied to denote the quality of mercy in man, though Ar-Raḥím is so applied. The only exception mentioned by the lexicologists is that Musailma the Liar was called the Raḥmán of Yamámah by his followers, but such a use of a proper name has always been considered allowable. As the word Raḥmán as a name of the Divine Being was quite new to the Arabs (25 : 60), the followers of the Liar may have applied it to him as a retort to the Muslims.

4 The al in al-ḥamd-u is for istighráq-ul-jins, i.e. the universal inclusion of the genus (AH), showing that all kinds of praise are included.

5 The Arabic word Rabb conveys not only the idea of fostering, bringing-up, or nourish- ing, but also that of regulating, completing, and accomplishing (TA–LL), i.e. of the evolution of things from the crudest state to that of the highest perfection. According to Rgh, Rabb signifies the fostering of a thing in such a manner as to make it attain one condition after another until it reaches its goal of completion. Hence Rabb is the Author of all existence, Who has not only given to the whole creation its means of nourishment but has also beforehand ordained for each a sphere of capacity and within that sphere provided the means by which it continues to attain gradually to its goal of perfection. It will thus be seen that the word Rabb, which, for want of a better word, I render as Lord, conveys a far nobler and grander idea than the word ab or father, which has comparatively a very limited significance. The Muslim prayer therefore prefers the use of the word Rabb or Lord to that of ab or father in addressing the Divine Being.

6 The word translated as worlds is 'álamín, which is pl. of 'álam (from the root 'ilm, meaning to know), indicating literally that by means of which one knows a thing, and hence it signifies world or creation, because by it the Creator is known. In a restricted sense it is applied to any class or division of created beings or of mankind (LL). Hence 'álamín has been translated as "nations" in 2:7 and elsewhere. The all-comprehensiveness of the Lordship of Allah in the very first words of the Qur-án is quite in consonance with the cosmopolitan nature of the religion of Islam, which requires an admission of the truth of the prophets of all nations and thus subverts all narrow views of religion and of Godhead.

7 English translations have usually adopted King as the translation of the word Málik, which is not strictly correct. Málik and malik are two different words from the same root, the former signifying master and the latter king. According to the rule of forming derivations in Arabic, an additional letter (as the alif in Málik) gives the meaning a greater intensity (AH), and hence a master is more than a king. The adoption of the word málik or master is to show that Allah is not guilty of injustice if He forgives His servants, because He is not a mere king or a mere judge, but more properly a Master.

8 The word yaum is applied in the Holy Qur-án to any period of time, from a moment (55:29) to fifty thousand years (70:4), and may therefore indicate an indefinitely small or indefinitely large space of time. According to LL yaum is a time, whether day or night (Msb); time absolutely, whether night or not, little or not; also a day, meaning the period from the rising of the sun to its setting. According to Rgh the word yaum indicates a period of time, whatever period it may be, and this is the proper signification. As there are ample indications in the Qur-án that the Divine law of requital is working every moment, and there is nothing to support the idea that it will not come into force before a particular day, the law of requital referred to in this verse is therefore a law which is constantly at work.

9 Those upon whom favours are bestowed are according to I'Ab the four classes mentioned in 4:69, viz. the prophets, the truthful, the faithful, and the righteous (AH). This shows that according to the Holy Qur-án, the favours that were bestowed upon the prophets, the gift of Divine revelation being one of the chief of them, can still be bestowed upon the righteous who follow the right way.

Or, other than.

7 Not those upon whom wrath is brought down, nor those who go astray.[10]

غَيْرِ الْمَغْضُوبِ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا الضَّالِّينَ ⑦

10 The Holy Prophet is reported to have said: Those upon whom wrath is brought down are the Jews and those who go astray are the Christians (AH). Of course the words are only explanatory and do not limit the significance of the original words used. The Holy Prophet made the Arabs realize by the case of the two peoples whom they knew well how men sometimes desert the right or the middle path, leaning to either extreme, the Jews rejecting Jesus Christ, a righteous servant of God, as a liar, while the Christians went to the other extreme and raised that same mortal to the dignity of Godhead. Islam inculcated that the middle path was to be followed, neither leaning to the side of hatred nor being excessive in love, because the former brings down Divine wrath as it did in the case of the Jews and the latter leads a man astray as it led the Christians.

Title and Subject-matter.

THE name of this chapter is taken from the story narrated in vv. 67-71 regarding the slaughter of a cow. As this chapter deals chiefly with the Jews, and as cow-worship, as shown in foot-notes 84 and 108, was the particular form of idolatry which took a hold among the Jews, the importance of that incident seems to have been rightly estimated in giving this chapter the name that it bears.

This chapter deals mainly with the Jews and their contentions against Islam, and hence it is that much of the legislation, details of which necessarily differ from the Jewish law, and most of the Jewish objections to the prophethood of Muhammad—may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him—are dealt with in this chapter. A perusal of the analysis of the chapter will show how the various sections fit into each other, the allegation of confusedness in the arrangement being simply due to want of reflection. The chapter opens with a brief statement of the fundamental principles of Islam, and, after mentioning the consequences of their acceptance or rejection in the first section, and dealing with lip-professions in the second, draws an inference of the truth of those principles, and more particularly of Divine Unity, by referring to the work of God in nature in the third. The fourth section proceeds to show that man is endowed with vast capabilities, but suffers the consequences of wasting his opportunity, and this is illustrated in the story of Adam. Then in the fifth section the case of the Israelite nation is introduced, and they are told how the Qur-án fulfils the prophecies met with in their books, and the next two sections are devoted to Divine favours on them and their stubbornness, being followed by three others which speak of their degeneration, their hard-heartedness, and their violation of covenants. The eleventh section speaks of their objections to the Holy Prophet, and the twelfth refers to their great enmity and to their plans against him. The thirteenth states that former scriptures are abrogated and a better and more advanced code is given in the form of Islam, the religion of entire submission. The next section points out that partial good is met with in all religions, but it is only in Islam that religion attains to perfection. The fifteenth reminds the Israelites of the covenant with Abraham, which required the raising of a prophet from among the Ishmaelites, being followed by another dealing with the religion of the great patriarch. The subject of Qiblah being transferred to the Ka'ba, the house rebuilt by Abraham, is thus introduced, and the next two sections, while declaring the Ka'ba to be the new centre of spiritual activity, also give reasons for the change. The nineteenth warns the Muslims that they must undergo hard trials before they obtain mastery of the Sacred House, which was henceforth to be the centre of the Muslims, though the idolatry prevailing there was certainly destined to disappear, while Unity must ultimately obtain the triumph, this being made clear in the twentieth section. Certain minor differences with the Jewish law are then introduced as against the common principle of the doctrine of Unity, and thus the laws relating to foods, retaliation, transfer of property on decease, fasting, fighting, pilgrimage, wine, gambling, orphans, marital obligations, divorce, and widowhood are discussed in the eleven sections that follow. The next two make a reversion to the subject of fighting, which was necessary if the Muslims would escape national death, and illustrations are given from the Israelite history. We are then told in the thirty-fourth section of the mighty power of Allah to give life to the dead, and the Muslims are told that they should not use compulsion in the matter of religion, as their opponents had done. Two instances are then quoted in the following section, one from the history of Abraham and the other from the Israelitish history, showing how dead nations are raised to life. But national growth and prosperity, we are immediately told in the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh sections, depends on acts of sacrifice, and every penny spent in the cause of truth yields seven hundredfold and even much more fruit. The Muslims, being thus promised abundance of wealth as the result of their sacrifices, are warned in the following section against usurious dealings which breed an inordinate love for wealth, for the amassing of wealth was not the goal of a Muslim's life. They are at the same time told, in the thirty-ninth section, to guard their property rights by the employment of writing in their transactions and securing evidence. In conclusion they are taught a prayer for the ultimate triumph of the truth. Thus we find no break in the continuity of the subject, and the change, whenever necessary, is introduced quite naturally.

Connection with the preceding Chapter.

There is a clear connection between this chapter and the last one. There in the concluding words is a prayer for being guided on the right path (1 : 5), while here that guidance is afforded in the opening words: "This book, there is no doubt in it, is a guide" (v. 2). Again, that prayer seeks to establish us in the path of those who have received Divine favours (1: 6), and here we are told in v. 5 who are they on the right direction and who shall be successful. Similarly, while that prayer creates in us the yearning to avoid the path of those upon whom wrath has been brought down and those who go astray (1 : 7), this one hastens to point out that those who do not care for the Prophet's warning, neither reflecting upon it nor lending ear to it (v. 6), have ultimately their very hearts and ears closed against the truth, this grievous punishment being the form in which wrath is brought down upon them (v. 7), and that those who consider faith to be only a lip-profession are really they who go astray, because they buy error at the price of right direction (v. 16). Any one who has read the Holy Qur-án will easily see that no other chapter could have so fittingly followed the Fátiḥah, and as in the beginning, so in the end, there is a clear connection with the opening chapter.

But though this chapter follows the Fátiḥah it is really the first chapter, because the Fátiḥah is placed at the head, being the essence of the whole of the Qur-án. This affords very clear evidence of the wisdom displayed in the arrangement of the chapters of the Holy Book. For this chapter fittingly opens with a prelude as to the object which is aimed at in the revelation of the Holy Qur-án, and contains in its very opening verses the fundamental principles of the Islamic religion, which are also in fact the fundamental principles which can form the basis of the natural religion of man. These principles are five in number, three of them containing theoretical ordinances or articles of belief and two containing practical ordinances or principles of action. The theoretical ordinances are a belief in the Unseen, i.e. Allah, in Divine revelation to the Holy Prophet as well as to the prophets before him, and in the life to come, while on the practical side is mentioned prayer, the outpouring of the human heart before the Great Divine Mind, which is the source from which springs true Divine love, and charity in its broadest sense. The result of the acceptance of these fundamental principles is mentioned in v. 5, being guidance in the right direction and success. Similarly, it is with a reiteration of the broad principles of the Islamic faith and with a prayer for the triumph of the truth that the chapter ends, and the whole of the chapter is really an illustration of the truth of the principles enunciated in its beginning. If this chapter were removed from its place, there is not a single other chapter in the whole of the Qur-án that could take its place and serve the purpose of a prelude to the Holy Book.

Date of Revelation.

There is little doubt that this chapter was revealed at Medina, and belongs to the earliest Medinian revelations. Doubt has been entertained as to vv. 21–39 and 164–172, but the reasons given are very poor. That all those verses in which the words "O men" occur belong to the Meccan revelation, and those in which the words "O you who believe" occur belong to Medinian revelation, is the unwarranted generalization of some exegetists; and European students of the Holy Qur-án have taken it from the Itqán, without caring to see that even the Itqán does not rely on this test, and without giving any consideration to facts. For the 4th chapter, the Women, undoubtedly belongs wholly to the Medinian revelation, and it opens with the words "O men." Similarly, the 22nd chapter, which is unanimously accepted as belonging to the Meccan period, begins with the words "O you who believe." Hence the criterion on which vv. 21–39 are regarded as belonging to Meccan revelation fails altogether. As regards the testimony of the subject matter in these verses, as well as in 164–172 and 256–258, doubt being also entertained as to the Medinian origin of the latter, it seems to me to be a mere fancy of the critics, for no hard-and-fast line can be drawn as to the subjects which are treated in Meccan or Medinian revelations. The latest European criticism on this point inclines more to a right view than the hasty opinion of earlier critics. In his "New Researches" Hirschfeld observes: "If we had no other critical aid, it would frequently be quite impossible to distinguish between Medinian and later Meccan revelations. . . . Medinian addresses, like the Meccan ones, abound in declamatory, narrative, and parabolical passages." But I must add that many of the unwarranted conclusions of European critics are based on the rash generalizations of Oriental exegetes.

The doubt regarding vv. 285, 286, the concluding verses of the chapter, is equally groundless. V. 285 only reiterates the cosmopolitan nature of the religion of Islam, which has already been established in the very beginning in v. 4, and then in the middle of the chapter in v. 136, a belief in the truth of all the prophets being mentioned as the very basis of the religion of Islam in all the three places. V. 286 teaches a prayer, about the Medinian origin of which it is rather strange that a doubt should have been entertained.

I do not find any reliable report as to the Meccan origin of any portion of this chapter. Even if there were any such report, I would warn the reader to receive it with caution. The whole of the 2nd chapter thus belongs to earlier Medinian revelation, and I very much doubt the reports which refer the injunctions regarding the prohibition of usury in the concluding sections to about the closing period of the Holy Prophet's life. That portion may have been revealed at a later period than the rest of the chapter, but in view of the same prohibition having been revealed in 3 : 129 it could not be so late. An analysis of the chapter leads one to the conclusion that almost the whole of it was revealed previous to the revelation of the next or the 3rd chapter.

11 The original words are alif, lám, mím. Translations of the Holy Qur-án generally leave abbreviations, like the one occurring here, untranslated. The combinations of letters or single letters occurring at the commencement of several chapters of the Holy Qur-án, 29 in all, are called الحروف المقطعة or simply muqatta'át, and according to the best received opinion these letters are abbreviations standing for words. The Arabs used similar letters in their verses, as in قلت لها قفى فقالت قاف where the letter qáf stands for waqaft-u, i.e. I stop (AH). Another instance of the same is contained in the verse, بالخير خيرات و ان شرفاً ∴ ولا اريد الشر الا ان تا where fá' stands for fasharrun, meaning then evil let there be, and tá' for tashá', meaning thou pleasest (AH). And in ordinary conversation you hear a man saying fá' in answer to one who says, Wilt thou come? The fá' in this case means فاذهب بنا i.e. then go thou with us (LL). Abbreviations are known to all languages, the only peculiarity of their use in Arabic literature being that the letters carry different meanings in different places, and the meaning is decided in each case by the context. Such is the opinion of I'Ab (AH). Both he and IMsd agree in interpreting the combination الٓمّٓ (read alif, lám, mím) occurring here, as well as at the commencement of the 3rd, 29th, 30th, 31st, and 32nd chapters of the Holy Qur-án, as standing for انا الله اعلم i.e. I am Allah, the best Knower, alif standing for ana, lám for Alláh, and mím for a'lamu (AH, IJ), being respectively the first, the middle, and the last letter of the words for which they stand. Others regard them as contractions for some Divine attribute. That they may also serve as the names of chapters is no ground for supposing that they carry no significance. The strange suggestion of Golius that alif, lám, mím stands for amr-li-Muhammad, which is said to mean at the command of Muhammad, is not only devoid of authority but is also grammatically incorrect, and the correct Arabic equivalent would be bi-amr-i-Muhammad, which, however, does not give us the actual letters. Rodwell's statement, made in his comment on the significance of the letter nún occurring in the beginning of chapter 68, that "the meaning of this and of the similar symbols, throughout the Qur-án, was unknown to the Muhammadans themselves even in the first century," is equally devoid of truth, for the significance of these letters can in most cases be traced to the companions of the Holy Prophet, and hence the suggestion that these were "private marks or initial letters attached by their proprietor to the copies furnished to Zaid, when effecting his rescension of the text under 'Us̲mán" is not even worth consideration, and it is further opposed to the surest historical testimony, which proves beyond all doubt that these letters were recited as parts of these chapters in the time of the Holy Prophet himself.

	2 This[12] book,[13] there is no doubt in it, is a guide to those who guard (against evil),[14]	ذٰلِكَ الْكِتٰبُ لَا رَيْبَ ۛۚ فِيْهِ ۚۛ هُدًى لِّلْمُتَّقِيْنَ ۙ

12 Palmer translates the word z̲álika as that, and thinks that its rendering as this is an error, but as LL says: "Like as a person held in mean estimation is indicated by ház̲á, which denotes a thing that is near, so, on account of its high degree of estimation, a thing that is approved is indicated by z̲álika, whereby one indicates a thing that is remote." In other words, z̲álika does refer here to a remote thing, and should not be rendered as that, but it indicates the high estimation in which the Qur-án is held.

13 The Qur-án is here called al-kitáb, or the Book. The root-word Kataba means he wrote and also he brought together (LL) and kitáb, or book, is a writing which is complete in itself. Thus a letter may also be called a kitáb, and in this sense the word occurs in 27: 28, 29. The application of the word kitáb to the Holy Qur-án occurs in very early revelations, and the use of the word shows clearly that the Qur-án was from the first meant to be a complete book, and one that existed not only in the memory of men but also in visible characters on writing material, for otherwise it could not be called al-kitáb. Thus there is conclusive internal evidence in the use of this word that its arrangement, without which it could not be called a book, was effected by the Holy Prophet for himself, and the copy prepared by Zaid in the time of Abú Bakr followed that arrangement. For the explanation of the word Qur-án see foot-note 228.

14 I make a departure here from the rendering of the word muttaqí, which English translators generally render into God-fearing or pious. The root is waqá, and conveys the sense of saving, guarding, or preserving (LL). According to Rgh, wiqáyah signifies the guarding of a thing from that which harms or injures it. The verb of which muttaqí is the nominative form is ittaqá, which means, he preserved or guarded himself exceedingly. "In the conventional language of the law," according to LL, "he preserved or guarded himself exceedingly from sin or what would harm him in the world to come." Hence the word muttaqí may properly be translated only as one who guards himself (against evil), or one who is careful (of his duty).

15 Al-ghaib is that which is unseen or unperceivable by the ordinary senses, such as the existence of Allah, the certainty of which is obtained through Divine revelation. To render it as mysteries of faith, as Sale has done, is to introduce the Christian formulas of mysteries into the clear principles of Islam. As regards the acceptance of the unseen, it must be borne in mind that every science is based on certain fundamental principles, the truth of which is actually witnessed only in the result.

16 Ṣalát among the Arabs stood for supplication or prayer, as A'shá says, speaking of wine: وقابلها الريح فى دنّها .·. و صلى على دنّها وارتسم i.e. and he exposed it to the wind in its jar, and he prayed over its jar and petitioned for it (IJ). Similarly in another verse the same poet says,

لها حارس لا يبرح الدهر بيتها   وان ذبحت صلى عليها وزمزما

The phrase صلى عليها is here equivalent to دعا لها i.e. he prayed for her (IJ). In Islam Aṣ-ṣalát assumed a regularity and a form, and became an established institution of religion, for details of which see Preface. The verb used to indicate the observance of ṣalát is throughout the Holy Qur-án aqáma, from اقام الامر i.e. he kept a thing or an affair in a right state (LL), and hence it is not the mere observance of the form that the Qur-án requires, but the keeping of it in a right state, i.e. being true to the spirit of the prayer. It should, however, be borne in mind that besides the regular service, which is performed five times a day and which is obligatory, there is ample room for the individual in the Muslim ṣalát for the outpouring of the heart's sentiments. It may also be added that prayer, according to the Holy Qur-án, is the true means of the purification of the heart, for "prayer keeps one away from indecency and evil" (29 : 45).

17 Spending out of what one has been given stands here for charity in its broadest sense, or the doing of good to all creatures. Like its other institutions useful to humanity, Islam has given a regularity and a permanence to the institution of charity. No one can enter into the brotherhood of Islam unless and until he is willing to give annually a part of his wealth for the support of the poorer members of the brotherhood. The part thus required to be paid into the public funds is called Zakát, which is a kind of tax, amounting generally to a fortieth portion of certain possessions—a tax which is levied on the rich for the benefit of the poor. The conditions subject to which it is made obligatory, and other details, will be found in the Appendix. Besides the obligatory payment, however, the expression used here includes voluntary charitable acts of every kind, from a complete devotion of oneself to the cause of humanity to a smile to one's fellow-being; the last is included in the definition of charity according to an express saying of the Holy Prophet.

18 Of all the religions of the world Islam is the only one that laid down the broad basis of faith in all the prophets of the world, and the recognition of truth in all religions is its distinctive characteristic. The words that which was revealed before you include revelations to all the nations of the world, for we are elsewhere told that "there is not a people but a warner has gone among them" (35 : 24). The Qur-án does not, however, mention all the prophets by their names, for "there are some of them that We have mentioned to you, and there are others whom We have not mentioned to you" (40 : 78). It should also be noted that the word anzala (inf. n. inzál), which occurs here in connection with revelation, is frequently used in the Qur-án in the simple sense of íṣál or iblágh, i.e. the making a thing attain or arrive at or come to a certain place, and does not necessarily imply sending down. Hence, wherever the word is used in connection with Divine messages, I have translated it as revealed, because revelation is the form in which Divine messages are communicated to men. It should also be noted that the singular personal pronoun káf has been translated as you, while the exact sense of the original is given in the margin invariably.

19 A belief in a life after death is the last of the five fundamental principles of Islam that are stated here. It is only this belief that can make the generality of men conscious of the responsibility of human actions. A life after death, according to Islam, implies a state of existence which begins with death, but a complete manifestation of which takes place later, when the fruits of the actions done in this life take their final shape. It should be borne in mind that a belief in Allah and a belief in the hereafter, being respectively the first and the last of the fundamental principles of Islam as mentioned here, often stand for a belief in all the fundamental principles of Islam, as in vv. 8, 62, etc. That the word ákhirat does not signify the later revelation is made clear by a comparison with a similar use of the word elsewhere, as, for instance, in 12 : 37, where Joseph is made to say: "Surely I have forsaken the religion of a people who do not believe in Allah and they are deniers of the hereafter"; or in 27 : 3 : "Who keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate, and of the hereafter they are sure." In fact, it is quite unwarranted to take al-ákhirat as meaning some particular revelation to be granted after the Holy Prophet, for the door to revelation is open to all the followers of the Holy Prophet, and thousands have been made to drink deep at this source.

20 The passage سواء عليهم ءانذرتهم ام لم تنذرهم is parenthetical (AH), and should be translated as such. The ordinary rendering of the passage, which makes the parenthetical passage an enunciative one, makes the verse meaningless, for it would then run thus : "Surely those who disbelieve, it is alike to them whether you warn them or do not warn them ; they will not believe." Now this amounts to saying that no one who has once disbelieved would ever believe, a statement which is absurd on the face of it. Treating the portion quoted above as parenthetical, the meaning is quite clear, viz. disbelievers of a particular type, i.e. those who pay no heed at all to the Prophet's warning, cannot benefit by his preaching. This interpretation makes the passage agree with the spirit of the Holy Qur-án. Otherwise the preaching of the Qur-án would be meaningless, for as a matter of fact it was from among those who disbelieved first that the converts to Islam were continually gained.

21 It should be noted that only those disbelievers are spoken of here who so hardened their hearts as not to pay any heed to the Prophet's preaching and warning, as clearly indicated in the previous verse. It is not on every heart that the seal is set, but only on that of the reprobate, the hardened sinners who pay no heed to the call of the reformer. They refuse to open their hearts to receive the truth, and do not lend their ears to listen to it nor use their eyes to distinguish the truth from the falsehood. This is stated clearly in 7:179: "They have hearts with which they do not understand, and they have eyes with which they do not see, and they have ears with which they do not hear: they are as cattle." And in 41:5 we have: "And they say, Our hearts are under coverings from that to which you call us, and there is a heaviness in our ears and a veil hangs between us and you." A comparison with these two verses is sufficient to show that what is indicated by "the setting of the seal on the hearts and hearing" in the first case is indicated in the second by "the possession of hearts with which they do not understand, and ears with which they do not hear," and in the third by "their hearts being under coverings and their ears having a heaviness in them." Thus the significance of "their hearts being sealed" is simply this, that they pay no heed to the Prophet's warning, and refuse to understand and hear what he says, and so their very refusal becomes the sealing of their hearts and ears. And as Allah made them taste the consequences of their heedlessness, He is spoken of as having sealed their hearts and ears.

22 Belief in Allah and the last day is here equivalent to the profession of the faith of Islam. See foot-note 19. The persons spoken of in this verse are the hypocrites, who were a source of constant trouble to the Holy Prophet at Medina. Before he came to that city, Abdulla bin Ubayy was a person of note there, and he expected to become the leader. But the Holy Prophet's advent, and his recognition by all the communities of that city as the head of the republic there, robbed Abdulla of those dearly cherished hopes, and he along with his followers adopted an attitude of hypocrisy towards the Holy Prophet and his companions. The case of the hypocrites is dealt with at length here, in 3:148–180, 4:60–152, 9:38–127, and in the 63rd chapter, and occasionally elsewhere.

23 Khâda'a-hû signifies he strove, endeavoured or desired to deceive him (LL). . . . One says this of a man when he has not attained his desire, for many a verb of the measure of fa'ala relates to one only as in the instance of عاقبت اللص i.e. I pursued the thief (LA-LL). Khâda'a also indicates, when used concerning the Divine Being, He requited to him his deceit (TA-LL). See further foot-notes 27 and 637. But note that khâda'a also means taraka (Q), i.e. he forsook, as in خادع الجد i.e. he forsook glory

11 And when it is said to them, Do not make mischief in the land, they say: We are but peacemakers.

12 Now surely they themselves are the mischief-makers, but they do not perceive.[25]

13 And when it is said to them, Believe as the people believe, they say: Shall we believe as the fools believe? Now surely they themselves are the fools, but they do not know.

14 And when they meet those who believe, they say, We believe; and when they are alone with their devils,[26] they say: Surely we are with you, we were only mocking.

Or ring-leaders.

15 Allah shall pay them back their mockery,[27] and He leaves them alone in their inordinacy, blindly wandering on.

Or bring disgrace upon them.

24 The disease is the pain in their hearts due to the advent of the Holy Prophet, for it deprived them of leadership. Allah's adding to this disease signifies that their pain became greater as they witnessed the triumphant progress of Islam. As for attributing this addition to Allah, compare 71:5, where Noah is made to say: "But my call has only made them fly the more." The increase in the disease or the aversion was the result of their own act in each case, but as Allah's raising the Prophet and the triumph of his cause or the invitation of the Prophet became the respective occasions of that act, Allah or the invitation is spoken of as the effective cause. Similarly in 95:5 it is said: "Then we render him the lowest of the low"; whereas the degradation is the result of man's own action and the Divine Being only brings about the consequences of the evil that man does. Or the disease here stands for the weakness of their hearts (AH), for they had not the courage to deny Islam openly, and this weakness only became the greater as the cause of Islam became more and more triumphant.

25 Their idea of making peace was only this, that they mixed with both parties, but they were really taking advantage of this opportunity to sow the seeds of dissension and mischief among the various parties. In fact, they were a constant source of mischief, for whereas outwardly they were with the Muslims, they always plotted against them and gave help to their enemies.

26 By their shayāṭin or devils are meant their evil companions, as plainly stated in v. 76: "And when they meet those who believe they say, We believe; and when they are alone with one another they say," etc.; where, instead of being alone with their devils, they are spoken of as being alone with others from among themselves. IMsd says that by their devils are meant their leaders in unbelief (IJ). This significance is given in the margin. Kf and Bḍ say by their shayāṭin or devils are meant those men who made themselves like the devils in their insolence and rebellion. In fact, in the Arabic language the word shaiṭān (devil) signifies, as A'Ub puts it, "every insolent or rebellious one from among the jinn and the men and the beasts (Rgh). Hence the word is freely used to indicate insolent men, serpents," etc.

27 The word istihzā occurring in this verse is thus explained by Kf: The meaning is,

16 These are they who buy error for the right direction, so their bargain shall bring no gain, nor are they the followers of the right direction.[28]

17 Their parable is like the parable of one who kindled a fire,[29] but when it had illumined all around him, Allah took away their light,[30] and left them in utter darkness[31]—they do not see:

أُولَٰئِكَ الَّذِينَ اشْتَرَوُا الضَّلَالَةَ بِالْهُدَىٰ
فَمَا رَبِحَتْ تِجَارَتُهُمْ وَمَا كَانُوا مُهْتَدِينَ ○
مَثَلُهُمْ كَمَثَلِ الَّذِي اسْتَوْقَدَ نَارًا فَلَمَّا

وَتَرَكَهُمْ فِي ظُلُمَاتٍ لَا يُبْصِرُونَ ○

the sending down of disgrace and contemptibility, for the object which a mocker has in view is to seek to hold him whom he mocks in light estimation, and to lower his condition, and to bring down contempt and disgrace upon him. The significance of mocking, the equivalent of the Arabic word, which is "treating derisively or contemptuously," lends support to the explanation given by Kf. This significance of the word is, however, given in the margin, while I adopt another which is preferred by the lexicologists, as LA says: "And it is allowable, and this is regarded as the more preferable explanation by the lexicologists, that the meaning of يستهزئ بهم may be He will requite them with punishment according to their mockery, and thus the punishment of an evil is spoken of in the terms of that evil, another instance of which in the word of Allah is جزاء سيئة سيئة مثلها (lit., the reward of an evil is evil like it), where the second evil is really not an evil (but punishment)." A comparison with 6:10 makes this significance still more clear: "And certainly apostles before you were mocked at, but that which they mocked at encompassed the scoffers among them," where the punishment of mockery is spoken of as their being overtaken by what they mocked at. There are many instances of this in Arabic literature. AH quotes the following verse:

الا لا يجهلن احد علينا ∴ فنجهل فوق جهل الجاهلينا

which would literally mean, now surely let no one act ignorantly against us, otherwise we too will act ignorantly, with an ignorance above that of the ignorant, where what is really implied is the punishment of the ignorant. Hence, Allah will pay them back their mockery is the correct translation.

28 The right direction was pointed out to them, but they left it for error, hence they are spoken of as buying error at the price of guidance, i.e. as exchanging the one for the other.

29 The kindler of the fire is the Holy Prophet, who kindled the torch of light. Thus a saying of the Holy Prophet is reported which begins thus: "My example is the example of a man who kindled a fire. . . ." (Bkh). This interpretation of the parable is, moreover, in accordance with the next parable, where the rain is unanimously agreed upon as representing the Divine revelation.

30 The light of their eyes, which alone could make them take advantage of the light which was lit up by the Holy Prophet, was taken away. The act of taking away the light of their eyes is attributed to Allah, who is not the effective but the remote cause of the disappearance of their sight. See foot-notes 21 and 24.

31 The word ẓulumát is plural of ẓulmat, i.e. darkness. The plural is used to denote the intensity of the darkness, as if there were layers of darkness, one above another. Hence I give utter darkness as the equivalent of the plural form.

18 Deaf, dumb, (and) blind,[32] so they will not turn back.

19 Or like abundant rain (pouring forth) from the cloud[33] in which is utter darkness and thunder and lightning; they put their fingers into their ears because of the thunder-peal, for fear of death, and Allah encompasses the unbelievers.

20 The lightning almost takes away their sight; whenever it shines on them they walk in it, and when it becomes dark to them they stand still; and if Allah had pleased He would certainly have taken away their hearing and their sight; surely Allah has power over all things.

Divine Unity

21, 22. The Lord to be served alone. 23, 24. Challenge to doubters of revelation. 25. Fruits of faith. 26, 27. Parable of false deities and the objections thereto. 28. Testimony of human nature. 29. Everything is created for man's benefit.

21 O men! serve your Lord Who created you and those before you so that[34] you may guard (against evil),

يٰٓاَيُّهَا النَّاسُ اعْبُدُوْا رَبَّكُمُ الَّذِيْ خَلَقَكُمْ
وَالَّذِيْنَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُوْنَ ۝

32 The description seems to apply to those spoken of in v. 5, and accordingly the first parable may apply to them instead of to the hypocrites; or it may apply to those hypocrites who persisted in the wrong course and refused to take any advantage of the light and guidance brought by the Prophet.

33 Samá is literally the higher or the upper, or the highest or the uppermost part of anything, and it means the sky or the heaven, the clouds or a cloud (TA). It is a collective noun and is used both as singular and plural (LL). The rain in the parable represents the Divine revelation, and the darkness and thunder stand for the trials, distresses, and afflictions which were a necessary concomitant to the spread of truth, while the lightning represents the good that they occasionally met with even in the midst of those distresses and difficulties. It is to these trials and hardships that reference is made in the words, when it becomes dark to them they stand still. The same idea is expressed in 22:11 in the following words: "And among men is he who serves Allah standing on the verge, so that if good befalls him he is satisfied therewith, but if a trial afflicts him he turns back headlong." The difficulties and distresses which the Muslims experienced in the early days of Islam greatly obstructed its spread and held back many of the weak-hearted, who, under better circumstances, would have gladly joined its ranks.

34 La'alla in its original acceptation expresses hope, but in the word of God it often expresses certainty and may be rendered "verily" (LL). According to AH, la'alla signifies kai, meaning so that. The reason given is that when a great and generous man gives hope, he no doubt intends to fulfil it, and thus in his case it really stands for a promise.

22 Who made the earth a resting-place for you and the heaven a structure,[35] and (Who) sends down rain from the cloud then brings forth with it subsistence for you of the fruits; therefore do not set up rivals to Allah while you know.

23 And if you are in doubt as to that which We have revealed to Our servant, then produce a chapter like it[36] and call on your helpers besides Allah if you are truthful.[37]

Or, cloud, a canopy.

35 The word samá, as shown in foot-note 33, signifies really the higher or the upper regions, and hence it may be rendered as heaven, i.e. the expanse of space surrounding the earth and appearing above and around as a great arch or vault in which the sun, the moon, and the stars seem to be set. The word biná signifies a structure (LL) in its widest sense, viz. any production or piece of work consisting of parts joined together in some definite manner. Thus, in a saying of Solomon the word biná is applied to the human body: من هدم بناء ربه فهو ملعون i.e. whoever destroys the structure of his Lord is accursed, the meaning being من قتل نفسا بغير حق i.e. whoever kills a person unjustly (IAṣ). The heaven is here called a structure because it is the handiwork of Allah. The word biná is also used to signify the roof or the ceiling of a house, and as such it is used figuratively to indicate the vast blue overhead. It may be added, however, that the word samá is used in various other senses, its significance as cloud being of very frequent occurrence, and even here it may carry this significance, which is supported by the words that follow it.

36 A similar challenge is contained in 10 : 38, and in 11 : 13 the doubters are challenged to produce ten chapters like it, while in 17 : 81 the whole of mankind are declared to be unable to produce a book like the Qur-án. Is it a question of mere style and diction? The Qur-án itself does not say so, nor does any saying of the Holy Prophet. That the Qur-án is a unique production of Arabic literature and has ever been regarded as the standard of the purity of that literature goes without saying, but the chief characteristic of the Holy Book, in which no other book can claim equality, is the wonderful transformation which it accomplished, and it is to this characteristic that it lays claim in the very commencement when it says: "This Book, there is no doubt in it, is a guide to those who guard against evil." That the transformation wrought by it is unparalleled in the history of the world is admitted on all hands, for if the Holy Prophet was the "most successful of all prophets and religious personalities" (En. Br. 11th ed., Art. Koran), this success was due to no other cause than the Qur-án. Its injunctions swept off the most deep-rooted evils, like idolatry and drunkenness, so as to leave no trace of them in the Arabian peninsula, welded the warring elements of Arabian society into one nation, and made an ignorant people the foremost torchbearers of knowledge and science. Besides, every word of the Qur-án gives expression to Divine majesty and glory in a manner which is not approached by any other sacred book; hence the challenge of the Holy Qur-án remains unanswered to this day.

37 The word shuhadá, translated as helpers or leaders, is the plural of shahíd, meaning one who gives information of what he has witnessed, or one who knows and declares what he knows, or one possessing much knowledge (LL). Shahíd also means an imám or a leader (Rz), or it here signifies helpers (Bḍ).

24 But if you do (it) not—and never shall you do (it)—then be on your guard against the fire of which men and stones are the fuel;[38] it is prepared for the unbelievers.

38 The word stones stands for al-ḥijárah, the plural of ḥajar, meaning stone, so called because it resists by reason of its hardness (the verb ḥajara signifies he prevented, hindered, forbade, etc.) (LL); and by stones are here generally understood the idols which the Arabs worshipped, even unhewn stones being sometimes the objects of worship among them. As nár, or fire, is a symbol of war among the Arabs, testimony to which is borne by the Qur-án itself in the words: Whenever they kindle a fire for war, Allah puts it out (5:64), the allusion here may be to both men and idols perishing in their wars against the Holy Prophet as a proof of the punishment awaiting them in the life after death. But the word ḥijárah may bear another significance. According to LA you say: "Such an one was assailed with the ḥajar of the earth" when his assailant is a formidable man. And when Mu'aviah named 'Amar-ibn-'Aṣ as one of the two umpires to decide the quarrel between himself and 'Ali, Aḥnef said to 'Ali: قد رميت بحجر الارض Thou hast had a most exceedingly sagacious and crafty and politic man made to be an assailant against thee (LL). The reference in ḥijárah may therefore be to the leaders spoken of in the previous verse.

39 Gardens with rivers flowing beneath them is the ever-recurring description of a future life of the righteous that occurs in the Holy Qur-án. Elsewhere the pure word of faith is compared to a tree which gives its fruit in all seasons (14:24). Belief is thus like a seed cast into the ground, which grows into a tree and bears fruit when properly nurtured. The rivers represent the good deeds which are necessary to the growth of the seed. There is also a hint at the Muslims' conquests, for which see 2419.

40 Rizq also signifies ḥaẓẓ or a portion (LL). The fruits of the life after death are the consequences of the deeds done in this life.

41 The meaning seems to be that whenever the faithful shall be made to taste of a portion of the fruits of their good deeds, in the life to come, they shall find those fruits so much resembling the fruits which they tasted spiritually in this life that they shall think that the same fruits are given to them again, for the fruits of the next life shall be like the spiritual fruits of this life. Or هذا الذى رزقنا من قبل may signify: This is what was promised to us before, and the like of it may signify that the fruits of their deeds will be similar to those deeds.

42 The pure mates may be the believing wives of the faithful, as elsewhere we have: "They and their wives shall be in shades reclining on raised couches" (36:56). But more probably these are among the blessings of the heavenly life to which men and

Or, below.

26 Surely Allah is not ashamed to set forth any parable[43]—(that of) a gnat or any thing above that; then as for those who believe, they know that it is the truth from their Lord, and as for those who disbelieve, they say: What is it that Allah means by this parable? He causes many to err by it and many He leads aright by it; but He does not cause to err by it (any) except the transgressors,[44]

إِنَّ اللّٰهَ لَا يَسْتَحْيٖٓ أَنْ يَّضْرِبَ مَثَلًا
مَّا بَعُوْضَةً فَمَا فَوْقَهَا ۚ فَأَمَّا الَّذِيْنَ
اٰمَنُوْا فَيَعْلَمُوْنَ أَنَّهُ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَّبِّهِمْ ۚ
وَأَمَّا الَّذِيْنَ كَفَرُوْا فَيَقُوْلُوْنَ مَاذَآ
أَرَادَ اللّٰهُ بِهٰذَا مَثَلًا ۘ يُضِلُّ بِهٖ
كَثِيْرًا وَّيَهْدِيْ بِهٖ كَثِيْرًا ۚ وَمَا يُضِلُّ بِهٖٓ إِلَّا الْفٰسِقِيْنَ ۙ

women are equally entitled. The true nature of these blessings is pointed out elsewhere under the word ḥúr in foot-note 2356, but it may be remarked here that all the blessings of heavenly life are, according to a saying of the Holy Prophet, "things which no eye has seen and no ear has heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive of them." The words in which these blessings are depicted in the Holy Qur-án, therefore, should not be taken too literally.

43 The parables to which reference seems to have been made specially in these words are the parables speaking of the weakness of the false deities, as the parable of the spider in 29:41: "The parable of those who take guardians besides Allah is as the parable of the spider that makes for itself a house, and most surely the frailest of the houses is the spider's house"; and the parable of the fly in 22:73: "O people! a parable is set forth, therefore listen to it: Surely those whom you call upon besides Allah cannot create a fly though they should all gather for it, and should the fly carry aught from them, they could not take it back from it: weak are the invoker and the invoked."

Instead of the spider and the fly, however, the gnat is mentioned here because the ba'úḍah, or the gnat, is among the Arabs a proverbially weak creature, so that to express the utmost degree of weakness they say: اضعف من بعوضة i.e. weaker than the gnat.

44 This verse affords a clear explanation as to how it is that Allah causes people to err. Allah does not lead them astray or show them a wrong path or compel them to walk in error, but it is when a man becomes a transgressor, that is, goes beyond the limits set forth, that Allah causes him to err, Allah's causing a man to err being really equivalent to His pronouncing the judgment of being in error against a man, because we have it plainly stated here that He does not cause any one to err unless he first becomes a transgressor. The word aḍalla is used in this sense in the Arabic language, as in the verse of Tarfa وما زال شربي الراح حتى اضلني صديقي و ساءني بعض ذلكا where اضلني صديقي as the context clearly shows, signifies my friend pronounced me to be in error. In connection with this subject it should be further borne in mind, firstly, that as here it is stated that Allah does not cause to err any except the transgressors, so elsewhere it is the unjust (14:27), the extravagant (40:34), the unbelievers (40:74) who are spoken of as being caused to err by Allah, and secondly, that it is the devil who leads astray (28:15, etc.), or the ignorant leaders of the people who make people to walk in error (6:120, 41:29, etc.). Hence iḍlál, or causing to err, cannot be ascribed to Allah in the sense of leading astray, because in that sense it is applied to the devil.

27 Who break the covenant of Allah after its confirmation and cut asunder what Allah has ordered to be joined, and make mischief in the land; these it is that are the losers.

28 How do you deny Allah and you were dead and He gave you life? Again He will cause you to die and again bring you to life, then you shall be brought back to Him.

29 He it is who created for you all that is in the earth, and[45] He directed Himself to the heaven, so He made them complete seven heavens,[46] and He knows all things.

45 Summa (rendered here as and) generally denotes then or afterwards, and is a particle denoting order and delay, but there are many examples of its use in Arabic in which it implies neither order nor delay. LL, while mentioning this, quotes 39:6, خلقكم من نفس واحدة ثمّ جعل منها زوجها: where it is clear that the creation of all men from a single soul was not prior in order to the creation of the mate. Another example quoted is the ordinary Arab saying i.e. what thou didst to-day excited my wonder, then (I tell thee) what thou didst yesterday was more wonderful. Summa is used here, though what was done yesterday was prior to what was done to-day (LL). The use of summa in this verse corresponds to its use in this saying, being simply a particle of junction without conveying any idea of order or delay, hence I render it as and, because that is the correct significance here. According to Akh and other authorities, summa has often the meaning of wav, i.e. and (LL). For the statement that the earth was made after the heavens, see 79:30.

46 It is impossible to deal with the subject of the Quranic cosmogony within the limits of a foot-note. But a few suggestions may be made here. In the first place it should be noted that the word sab'a, which signifies the number seven in the Arabic language, "is also used in a vague manner, as meaning seven, or more, several or many, as Bḍ says in 9:80" (LL). According to LA, the Arabic equivalents of the numbers seven, seventy, and seven hundred are all used to indicate a large number by the Arabs: "The mention of seven and seventy and seven hundred is frequent in the Qur-án and the sayings of the Holy Prophet, and the Arabs use them to signify a large number and multiplicity." Similarly Az explains the word sab'ína, meaning seventy, as occurring in 9:80, as being "used to signify a large number and multiplicity, not indicating exactness in number," and thus, he says, the meaning of ان تستغفر لهم سبعين مرّة is, if you pray frequently and ask forgiveness for the hypocrites (LA), giving frequently in place of seventy as conveying the true sense of the word sab'ína. Hence the seven heavens may signify a large number of heavens. Secondly, the significance of the word samá, which means only what we see above us, should not be lost sight of. Rgh makes the meaning very clear when he says: "Every samá, i.e. heaven, is a heaven in relation to what is beneath it and an earth in relation to what is above it." Thirdly, in 65:12 it is affirmed that as there are seven heavens, so there is a like number of earths, which corroborates the conclusion drawn above. Fourthly, the seven heavens are on one occasion called the seven ways

(23:17), and in this sense the orbit of a planet may be called its heaven. In fact, this interpretation makes the significance of 65:12 very clear, for each of the seven earths will thus have a heaven for it. The seven earths, together with our earth, would thus make up the eight major primary planets of the solar system. Or the seven heavens may be taken to apply to the whole starry creation, and the reference may in this case be to the seven magnitudes of the stars which may be seen by the naked eye.

One point more may be noted here. The samá, or the heaven, is plainly called dukhán i.e. smoke or vapour, in 41:11.

47 The Arabic word for angels is maláikah, which is the plural of malak. The word is said to be derived either from the same root as meaning power, because the angels are beings that execute the Divine will, being, as it were, in charge of the various powers working in the universe; or from alúkah (the singular in this case being mal'ak, which would be an altered form of ma'lak), meaning risálat, i.e. bearing messages, because they are beings that act as intermediaries between Allah and man (IJ). Both root ideas thus contain a reference to the principal function ascribed to the angels. The existence of such intermediaries has been recognized by righteous men in all ages and all countries. Other points relating to their functions will be discussed in their proper place.

It will also be seen, from what has been said above as to the functions of the angelic beings, that Allah's saying to them is really the expression of an intention which is to be brought into execution. It is not a talk, or a conversation, or a consultation with the angels, but it is an expression of the Divine will to those intermediary beings who are entrusted by the Divine Being with the execution of it. It may also be added that by the angels here are meant the angels entrusted with this particular affair, and not all the angels of the universe (IJ).

48 Arḍ may mean the earth, or any one land or country in particular. In the latter sense the word is used elsewhere in the Holy Qur-án, and here also some understand by it the Meccan territory (Rz).

49 This shows the high place that man was destined to hold in the whole of creation. The original word khalífah (from khalafa, meaning he came after, or succeeded another that had perished or died), means primarily a successor, and hence the supreme or the greatest ruler who supplies the place of him who has been before him (TA-LL). The "Caliph" of English writers is the same word, and indicates a successor of the Holy Prophet. IMsd and I'Ab explain khalífah as meaning one who judges among, or rules, the creatures of Allah by His command (IJ). What is stated here is, so far as I can understand, an allegorical description of the preference of man above the whole of the creation on this earth, and then of the election of those righteous servants of Allah from among men themselves who lead others into the right path. One of the significances suggested by the commentators is that the word khalífah here refers to the children of Adam (Az), i.e. the whole of mankind. The correctness of this view is corroborated by the Qur-án itself, which says, referring to the whole of mankind: "He it is who has made you rulers in the earth" (16 : 166), the word used for rulers being khaláif, plural of khalífah. Hence the reference here seems to be to the whole of mankind. References to Adam are contained in 2 : 30–39, and in 3 : 58, 4 : 11–25, 15 : 28–44, 17 : 61–65, 18 : 50, 20 : 115–124, and 38 : 71–85. The foot-notes on these passages may be referred to for further explanations.

50 The reference in this question is apparently to the darker side of the picture of humanity. Man's desire to rule has always led him to make mischief in the land and shed the blood of fellow-men.

51 Tasbíḥ, or the glorification of the Divine Being, stands really for a declaration that He is free from every imperfection or impurity, or from everything derogatory to His glory (LL), and the angels' declaration of Divine glory signifies that such an imperfection cannot be ascribed to Him as that He should make those to be the rulers of the earth who do but shed blood, and in whom the evil therefore outweighs the good. On the other hand, the shedding of blood is sometimes necessary to remedy evil and to uproot tyranny.

52 Neither here nor anywhere else in the Holy Qur-án is it affirmed that Adam was the first man, or that there was no creation by God before Adam, nor that Adam lived or man was created, or the earth made, only six thousand years ago.

53 Explaining asmá, which literally signifies names (being plural of ism, meaning a name), Rz says: "He taught him the attributes of things and their descriptions and their characteristics, for the attributes of a thing are indicative of its nature." Giving Adam the knowledge of things therefore signifies the vast capability of Adam and the superiority of his knowledge to that of the angels. Or, the reference may be to the faculty of speech, which is the real source of the excellence of man above the whole of creation. To this the Holy Qur-án refers elsewhere too, see foot-note 2405 on 55 : 3, 4, which says: "He created man, taught him the mode of expression."

54 Man might be a maker of mischief and a shedder of blood, but he possessed vast capability for knowledge, and hence the angels' estimate of man, which looked only to the darker side of the picture, was not a right estimate. Evil there might be in him, but the good was preponderant.

Note that ṣidq (lit., truth) sometimes signifies ṣawáb, or that which is right, as kiẕb (lit., falsehood) sometimes signifies khaṭá, i.e. that which is wrong (Rz).

Margin	Translation	Arabic
Or, do homage (to Allah) on account of Adam.	the heavens and the earth and (that) I know what you manifest and what you did hide ?[55] 34 And when We said to the angels, Make obeisance to Adam,[56] they did obeisance, but Iblís[57] (did it not)[58]: he refused and he was proud, and he was one of the unbelievers.[59]	السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْاَرْضِ وَاَعْلَمُ مَا تُبْدُوْنَ وَمَا كُنْتُمْ تَكْتُمُوْنَ ○ وَاِذْ قُلْنَا لِلْمَلٰٓئِكَةِ اسْجُدُوْا لِاٰدَمَ فَسَجَدُوْٓا اِلَّآ اِبْلِيْسَ ؕ اَبٰى وَاسْتَكْبَرَ وَكَانَ مِنَ الْكٰفِرِيْنَ ○

55 "What you did hide" refers to those great qualities in man which preponderate the evil in him, and which remain hidden until they are made manifest through the Divine gift of knowledge. The immense capability of man for progress remains hidden, while the evil of shedding blood is manifested in a very primary stage in his growth.

56 Sajada is really synonymous with khaḍa'a, i.e. he was lowly or submissive (TA-LL). In the Muslim prayer the sujúd is performed by placing one's forehead with both hands and knees on the ground. But in the Holy Qur-án the word is frequently used to signify simple submission. And you also say سجد له meaning he saluted him or he paid respect or honour to him (Ham-LL). It is in the sense of paying respect or making submission that the word is used here.

But the lám following the verb sometimes means on account of. Thus in a saying of the Holy Prophet it is said, كان يسجد للطالع the significance being that when the arrow came in such a manner as to go beyond the butt, passing over it, he used to lower himself to it (LL), i.e. lower his head on account of the arrow. Similarly you say السفينة تسجد للريح i.e. the ship bends or inclines by reason of the wind (TA). Hence the alternative significance given in the margin.

What is the significance of the angels paying respect or making obeisance to Adam? No one would suppose that the angels of the universe were all brought before Adam and made to worship Adam by placing their foreheads on the ground. The angels, as already stated, are the intermediaries through whom the Divine will is executed. When man attains to perfection by reason of his knowledge of things Divine, i.e. when he is divinely inspired, the powers of goodness of which the angels are in charge are made submissive to him, but the powers of evil still continue to oppose him, until after some tribulations and trials he overcomes them. This is made clear on two occasions, in 15:29 and 38:72, in the Qur-án itself, where it is said, speaking of Adam: "So when I have made him complete, and breathed into him of My inspiration, then fall down, making obeisance to him." Here, instead of mentioning the giving of the knowledge of things prior to the angels' making obeisance, it is stated that Divine inspiration was breathed into Adam, which shows that the two statements carry the same significance.

It may also be added that the Holy Qur-án does not always use the word Adam in a particular sense. It is used in the general sense, meaning humanity, and obeisance of angels to Adam has also a general significance. As for instance 7:10-11 run: "And certainly We have established you (man) in the earth, and made in it means of livelihood for you; little it is that you give thanks. And certainly We created you, then We fashioned you, then We said to the angels, Make obeisance to Adam" (7:11). In another verse, on a similar occasion, the word bashar (man) itself has been used: "When your Lord said to the angels: I am going to create a mortal (basharan) from dust; so when I have made him complete and breathed into him of My inspiration, then fall down making obeisance to him" (38:71-72).

57 Iblis was not one of the angels, as is shown by 18:50, which says that he was "of the jinn, so he transgressed." Of the angels it is said in 66:6 that "they do not disobey Allah in what He commands them, and do as they are commanded." Hence Iblis represents the powers of evil as distinguished from the powers of goodness. It should further be borne in mind that Iblis and Satan (Ar. shaiṭán) refer to one and the same being. The Qur-án uses the word Iblis when the Evil one's evil is limited to himself, but Shaiṭán, or Satan, when his evil affects others besides himself, or Iblis is the proud one, and Satan the deceiver. Thus in the 36th verse he is spoken of by the name of Shaiṭán, because his evil in that case affects Adam. The word Iblis is derived from balasa, meaning he despaired, and shaiṭán from shaṭana, meaning he became distant or remote, or from sháṭa, meaning he perished.

58 The thing excepted by means of illá (lit., except) is in some cases disunited in kind from that from which the exception is made, and the statement which follows illá is therefore a new statement altogether cut off from the first. Therefore instead of adopting the ordinary rendering, with the exception of Iblis, I adopt but Iblis did it not.

59 He was not declared an unbeliever because of his having refused to make obeisance to Adam; but he refused to do obeisance because he was already an unbeliever, which further corroborates the statement that Iblis or Satan is a being that works evil.

60 It is clear from v. 30 that man was placed on earth, which he was intended to rule. The placing in the garden signifies leading a life of ease and comfort which is not attended with difficulties and troubles, as is shown by the words that follow: "Eat from it a plenteous food wherever you wish." And more clearly still the life in the garden is thus described in 20:117–119: "Therefore let him not drive you both forth from the garden, so that you should be unhappy. Surely it is ordained for you that you shall not be hungry therein nor bare of clothing, and that you shall not be thirsty therein, nor shall you feel the heat of the sun." All this shows that life in the garden meant a life of comfort, ease, and happiness in which there was no difficulty or distress.

61 Raghadan here either qualifies an understood noun, and the construction is اكلا رغدا, i.e. a plenteous food, or it is indicative of the condition of Adam and Eve, for you say, قوم رغد, i.e. people in a state of life ample in its means, or people having abundance of the goods, conveniences, and comforts of life (LL), and the words may thus be rendered: Eat from it wherever you wish, having abundance of all things.

62 The tree here may stand for evil, because it is evil which degenerates man, and it is from approaching evil that all the prophets of God have forbidden man. The Qur-án itself again and again warns man not to approach evil. The figurative use of the word shajarah, or tree, is made manifest in 20:120, where the devil deceives man by calling him to the tree of immortality and a kingdom which decays not, this description being no doubt just the contrary of what it really was, because the statement was made to deceive Adam. But note that the tree of immortality is the same as the kingdom which decays not, and this establishes the figurative use of the word shajarah.

63 The devil was instrumental in bringing about the change in their condition. From "it" means from the happy condition of life in which they were first placed.

in which they were; and We said: Get forth,[64] some of you being the enemies of others, and there is for you in the earth an abode and a provision for a time.[65]

37 Then Adam received (some) words from His Lord, so He turned to him (mercifully);[66] surely He is Oft-returning (to mercy), the Merciful.

38 We said: Go forth from this (state) all; so surely there will come to you a guidance from Me, then whoever follows My guidance, no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve.

39 And (as to) those who disbelieve in and reject Our communications,[67] they are the inmates of the fire, in it they shall abide.[68]

64 Habṭ no doubt means going down a declivity, or descending from a high place to a low one, but its more frequent use in literature is simply in the sense of removing from one place to another, as in اهبطوا مصرا v. 58, meaning go to, or enter into, a city. It also signifies simply change in condition. According to LL habaṭa means he came forth from it and also he became lowered or degraded. And habṭ further signifies falling into evil; or becoming low or abject; or suffering loss or diminution.

65 The new condition in which man is placed is the condition of the mutual enmity of one to the other. As opposed to the happy state of life it is one in which man has to face distresses and difficulties. It is a state of life which the virtuous and the wicked must equally pass through. In fact, it is only trials and hardships of life that make perfection attainable. The first state of ease is not a state of perfection, as in the child, though it may be a state of ease and comfort, but as man must attain to a state of perfection he has to pass through the necessary trials. This is made clear in v. 38, where all men are told to follow Divine guidance if they would attain to a state of freedom from fear and grief, which in the Holy Qur-án always represents the goal of life, or the final state of perfection so far as this life is concerned.

66 The Arabic word taubah (repentance) gives us in fact the philosophy of repentance. Tába originally means he returned, and hence the primary meaning of tába il-alláh-i is he returned to Allah, and in the religious terminology the word taubah comes to mean the returning to a state of obedience. Thus taubah implies a perfect change in the course of one's life, and this is repentance according to the Holy Qur-án. The taubah does not imply the utterance of certain words, but an actual change for the better in one's life. The same word tába is used to express the Divine act of the acceptance of repentance, with reference again to the original meaning of the word, because in this case the Divine Being deals with man mercifully.

67 The word áyat (plural áyát), which occurs for the first time here, is of very frequent occurrence in the Holy Qur-án and conveys a number of significances. The primary meaning of áyat is an apparent sign or mark (Rgh) by which a thing is known. Hence it comes to signify a sign as meaning an indication or evidence or proof (TA–LL). In this sense it signifies what is called a mu'jizah or a miracle, instead of which the Holy Qur-án always uses the word áyat, thus showing that the miracles of which it speaks are not wonders, but actual evidence or proof of the truth of a prophet. But the most frequent use of the word áyat in the Holy Qur-án is to signify a message or a communication, and it is in this sense that the word is applied to verses of the Holy Qur-án, i.e. a collection of the words of the Qur-án continued to its breaking, or a portion of the Qur-án after which a suspension of the speech is approvable (TA, Msb-LL). But it generally retains the wider significance of a sign or a mark, or a Divine message or a Divine communication.

68 Khalada signifies originally he remained or abode, or remained or abode long, being synonymous with aqáma or with اطال الاقامة (A). Hence you say khwálid (plural of khálid), meaning the three stones upon which the cooking-pot is placed, so called because of their remaining for a long time after the standing relics of a house have become effaced (LA-LL). Therefore khálidún signifies simply abiding, and does not necessarily convey the idea of perpetuity.

69 Compare Deut. 26:17–19: "Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in His ways, and to keep His statutes, and His commandments, and His judgment, and to hearken unto His voice. And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be His peculiar people, as He hath promised thee, and that thou shouldst keep all His commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which He hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour." The "hearkening unto the voice of the Lord" means the acceptance of the revelation to the promised prophet of Deut. 18:18, as Deut. 18:19 shows clearly: "And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto My words which he shall speak in My name, I will require it of him."

70 The verification referred to here is clearly the fulfilment of the promise contained in Deut. 18:15–18: "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. . . . I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put My words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." It is nowhere but in the Holy Qur-án that the "word of God," as promised here, is "put into the Prophet's mouth," and no prophet ever claimed to have come in fulfilment of this prophecy except the Holy Prophet Muhammad. The whole of the Israelitish history after Moses is silent as to the appearance of the promised prophet of Deuteronomy. Even Jesus Christ never said that he came in fulfilment of that prophecy, and the apostles truly felt that difficulty when they thought that that prophecy would be fulfilled in the second coming of Christ. But one of the earliest messages of the Holy Prophet was that he was the like of the prophet sent to Pharaoh (73 : 15), and the claim is often repeated in the Holy Qur-án.

71 They rejected the commandments of Allah, fearing to lose their high positions as temporal and spiritual leaders of the people, and sacrificed truth to the inducements of this life, and thus took "a mean price" for it, for, as it is said in 4 : 77, "The provision of this world's life is short."

72 Where the verb ittaqú occurs with Allah, or with a personal pronoun referring to Him, as its object, as in اتقوا الله or اتقون the meaning is that they should guard against the threatened punishment of Allah, or be careful of their duty to Allah.

73 "Mixing up the truth with the falsehood" signifies their mixing up the prophecy with their own false interpretations of it, and thus making obscure the prophecy itself, while "hiding of the truth" signifies their concealing the prophecy itself, for they often commanded their followers not to disclose to the Muslims those prophecies which were known to them. Compare v. 76.

74 Those who bow down are the Muslims, and thus they are told to follow the Muslims in their prayers.

75 They are told to wait patiently because the great distinctive sign of the promised prophet of Deut. 18 : 18 was that he would utter prophecies which would prove true. "And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not nor come to pass, this is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him," Deut. 18 : 21, 22. The Qur-án had, in the Prophet's utter helplessness at Mecca, and when the Quraish were day and night planning to take away his very life, uttered forcible predictions of the final triumph of the Prophet and Islam and of the vanquishment and utter destruction of his opponents. In accordance with the test of Deut. 18 : 21, 22, the Israelites could have easily seen within a few years that he was the true prophet.

76 Ẕann signifies thought, opinion or conjecture, and also knowledge or certainty, which 47, 48. A grievous day awaits the Israelites. 49, 50. Their deliverance from Pharaoh. 51–54. Calf-worship and its punishment. 55, 56. Elders stupefied. 57–59. Provision of manna and quails in wilderness, disobedience of the people, and havoc wrought by pestilence.

47 O children of Israel! call to mind My favour which I bestowed on you and that I made you excel the nations.[77]

48 And be on your guard against a day when one soul shall not avail another in the least,[78] neither shall intercession on its behalf be accepted,[79] nor shall any compensation be taken from it, nor shall they be helped.

"is obtained by considering with endeavour to understand, not by ocular perception, or not such as relates to an object of sense" (LL).

77 By "the nations" are meant the people contemporaneous with the Israelites in their days of triumph, or large masses of people (AH). Numerous prophets were raised among them, and they were made to rule over other nations, and these are the favours of which Moses also reminds them (5 : 20).

78 The day here spoken of overtook the Israelites in this very life as a preliminary to the grievousness of what was to follow in the hereafter. The Jewish tribes living in Medina cast in their lot with the enemies of Islam, giving every kind of secret help to the Meccans and even urging the latter to attack the Muslims, and this notwithstanding a defensive alliance with them. The failure of the Meccans to crush the Muslims was therefore naturally followed by punishment of the traitorous Jews, and the hypocrites and the idolaters who had promised to help them did not come forward. These incidents are dealt with in the 59th chapter.

79 Shafá'at (meaning intercession) is derived from the root shaf', which signifies the making a thing to be one of a pair (TA-LL) or the adjoining a thing to its like (Rgh-LL), and hence it comes to signify intercession. The doctrine of shafá'at, or intercession, is a well-known doctrine, according to which the prophets and the righteous will intercede for the sinners on the day of judgment. This doctrine is based on certain passages of the Holy Qur-án and some sayings of the Holy Prophet, which will be dealt with in the proper place. But intercession has another significance also, which is referred to in 4 : 85, viz. the institution of a way which another imitates, so that the latter, in fact, joins himself to his model, and this is really the primary significance of the doctrine. Thus shafá'at has a twofold significance, viz. firstly it enables a man to walk in the ways of righteousness by imitating his model, and, secondly, it affords him a shelter from the evil consequences of certain weaknesses which he is unable to overcome by himself.

The statement made here, that intercession shall not be accepted on a certain day, is in reference to those who have not made themselves deserving of intercession by joining themselves with a righteous servant of God, so as to take him for their model. As they fail to realize the primary significance of intercession, its secondary significance cannot avail them. It may also be noted here that intercession is simply an act of grace, and cannot be claimed by the sinner; and this is what is stated here.

80 No details of the oppressions to which the Israelites were subjected are given in the Holy Qur-án. According to Exod. 1 : 11, "They did set over them taskmasters to afflict them with their burdens," and Exod. 1 : 14, "And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field : all their service wherein they made them serve was with rigour."

81 See Exod. 1 : 15–18 and also 1 : 22 : "And Pharaoh charged all his people, saying, Every son that is born ye shall cast into the river, and every daughter ye shall save alive."

82 The Qur-án does not say how the Israelites were made to pass through the sea or in what manner the parting of the sea was brought about. The word baḥr means a sea or a river. If it was a river, the explanation is simple. The bed may have been practically in a dry condition when the Israelites passed, but a tide may have swept off Pharaoh's army that pursued them. More probably, however, as the Bible says, it was the northern extremity of the Red Sea, and, according to the Bible, "the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night" (Exod. 14 : 21), thus enabling the Israelites to get through. The Muslim rationalist explanation is simpler still. The Red Sea is shown on the basis of ancient geographies to have had a large number of islands, from which the conclusion is drawn that at that time it was not the deep sea that it now is. The crossing happened at the northern extremity of the left-hand branch, and the shallowness of the sea, combined with the ebb, enabled the Israelites to cross it safely, while the tide drowned the Egyptians (S. A.). See also 1593.

83 "And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and got him up into the mount : and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights" (Exod. 24 : 18).

84 Details are contained in 20 : 86–97. The story of the making of the calf is contained in the Bible in the 32nd chapter of Exodus. The only important difference is that while the making of the calf is attributed to Aaron in the Bible, the Holy Qur-án declares that prophet to be innocent in the matter, and ascribes the leadership in the making of the calf and its worship to As-Sámirí. The idea of calf or bull worship seems to have been taken from the Egyptians. In the opinion of Renan, Maspero, and Konig "bull-worship may have been an imitation of the worship of Apis at Memphis or of Mendes at Heliopolis" (En. Bib. col. 631). The writer of the article on the golden calf is, however, of opinion that "adoption from Egypt is unlikely," and his chief reason is that "the Egyptians worshipped only living animals." But the Israelites, too, seem to have been addicted to the worship of living animals in the time of Moses, as the incident narrated in vv. 67–71 shows, and the calf was only an image of a living animal, and at any rate four hundred years' contact with the Egyptians could not have been without its influence, bull-worship dating from a very remote antiquity in Egypt. It was for this reason that the Mosaic law laid great stress upon the slaughter of cows, and the commandment mentioned in v. 67 seems to have been given for the same reason. Notwithstanding all that Moses did to uproot this form of idolatry from among the Israelites, the worshipping of the bull appears to have continued up to the time of Hosea, who rails at it in very strong terms (Hos. 8:5, 10:5).

85 The original word is furqán, an infinitive noun from the root farq, which signifies the making of a distinction between two things, and furqán, according to LL, is anything that makes a separation or distinction between truth and falsity, and hence it signifies a proof or demonstration and also aid or victory. The furqán or distinction which is here spoken of as being given to Moses was Pharaoh's drowning in the sea and the deliverance of the Israelites. The battle of Badr afforded the furqán or distinction in the case of the Holy Prophet, and hence the battle of Badr is called Yaum-ul-furqán or the day of the distinction in 8:41.

86 By the people who were ordered to be killed are apparently meant the leaders in the calf-worship. According to the Bible, the children of Levi were commanded to slay the others, and three thousand men were killed on that day. The Holy Qur-án does not say whether the order was actually carried out; on the other hand we are told that the wrong was forgiven, though the forgiveness may have been granted after the sentence was executed? It is, however, strange that Aaron, who, according to the Bible, made the image and led the people to calf-worship, was not at all punished.

87 The only reference to this story contained in the Bible is in Exod. 19: 16, 17, "And it came to pass on the third day in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled. And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the nether part of the mount." But the Talmud gives the details, and the statement in the Qur-án is thus corroborated.

The ṣá'iqah, as mentioned here, and translated as punishment, is really a cause of death and not death itself (AH, Zj), and it originally signifies thunder or the sound of thunder, and hence any vehement cry (TA-LL); it also means any destructive punishment (LL). The same incident is referred to in 7:155 in the following words: "And Moses chose out of his people seventy men for Our appointment, and when the earthquake overtook them." Thus the ṣá'iqah of this verse is the same as the earthquake in 7:155, and thus it here signifies the rumbling noise which precedes an earthquake.

88 The word maut does not always mean cessation of life. It signifies loss of sensation, deprivation of intellectual faculties, experiencing great grief and sorrow, sleep, etc. (Rgh, LL). The maut mentioned in this verse refers to temporary loss of sensation, because on the same occasion Moses is spoken of as having fallen down "in swoon" (7 : 143), and the statement is followed by the words "when he recovered." A similar fate overtook his companions, and therefore the word here signifies only loss of sensation or a swoon or stupor.

89 According to Exod. 13 : 21 and other verses, when the Israelites departed out of Egypt, God gave them a pillar of cloud to direct them in their march. The cloud continued always from that time to attend the Israelites in the wilderness. It was clear and bright during the night, in order to give them light when it grew dark, and in the daytime it was thick and gloomy, the better to defend them from the excessive heat of the Arabian Desert, through which they performed their journey. The Qur-án does not speak of any such pillar of cloud giving light by night and shade by day, a very unnatural phenomenon to continue for forty years, but simply speaks of clouds having given them shade at some point in their journey in the wilderness, when probably a too excessive heat of the Arabian Desert might have become unbearable.

90 The mann and salwá are the manna and quails of Exodus, 16th chapter. Literally, mann is anything which comes to man without much effort (LL), from من عليه meaning he bestowed upon him a favour. In the saying of the Holy Prophet الكمأة من المن the truffle is spoken of as being mann. LL has the following explanation under the word turanjabeen: "A kind of manna; the manna of the thorny plants called by the Arabs the háj, and hence by European botanists Alhagi; according to Dr. Royle it is a sweetish juice which exudes from the Alhagi maurorum, concretes into small granular masses, and is usually distinguished by the name of Persian manna; a kind of dew that falls mostly in Khurasan and in Ma-wara-un-nahr and in our country, mostly upon the háj; the best thereof is that which is fresh or moist and white (Ibn Seena), the mann or manna mentioned in the Qur-án." Some say it was honey. Salwá means "whatever renders one content in a case of privation." It is a certain bird resembling the quail (LL). The mann and the salwá formed the food of the Israelites in the wilderness. According to Zj it includes all that Allah bestowed on them as a gift in the wilderness and granted to them freely without much exertion on their part (AH).

91 The city is probably Shittim: "And they pitched by Jordan, from Beth-Jesimoth even unto Abel-Shittim in the plains of Moab," or Jericho, which was near by in the same plain (Num. 33 : 49, 50). Here it was that the worst features of the wickedness of Israel were displayed: "And Israel abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab" (Num. 25 : 1).

making obeisance,[92] and say, Put down from us our heavy burdens,[93] We will forgive you your wrongs and give more to those who do good (to others).

Divine Favours on Israel and their Stubbornness

60. Moses prays for drinking water and finds twelve springs. 61. The Israelites get tired of their food in the wilderness and are told to settle in a city. A life of ease leads to transgression and ultimately to ruin.

60 And when Moses prayed for drink for his people, We said: Seek with your staff a way into the mountain.[96] So there flowed from it twelve springs; each tribe knew its drinking-place[97]: Eat and drink of the provisions of Allah, and do not act corruptly in the land, making mischief.

92 Entering the gate while making obeisance does not signify that they were commanded to make their entry into the city while their foreheads were on the ground. The meaning is that they were told to remain submissive while abiding in a city where they would be able to enjoy all the comforts of life.

93 Ḥiṭṭa-tun (from ḥaṭṭa, meaning he put it down) is a prayer for the putting down of the heavy burden of sins from one. The Holy Prophet is reported to have said to his followers: "Say, We ask forgiveness of Allah and turn to Him penitently"; and then to have added: "This is, to be sure, the ḥiṭṭa-tun which the Israelites were commanded to say" (I, Hsh, ch. Hudaibiyya). Therefore, though some of the commentators have interpreted it as meaning the confession of the unity of Allah or the affair of alighting and abiding in the town, the saying of the Holy Prophet makes it clear that it is only a petition for forgiveness.

94 They acted against the law and the revelation which had been given to them. Changing the Divine revelation signifies changing of the form as well as going against the spirit of the Book. According to the Bible, "The people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab. And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat and bowed down to their gods. And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor, and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel" (Num. 25 : 1–3).

95 When a punishment overtakes a people as a consequence of their wicked deeds it is spoken of as having come from heaven, the significance probably being that it cannot be averted by ordinary measures. The pestilence spoken of here is referred to in the Bible in Num. 25 : 8, 9, according to which 24,000 men died of the plague. The same incident is again referred to in 7 : 161, 162.

96 اضرب بعصاك الحجر is ordinarily translated as meaning strike the rock with your staff or rod, but I have adopted a different significance, while another possible significance is: Strike a way into the mountain with your community. The three words forming the phrase require to be explained. First of all we have ḍarb, the primary significance of which is striking or smiting, but according to TA "Ḍarb is used to indicate all kinds of actions except a few." But ḍarb in the sense of going about or seeking a way is of frequent occurrence. ضرب الارض and ضرب فى الارض both signify, he journeyed in the land or went forth or hastened in the land (TA-LL). The word is used in this sense in the well-known report of 'Ali, ضرب يعسوب الدين بذنبه i.e. the leader of the religion shall hasten to go away through the land. And you say ضربت الارض كلها which LA explains as meaning I sought him in the whole land. Then there is the word 'aṣá, the ordinary meaning of which is staff or rod, but the primary significance is the state of combination (TA-LL), and the word is metaphorically used to speak of a community; شق العصا means the contravening of the collective body or the community (of Al-Islam), and of the khwárij it is said, قد شقوا عصا المسلمين i.e. they made a schism in the state of combination and union, or in the community of the Muslims. Hence the saying اياك وقتيل العصا i.e. beware that you are a slayer or one being slain in making a schism in the community of the Muslims (LA). Similarly انشقت العصا signifies disagreement took place (LA). Ḥajr means a rock, and also a mountain to which there is no access, as explained by Sa'labí as occurring in a verse of Firazdaq. Hence the translation adopted, as well as the two alternative significations given, is correct so far as the words are concerned. The Bible, of course, does not contain any contemporaneous record of the events, and what it contains does not render much help. In Exod. 17 : 1–6 we are told that Moses went with the elders to the rock of Horeb, and on his smiting the rock with his rod water flowed out, but there is no mention of twelve springs there, and the flowing of water is stated to have been witnessed only by seventy elders. But as Marah (Exod. 15 : 23) is now known by the name of 'uyún-i-Músá, i.e. the springs of Moses (Bib. Dict., Cambridge Press, Art. "Wilderness"), it is very doubtful whether the incident referred to in Exod. 17 : 1–6 is correctly recorded, the more so as there is a hopeless confusion about the other incidents related to have occurred at Rephidim, the scene of the smiting of the rock.

97 The number of springs is in accordance with the number of tribes. Hence it is very probable that the reference in this verse is to the twelve wells at Elim (Exod. 15 : 27), to which place the Israelites had gone from Marah. Moreover, the twelve tribes, comprising about six hundred thousand souls, could settle on twelve springs apart from each other only if the springs were situated at a distance from each other and did not flow from one source. Compare also the next verse, according to which the demand for a variety of foods is granted by pointing out the natural course of settling in a town and tilling the ground.

98 "We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons and the leeks and the onions and the garlic. But now our soul is dried away:

earth grows, of its herbs and its cucumbers and its garlic[99] and its lentils and its onions. He said: Will you exchange that which is better for that which is worse? Enter a city,[100] so you will have what you ask for. And abasement and humiliation were brought down upon them, and they became deserving of Allah's wrath;[101] this was so because they disbelieved in the communications of Allah and killed the prophets unjustly;[102] this was so because they disobeyed and exceeded the limits.

there is nothing at all beside this manna before our eyes. . . . Then Moses heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent" (Num. 11:5–10).

99 The Arabic word is fūm, which means both garlic and wheat, but as a second reading has ṡaum, which is the word for garlic only, the word cannot be properly rendered as wheat.

100 Sale's translation, "Get ye down into Egypt," is wrong. The word miṣr is used here as a common noun, and means a city. Hazeroth (Num. 11:35) seems to have been the place referred to here, "a station in the desert journey, the second after leaving Sinai, probably to be identified with the modern 'Ain-ul-Huderah, about forty miles N.E. of Jabal Musa" (Bib. Dict., Cam.).

101 The verse speaks of the ultimate condition to which the Israelites were reduced when they persisted in setting at naught the Divine commandments and indulged in immoral and depraved practices. The reference is more particularly to the later history of Israel. A comparison with 3:111 will show the truth of this remark, for that verse, which is almost identical with the one under discussion, clearly refers to the later history of Israel.

102 As shown above, the words refer to the later history of Israel, and there is no anachronism in the commentator's citing instances of the murder of John the Baptist and of Zacharias, son of Barachias, by the Jews. That prophets were murdered by the Jews is borne out by the testimony of Jesus, who holds them guilty for "all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias" (Matt. 23:35), and condemns them for their hypocritical assertion that "if we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets" (Matt. 23:30). There is no doubt an allusion here to the Jewish plans against the life of the Holy Prophet Muhammad.

Israelites' Degeneration

62. Salvation is not the monopoly of one nation. 63, 64. Covenant with Israel and its violation. 65, 66. Sabbath breakers reduced to abjectness. 67–71. Moses orders the slaughter of a cow as a remedy against cow-worship.

62 Surely those who believe, and those who are Jews, and the Christians, and the Sabians,[103] whoever believes in Allah and the last day and does good, they shall have their reward from their Lord, and there is no fear for them, nor shall they grieve.[104]

63 And when We made a covenant with you and raised the mountain above you:[105] Take hold of what We have given you with firmness, and bear in mind what is in it, so that you may guard (against evil).

103 The Sabians are mentioned in the Holy Qur-án on three occasions only, here and in 5:69 along with the Jews and the Christians, and in 22:17 with these and the Magians. According to En. Br., the Sabians were a semi-Christian sect of Babylonia, closely resembling the so-called "Christians of St. John the Baptist." The probable derivation of the name is traced to an Aramaic root, and the root meaning is said to be those who wash themselves, and this is said to be corroborated by Arab writers applying to them the name Al-mughtasilah. The idea that the Sabians were star-worshippers is rejected, the error, it is said, being due to the pseudo-Sabians of Harrian, who chose to be known by that name in the reign of Al-Mamoon, in 830 A.D., in order to be classed as the "followers of the Book." The commentators hold different opinions regarding them, most of them agreeing that they are representatives of a religion between Judaism and Christianity, based on the doctrine of unity, but also maintaining worship of angels. The majority do not include them in the Ahl-il-kitáb, i.e. the followers of the Book (AH).

104 This verse strikes at the root of the idea of a favoured nation whose members alone may be entitled to salvation. The subject is introduced here to show that even the Jews, notwithstanding those transgressions which had made them deserving of Divine wrath, were entitled to a goodly reward if they believed and did good deeds. It should be borne in mind that, as shown in foot-note 9, belief in Allah and the last day is equivalent to belief in Islam as the true religion. The statement made amounts to this, that salvation cannot be attained by mere lip-profession by the Muslims, nor by any other people unless they adhere to a true belief and good actions. As to those who stick to their own religions, we are told in 22:17 that "Allah will judge between them on the day of resurrection." The existence of good men in other religions is not denied by the Holy Qur-án, but perfect peace, or the state of absolute contentment which is indicated by freedom from grief and fear, is obtainable only in Islam, because Islam alone is the religion of absolute submission to the Divine Being.

105 "They stood at the nether part of the mount" (Exod. 19:17). There is nothing in the words of the Qur-án to support the baseless story that the mountain was suspended in mid-heaven over the heads of the Israelites to frighten them into submission (see foot-note 957). The use of the word rafa' is in accordance with the Arabic idiom, for it signifies 64 Then you turned back after that; so were it not for the grace of Allah and His mercy on you, you would certainly have been among the losers.

65 And certainly you have known those among you who exceeded the limits of the Sabbath,[106] so We said to them: Be (as) apes, despised and hated.[107]

ثُمَّ تَوَلَّيْتُم مِّنۢ بَعْدِ ذَٰلِكَ ۖ فَلَوْلَا

the rearing or uprearing of a building, or making it high or lofty (Rgh-LL). In this sense the word is used in v. 127.

106 The root-meaning of sabt (from which Sabt, meaning Sabbath, is derived) is cutting off (Rgh). This is also the opinion of Az, who denies that the word sabt conveys the significance of rest (LL). The Sabt or the Sabbath is so called because the Jews ceased thereon from work (TA). The Jews and the Christians observed a particular day for religious worship, and they were forbidden to do any work on that day. In this sense there is no Sabbath among the Muslims, because in Islam no particular day is set apart for Divine worship. On the other hand, the Muslim is required to pray in the very midst of his everyday work, and even the Juma' (Friday) prayers are no exception, for the Qur-án expressly allows the doing of work both before and after the Juma' prayers (see foot-note 2505).

The commandments regarding the observance of the Sabbath by the Jews are manifold, but we find the Jews so persistently violating them that the later prophets openly reproved them for it (see foot-note 107).

107 Mjd explains this in the following words: They were not transformed or metamorphosed; it is only a parable which Allah has set forth for them, the like of what He has set forth in likening them to asses (62:5), i.e. their hearts were transformed, not that they were metamorphosed into apes (IJ). The verse that follows lends support to this explanation, as a monkey could not afford a lesson to the generations that came after the metamorphosis had taken place, but the abject condition to which the Israelites were reduced could do so. Rgh observes in explaining this verse: It is said that He rather made them morally like apes. Compare also 5:60: "(Worse is he) whom Allah has cursed, and brought His wrath upon him, and of whom He made apes and swine, and he who served the devil: these are worse in place and more erring from the straight path." This description of the same people clearly shows that it is men who imitate apes and swine that are meant. See also 4:47: "Or (We shall) curse them as We cursed the violators of the Sabbath." Now, in the case of the Holy Prophet's opponents from among the Jews, who are referred to in the words We shall curse them, there was no metamorphosis, but here it is stated that the same curse must overtake them as overtook the violators of the Sabbath. A reference to Deuteronomy, 28th chapter, will show that the curses which Moses prophesied for them meant their being scattered among the nations of the earth, and this was the fate which overtook the Prophet's enemies from among the Jews. The etymology of the word qiradah supports the above view. The preterite form qarida signifies it (wool) fell off by degrees from the sheep, and also, he became abject, or became silent by reason of abjectness (LL). Qiradah is the plural of qird, meaning an ape, and among the Arabs the ape is a proverbially incontinent animal. Arabs say ازنی من قرد i.e. more incontinent than an ape (LL). Turning to the Bible, we find that the Israelites became apes in all the senses in which that word is used in the Arabic language by violating the Divine commandments: "Thou hast despised Mine holy things, and hast profaned My Sabbath. In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood: and in thee they eat upon 66 So We made them an example to those who witnessed it and those who came after it, and an admonition to those who guard (against evil).

67 And when Moses said to his people: Surely Allah commands you that you should sacrifice a cow;[108] they said: Do you ridicule us? He said: I seek the protection of Allah from being one of the ignorant.

Ar. dost thou.

68 They said: Call on your Lord for our sake to make it plain to us what she is. (Moses) said: He says, Surely she is a cow neither advanced in age nor too young, of middle age between that (and this); do therefore what you are commanded.

the mountains; in the midst of thee they commit lewdness. In thee have they discovered their father's nakedness: in thee have they humbled her that was set apart for pollution. And one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife; and another hath lewdly defiled his daughter-in-law; and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter. . . . And I will scatter thee among the heathen, and disperse thee in the countries" (Ezek. 22:8–15). Both the Bible and the Holy Qur-án call unholy men dogs, and, bearing this in mind, it is not difficult to see what is meant by apes when the words despised and hated are added to make the sense still clearer. All the stories relating the actual metamorphosis of men into apes on a certain morning are absurd and without basis. Moses' prophecy of the fate of the Jewish nation amply bears out their description as given in the Holy Qur-án, here and elsewhere: "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other. . . . And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest; but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes and sorrow of mind" (Deut. 28:64–65).

108 The slaughter of the cow referred to in this verse has nothing in common with the slaying of a heifer as an expiation of an uncertain murder in Deut. 21:1–9, or the slaughter of a red heifer, the ashes of which purify one who has touched the dead body of any man (Num. 19:1–19), except the fact that as the Israelites held the cow in great honour, and even worshipped it, as is clear from their worship of the golden calf, they were ordered to slaughter such cows as were usually let abroad and worshipped as sacred objects—cows not wrought with, nor drawn in yoke, but let loose to wander abroad, and the cow mentioned in these verses is a typical cow answering this description. This type of cow is still an object of special reverence in India, and the slaughter of this particular type was especially enjoined upon the Jews, according to the Bible as well as the Holy Qur-án, the object being to root out cow-worship from among them. But whereas the Biblical injunction to slaughter a heifer is a general injunction to be observed whenever an uncertain murder takes place or an unclean person is to be purified, the injunction, as contained in the Qur-án, notwithstanding the many absurd stories added to it by some commentators, points to the slaughter of one particular cow which was probably likely to become an object of worship. Indeed, there is a striking resemblance between the colour of the golden calf and the cow ordered to be slaughtered. The concluding words of the section show that, because of their reverence for that particular cow, the Jews were very averse

69 They said: Call on your Lord for our sake to make it plain to us what her colour is. (Moses) said: He says, Surely she is a yellow cow; her colour is intensely yellow, giving delight to the beholders.

70 They said: Call on your Lord for our sake to make it plain to us what she is, for surely to us the cows are all alike, and if Allah please we shall surely be guided aright.

71 (Moses) said: He says: Surely she is a cow not made submissive that she should plough the land, nor does she irrigate the tilth, sound, without a blemish in her. They said: Now you have brought the truth; so they sacrificed her, though they had not the mind to do (it).[109] to slaughter it. As for the description of the red heifer, "It had a whole treatise to itself in the Mishna, where its qualifications were elaborated to such a point that at last R. Nisin said that no one since the days of Moses had been able to find one fit to be slain" (En. Bib. col. 846). This remark clearly suggests that in the time of Moses one fit to be slain and answering that description had been found. See foot-note 84 for the Israelites' worship of cows.

109 The concluding words of this verse, as well as those of the 69th, show that the cow which the Israelites were commanded to slaughter was one specially venerated by them: it was delightful in appearance, and the Israelites were averse to slaughter it. This shows that this particular cow was likely to become an object of worship among them, and hence Moses' precaution. The directions contained in Deut. 21:1-9 and elsewhere in regard to the slaughter of this type of cow show further precautions against a similar tendency of the Israelite mind.

A few words may be added as regards the translation of the concluding words of the verse. Káda is generally used to indicate the nearness of an action (Rgh), i.e. that an action was about to take place, and hence it is more frequently used in conjunction with some other verb, and كاد يفعل signifies he was near to doing so; or he well-nigh or nearly or almost did so. Hence ما كادوا يفعلون signifies they were not near to doing it. But Káda is also synonymous with aráda, i.e. he desired (S-LL), and كاد يفعل signifies he purposed or intended doing so (Ls-LL); hence the translation adopted, which gives a correct idea of the original.

They grow in Hard-heartedness

72, 73. Their designs on the life of a great man. 74. Their hearts harden. 75. Their perversion of the Divine revelation. 76–80. Their ignorance and presumptuousness. 81, 82. Evil and good bear each its own fruit.

72 And when you (almost) killed a man,[110] then you disagreed with respect to that, and Allah was to bring forth that which you were going to hide.[111]
73 So We said: Strike him with somewhat of it;[112] thus Allah brings the dead to life,[113]

Or, liken his affair to.

وَإِذْ قَتَلْتُمْ نَفْسًا فَادّٰرَءْتُمْ فِيهَا

فَقُلْنَا اضْرِبُوْهُ بِبَعْضِهَا
كَذٰلِكَ يُحْيِ اللّٰهُ الْمَوْتٰى

110 The story generally narrated by the commentators to explain this passage is not based on any saying of the Holy Prophet or of any of his companions, and is not even met with in the Bible. It is, moreover, in itself absurd and opposed to the text of the Holy Qur-án, for the guilt of murder is here attributed to the whole community and not to an individual, as in the story according to which a man had killed his uncle and the murderer's name was only discovered by the dead body being quickened when struck by the flesh of a slaughtered cow, which is supposed to be the cow spoken of in the last section. But there is nothing to show this connection between these two sections. Another explanation is that the incident refers to a Jew murdering a Muslim woman in the time of the Holy Prophet, an incident which is narrated in the Bkh. But the very indefiniteness of the incident is an indication that it refers to some well-known event in history, and as almost all incidents of the stubbornness of the Jewish nation prior to the time of Jesus have been mentioned, it becomes almost certain that this incident refers to Jesus himself, as it was with respect to his death that disagreement took place, and many doubted his death. This inference becomes stronger when we compare the incidents narrated here with the same incidents as narrated in the fourth chapter in vv. 153–157, where, after enumerating almost all the incidents narrated here in the three previous sections, the Qur-án goes on to accuse the Jews in the following words: "And their saying: Surely we have killed the Messiah, Jesus son of Mary, the apostle of Allah; and they did not kill him nor did they crucify him, but (the matter) was made dubious to them, and most surely those who differ therein are only in a doubt about it; they have no knowledge respecting it, but only follow a conjecture" (4:157). It will be seen that the incidents of the last three sections are repeated in 4 : 153–155 briefly, and then comes their sin against Jesus in 4 : 157. The part quoted answers exactly to verses 72 and 73, only that the name is omitted here. This comparison makes it clear that it is the apparent killing of Jesus that is referred to here. The words you killed (Ar. qataltum) are used because in the first place the Jews asserted that they had killed him, and secondly, because metaphorically a person may be said to have been killed when he is made to appear as if he were dead. Thus in the well-known saying اذا مات ميت (lit., when a dead man dies) the word dead really signifies not the dead man, but one who is about to die. And 'Umar's saying, اقتلوا سعدا is explained by LA as meaning, make him like one who is slain. LA also allows the use of the word qatl for a severe punishment in cases in which the drunkard and the habitual thief are spoken of as deserving of qatl in certain sayings of early-day judges.

111 The Jews wanted to do away with Jesus, but Allah had decided that he should not die.

and He shows you His signs that you may understand.

74 Then your hearts hardened after that, so that they were like rocks, rather worse in hardness; and surely there are some rocks from which streams burst forth, and surely there are some of them which split asunder so water issues out of them, and surely there are some of them which fall down for fear of Allah, and Allah is not at all heedless of what you do.[114]

Ar. harder.

75 Do you then hope that they would believe in you, and a party from among them indeed used to hear the word of Allah, then altered it after they had understood it, and they know (this).[115]

112 The construction of the phrase اضربوه ببعضها is rather difficult, but a comparison with 4:157 makes the meaning clear. Ḍarb, as already noted, conveys a number of significations. It means striking as well as likening, and an instance of the latter significance we find in the Qur-án itself, where it is said كذلك يضرب الله الحق و الباطل i.e. thus does Allah compare truth and falsehood (13:17). In ba'ḍi-há, meaning somewhat of it, the personal pronoun há, i.e. it, refers to the act of murder. The act of murder was not completed in the case of Jesus, for after he was taken down from the cross his legs were not broken, as in the case of the thieves. The meaning of the sentence is therefore according to the signification of ḍarb that we adopt: strike him with partial death, or liken his condition to that of the partially dead man; and thus "the matter was made dubious," as we have in 4:157. There is no other case of a murder in Jewish history in which the whole nation may have been guilty and which might answer to the description of these two verses.

113 This was really a case of giving life to the dead, for Jesus Christ was dead to all appearance. Those actually dead do not return to life in this world, for which see footnotes 1659, 1731, and 2165.

114 The hardened hearts are likened to rocks, and then they are metaphorically spoken of as falling down from the fear of Allah, where really the bowing down of the hearts from fear of Allah is meant.

115 The meaning of this verse is that the Muslims in vain hoped that the Jews would believe in their Prophet, for they were a people who altered even that which they believed to be Divine revelation to make it suit their own ends, so there was little hope of their turning penitently to a new revelation. That the Israelites did not preserve their sacred books in their purity is a constant charge laid by the Qur-án against the Jews, who never disputed its truth, for if they had, the Qur-án would surely have mentioned their arguments, as it has done in so many other cases. In fact, the alteration and corruption of the various books of the Bible is now proved beyond all doubt, and thus recent investigation has laboriously arrived at the conclusion which was announced by the Holy Qur-án thirteen hundred years ago.

76 And when they meet those who believe they say, We believe, and when they are alone one with another they say: Do you talk to them of what Allah has disclosed to you that they may contend with you by this before your Lord? Do you not then understand?[116]

77 Do they not know that Allah knows what they keep secret and what they make known?

78 And there are among them illiterates[117] who know not the Book but only lies, and they do but conjecture.

Or, buy therewith.

80 And they say: Fire shall not touch us but for a few days.[118] Say: Have you received a promise from Allah, then Allah will not fail to perform His promise, or do you speak against Allah what you do not know?

116 They remonstrate with their less careful coreligionists, who would talk of the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet with the Muslims, telling them that the Muslims would benefit by these disclosures in the sight of their Lord. The absurdity of this argument is made clear in the next verse. Truth was truth in the sight of Allah, whether they revealed or concealed it.

117 The word translated here as illiterates is ummiyyún, plural of ummí, which signifies one who neither writes nor reads a writing (Rgh). The word is therefore specially applied to the Arabs, who were generally unacquainted with reading and writing, exceptions being rare. It is, however, here applied to the illiterate Jews, and this is a conclusive proof that both Rodwell and Lane are wrong in holding ummi to signify a non-Jew. See foot-note 950 for full discussion.

118 According to Sale, "It is a received opinion among the Jews at present that no person, be he ever so wicked, or of whatever sect, shall remain in hell above eleven months, or at most a year, except Dathan and Abiram and atheists, who will be tormented there to all eternity."

83 And when We made a covenant with the children of Israel:[120] You shall not serve any but Allah[121] and (you shall do) good to (your) parents,[122] and to the near of kin, and to the orphans and the needy,[123] and you shall speak to men good words[124] and keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate.[125] Then you turned back except a few of you and (now too) you turn aside.

consequences. The inmates of the fire are here stated to be those who earn evil, i.e. those who devote themselves wholly to the doing of evil, and thus find themselves beset on every side by their evil deeds. These are the men who give themselves up to evil, and who, therefore, ultimately find themselves in the power of evil, which even in this life, but more palpably in the life after death, assumes the form of a burning fire. It should be noted that the man who struggles against evil, however long that struggle may take, to overcome an evil inclination, is not the man who earns evil, because the earnest struggle in which the fighter against evil hates and detests evil, and seeks to overcome it, always ends in a victory for the good and noble qualities in man's nature. The Qur-án makes this clear by using the words earns evil.

120 Allah's making a covenant with a people signifies His giving commandments to them. Compare Deut. 4:13: "And He declared unto you His covenant, which He commanded you to perform."

121 Compare Exod. 20:3: "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me," and 23:25: "And ye shall serve the Lord your God," and various other places.

122 Compare Exod. 20:12, and Deut. 5:16: "Honour thy father and thy mother."

123 Compare Deut. 15:11: "Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, to thy needy, in thy land."

124 The speaking of a good word stands for kind dealing.

125 Compare Deut. 14:28, 29: "At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates. And the Levite (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee), and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest."

85 Yet you it is who slay your people and turn a party from among you out of their homes, backing each other up against them unlawfully and exceeding the limits; and if they should come to you as captives you would ransom them—while their very turning out was unlawful for you.[127] Do you then believe in a part of the Book and disbelieve in the other? What then is the reward of such among you as do this but disgrace in the life of this world, and on the day of resurrection they shall be sent back to the most grievous chastisement, and Allah is not at all heedless of what you do.

126 "Thou shalt not kill" (Exod. 20 : 13): "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man servant, nor his maid servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's" (Exod. 20 : 17). But the reference here is more probably to the important treaty of mutual obligation in writing which the Holy Prophet entered into with the Jews when he settled at Medina. By this treaty the Muslims and the Jews were bound not only not to turn their hands against each other, but also to defend one another against a common enemy. In fact, this treaty aimed at a perfect union among the discordant elements of the population of Medina. I quote a few clauses to give the reader an insight into the spirit of this treaty: "Whosoever is rebellious, or seeketh to spread enmity and sedition, the hand of every man shall be against him, even if he be a son. . . . Whosoever of the Jews followeth us shall have aid and succour; they shall not be injured, nor shall any enemy be aided against them. . . . The Jewish clans in alliance with the several tribes of Medina are one people with the believers. . . . The Jews will profess their religion, the Muslims theirs. As with the Jews, so with their adherents. No one shall go forth to war excepting with the permission of Muhammad, but this shall not hinder any from seeking lawful revenge. The Jews shall be responsible for their expenditure, the Muslims for theirs; but if attacked each shall come to the assistance of the other. Medina shall be sacred and inviolable for all that join this treaty. Controversies and disputes shall be referred for the decision of God and His Prophet. None shall join the men of Mecca or their allies, for verily the engaging parties are bound together against every one that shall threaten Medina. War and peace shall be made in common" (IHsh-Muir).

127 It is related that the two Jewish tribes Quraiza and Nadeer, living side by side at Medina, made an alliance with Aus and Khazraj, the two rival tribes of Medina, respectively, and when the latter fought against each other, their allies took part in the fighting, and thus one Jewish tribe slaughtered and imprisoned the other and laid waste their habitations, but afterwards collected subscriptions for the release of the Jewish prisoners, giving reason for this that their law commanded them to redeem the prisoners, and they fought against their coreligionists for the honour of their allies. The reference is to this inconsistent action on their part (Rz). Sale makes a mistake in treating Aus

87 And most certainly We gave Moses the book and We sent apostles after him one after another: and We gave Jesus, the son of Mary, clear arguments and strengthened him with the holy revelation.[128] What! whenever then an apostle came to you with that which your souls did not desire, you were insolent so you called some liars and some you slay.[129] and Khazraj as Jewish tribes, and it is due to this mistake that he translates aḥláf wrongly as meaning chiefs, whereas it means allies. If, however, the reference in the previous verse be considered to be to the treaty made by the Holy Prophet with the Jews, the slaying and turning a party out of their homes would be a prophetic reference to the Jewish attitude towards the Muslims later on, when they joined with the enemies of the Muslims, and the punishment or disgrace which they are threatened with at the end of the verse was witnessed by all the three Jewish tribes of Medina, the Qainuqá', the Naḍeer, and the Quraiẓa, on account of their violation of the treaty.

128 Sale has rightly pointed out the error of confounding the Holy Ghost of the Christian literature with the rúḥ-ul-qudus as that word is used in the Holy Qur-án. The word rúḥ, while signifying the vital principle of life, or the spirit, also signifies inspiration or Divine revelation (Zj, Q-LL) and also mercy, for which see foot-note 653. Hence rúḥ-ul-qudus may be translated either as the holy spirit or as the holy revelation, and both these significances are adopted by the commentators (Rz). By rúḥ-ul-qudus as signifying the holy spirit is generally understood the Angel Gabriel, the reason given being that Gabriel is the angel who communicates the Divine messages to His servants, messages which are a source of life to mankind, as spirit gives life to the body. And by rúḥ-ul-qudus as signifying the holy revelation is understood the Gospel, because it gave spiritual life to Jesus' followers (Rz). The latter significance is the one which is corroborated by the Qur-án itself, for Divine revelation is plainly called a rúḥ in 16:2 and 40:15, where Allah is spoken of as sending the angels with the rúḥ (the only possible meaning of rúḥ there being revelation), while in 42:52 the Qur-án itself is called a rúḥ, for there we have, "And thus did We reveal to you an inspired book by Our command," where instead of an inspired book we have rúḥ in the original. Nor is the holy spirit a special attendant of Jesus Christ, for according to 58:22 the faithful followers of the 88 And they say: Our hearts are covered.[130] Nay, Allah has cursed them[131] on account of their unbelief; so little it is that they believe.

89 And when there came to them a Book from Allah verifying that which they have,[a] and aforetime they used to pray for victory against those who disbelieved, but when there came to them that which they recognized, they disbelieved in it; so Allah's curse is on the unbelievers.[132]

90 Evil is that for which they have sold their souls—that they should deny what Allah has revealed, out of envy that Allah should send down of His grace on whomsoever of His servants He pleases; so they have made themselves deserving of wrath upon wrath, and there is a disgraceful chastisement for the unbelievers.

Holy Prophet were all strengthened by the Divine spirit, which is the same as the holy spirit. Addressing Hassán bin Sábit, a poet companion, the Holy Prophet is reported to have said, "And the holy spirit is with you."

129 The change of tense from the past to the preterite is in allusion to the attempts which were then being made on the life of the Holy Prophet. Rz thus explains this change: "For you seek by devices the murder of Muhammad, were it not that I had protected him from you."

130 Ghulf is plural of aghlaf, which means enclosed in a covering (LL). Hence, applied to the heart it means, covered from hearing and accepting what the prophet says. But ghulf is also one of the plurals of ghiláf, which means a covering, a case, or a repository, and if taken in that sense the significance would be that their hearts were repositories of knowledge, and being themselves repositories, could not accept from others.

131 Curse, as implying an imprecation of evil, is not the exact equivalent of la'nat, which implies the banishing and estranging of one from good (LA), though it must necessarily be adopted as such for want of another simple equivalent. As to the meaning of the verse, the allegation of the Israelites was that, being descendants of prophets, their hearts were the repositories of knowledge, and being already, as it were, full of knowledge, they did not stand in need of more; and they were told that it was really their unbelief which became the cause of their estrangement from the good which the Holy Prophet had brought.

132 The Jews expected that when the prophet spoken of in Deut. 18:18 came he would make them victorious over their disbelieving opponents. "And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all His commandments which I commanded thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth: and all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God" (Deut. 28:1-2). Read it along with Deut. 18:15-19, and the significance of "hearkening" becomes clear. As to the fact that the Jews were still waiting for his appearance, see John 1:25, "Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not the Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet"; that prophet, as in John 1:23, referring to the promised prophet of Deut. 18:15 and 18. This shows clearly that they waited for three different prophets. Acts 3:21–23 also shows that the prophet spoken of in Deut. 18:18 was still waited for after the death of Christ.

133 By saying that they believed in what was revealed to them, they asserted that they could not accept a revelation granted to another than an Israelite, the reply to which is given in the words that the revelation of the Holy Prophet is the truth verifying what is contained in their books, the reference being to the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet contained in Deut. 18:15–18 and other places.

134 They are shown guilty out of their own mouths. Their contention was that they would believe only in a revelation which was granted to an Israelite prophet. Yet they killed even Israelite prophets.

135 The original word is isma'ū, meaning primarily hear or listen, but it may also mean obey (AH), a meaning given to it in the Qur-án itself in 36:25, where فاسمعون is interpreted as meaning, "Therefore do ye obey me" (TA). It may also mean accept, as in سمع الله لمن حمده (LL). The sense of the word as used here is made clear by the similar expression in v. 63, "And when We made a covenant with you and raised the mountain above you: Take hold of what We have given you with firmness and bear in mind what is in it." Instead of the last words we have here isma'ū, hence the meaning is be obedient or accept.

136 They did not utter these words with their tongues, but it is an expression of their condition, for the word qaul is used to denote what is expressive of the condition of a thing though it may not have uttered the words. قالت العينان means the eyes showed (not spoke) (TA). Kf explains the words as meaning, We hear the words and we disobey the command.

account of their unbelief.[137] Say: Evil is that which your belief bids you if you are believers.

94 Say: If the future abode with Allah is specially for you to the exclusion of the people, then invoke death if you are truthful.[138]

95 And they will never invoke it on account of what their hands have sent on before, and Allah knows the unjust.

96 And you will most certainly find them the greediest of men for life, (greedier) than even those who are polytheists; one of them loves that he should be granted a life of a thousand years, and his being granted a long life will in no way remove him further off from the chastisement, and Allah sees what they do.[139]

137 The story that the Israelites were actually made to drink of water mixed with the ashes of the calf cannot be based upon these words, which only signify that they had imbibed the love of the calf or cow-worship. That the Holy Qur-án lends no support to the story is shown by 20:97, for there it is plainly stated that the ashes of the calf were scattered by being thrown into the sea. The use of the word qulúb in the expression ushribu fi qulúbihim does not admit that the meaning of the word ushribú be taken literally. But according to Exod. 32:20 and Deut. 9:21 the Israelites were actually made to drink of the water on which the ashes of the calf were strewed.

138 According to I'Ab, فتمنوا الموت signifies invoke death on the party that lies or is false in its assertion (IJ). A similar challenge, but in fuller words, is contained in 3:60, "Whoever then disputes with you in this matter after what has come to you of knowledge, then say: Come! let us call our sons and your sons, and our women and your women, and our people and your people, then let us be earnest in prayer and pray for the curse of Allah on the liars." The challenge is given to the Christians, and the same challenge in fewer words is given here to the Jews. Or the meaning may be that they should pray that death should overtake the Prophet, for their prayer against an impostor, as they considered him to be, must no doubt be listened to. This last significance is favoured by Ma'álim, which renders al-maut here as meaning my death, referring to the Prophet.

139 By the polytheists are probably meant the Zoroastrians, who, when invoking a blessing on any one, prayed that he should live a thousand years. Or, the reference here may be to the Christians, because they also hold the polytheistic belief of the divinity of a man. As to their desire of living for a thousand years and its fulfilment, as indicated here, see 1602. It would thus mean the life of a people in prosperity and not the life of an individual.

140 Michael was regarded by the Jews as a friend, "the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people" (Dan. 12:1). And they looked upon Gabriel as their enemy, because he was considered to be an avenging angel who brought down Divine punishment upon the guilty. But in the Bible, as in the Holy Qur-án, Gabriel is mentioned as delivering Divine messages to men, as in Dan. 8:16 and in Luke 1:19 and 26. According to Muqátal, the Jews considered Gabriel as their enemy because they thought he was charged to convey the gift of prophecy to the Israelites, and he conveyed it to another people, i.e. the Ishmaelites (Rz). Some commentators look upon both the words Jibríl and Míkál as foreign words having no derivation in Arabic (AH), but others consider Jibríl as a combination of jabr, meaning a servant, and il, meaning Allah, and Míkál as made up of Mík and íl, the two words having the same significance as jabr and íl respectively (IJ).

141 The word izn signifies permission, leave, or concession of liberty to do a thing; and sometimes command, likewise will; also knowledge (LL).

142 The enmity of man to Allah and Allah to man is thus explained: In reality there can be no enmity between Allah and man; as to man's enmity to Allah, it signifies opposition to His commandments, and as to Allah's enmity to man, it signifies the recompense for his opposition (AH). Note that Allah is here said to be the enemy of those unbelievers only who first make themselves the enemies of the apostles of Allah, and hence also of the angels and the Divine Being Himself. The same law of the punishment of an evil being spoken of in the terms of that evil really finds an expression here, as is referred to in foot-note 27.

143 The covenant referred to in the previous verse as being cast aside, and the throwing of the Book behind their backs, both refer to the Israelites paying no heed to the prophecy of Deut. 18:18, which was verified by the advent of the Holy Prophet. So clearly did that prophecy point to the Holy Prophet that it is again and again referred to in this chapter as the most powerful argument against the inimical attitude of the Jews.

144 According to an interpretation accepted by all commentators, by the devils here are meant human devils, or devils in the form of men (AH, Rz).

145 فلان يتلو على فلان and يقول عليه mean such a one lies or says what is false against such a one (TA-LL). Rz says تلا عليه means he lied, and thus supports what is said above.

146 By the mulk of Solomon is here meant his prophethood and his law and what befell him or his time or kingdom (AH, Rz). The Jews attributed Solomon's glory to certain devilish crafts, and this is the lie which they are spoken of here as having forged against Solomon's prophethood (Rz).

147 In this respect the Holy Qur-án contradicts the Bible, which says that the wives of Solomon "turned away his heart after other gods" (1 Kings 11:4), and that "the Lord was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel" (1 Kings 11:9). It is now established that the statement of the Bible is wrong in this respect. The Rev. T. K. Cheyne shows conclusively in the Encyclopædia Biblica that Solomon was "not a polytheist," and, having shown how mistakes crept into the Bible statement, he concludes: "That Solomon had a number of wives, both Israelite and non-Israelite, is probable enough, but he did not make altars for all of them, nor did he himself combine the worship of his wives' gods with that of Yahwe" (En. Bib. col. 4689).

148 According to Jauhari every thing of which the origin is subtle is siḥr. The primary significance is the turning a thing from its proper manner of being to another manner (TA-LL). And the same authority says: المرأة تسحر الناس بعينها i.e. the woman enchants or fascinates men by her eye (A); and سحره بكلامه i.e. he caused him to incline to him by his soft or elegant speech (Mgh). Hence it is applied to skilful eloquence, and hence also the saying of the Prophet: ان من البيان لسحرا i.e. verily there is a kind of eloquence that is enchantment. And also saḥara-hú means he deceived or beguiled him (S, Mgh, Q).

And سحرت الفضة signifies I gilded silver (Ham-LL). Siḥr is also synonymous with fasád, as is indicated in the TA, thus signifying the act of corrupting, marring, spoiling, etc. It is also the producing of what is false in the form of truth, and embellishment by falsification and deceit. Hence the word siḥr carries a very wide significance, and its use in Arabic is not equivalent to that of sorcery or enchantment in the English language, though I have been compelled to adopt the latter word in the translation.

149 According to Sale, the Persian Magi "mention two rebellious angels of the same names, now hung up by the feet with their heads downwards, in the territory of Babel," for which he refers to Hyde, de Rel. vet. Pers., chap. 12. And he adds: "The Jews have something like this of the Angel Shamhozai, who, having debauched himself with women repented, and by way of penance hung himself up between heaven and earth." Upon these two stories seem to be based the lengthy fables of some commentators, but the more learned reject them. Not only does the Qur-án not contain a word of these stories, but it plainly discredits them by denying that sorcery was revealed to certain angels at Babel, or that angels taught sorcery to men, giving them at the same time the warning, as was the common belief: We are only a trial, therefore do not disbelieve. This statement was added to the story to save the character of the angels as penitent. The Arabic lexicons give the two words Hárút and Márút under the roots hart and mart, and explain harata as meaning he rent a thing and marata as meaning he broke a thing.

149A The statement made in the Qur-án amounts to this. The Jews, instead of following the word of God, followed certain evil crafts which they falsely attributed to Solomon and to two angels at Babel. Solomon is declared free of any such sinfulness attributed to him, and the story of the two angels is declared to be a fabrication. But the Jews are blamed for learning from these two sources, i.e. by their fabrications against Solomon and the story of the two angels, things by which they made a distinction between a man and his wife. The personal pronoun húma (meaning two) refers to the two fabrications, viz. their fabrication against Solomon and their fabrication of the story of the angels. The clue to what this was is probably contained in what follows: But they cannot hurt with it any one except with Allah's permission, showing that by this craft they intended to inflict some injury on the Holy Prophet. Similar words are met with in chapter 58, where, after denouncing the secret counsels of the enemies of Islam, it is said in v. 10: "Secret counsels are only the work of the devil that he may cause to grieve those who believe, and he cannot hurt them in the least except with Allah's permission." It is evident that the 58th chapter was revealed at Medina, where secret counsels of the nature of masonic societies were carried on against the Holy Prophet by the Jews, and these secret counsels are stated to be the work of the devil, the expression being closely parallel to what is stated in the verse under discussion, where the Jews are spoken of as following the devil while ascribing their evil doctrines to prophets and angels. In 58:10 we also see that the object of these secret counsels was to cause hurt to the Holy Prophet and to the Muslims, and the same is stated to be the object of the evil machinations of the Jews in the verse under discussion. These considerations point clearly to the fact that the secret counsels of the Jews mentioned in chapter 58 are referred to here. It is further clear that the words by which they make a distinction between a man and his wife refer to secret gatherings of the nature of masonic societies, for it is in freemasonry and in no other religious society of the world that women are totally excluded. Instead of mentioning freemasonry itself, therefore, its distinctive characteristic is mentioned. And however untrustworthy may be the old histories of freemasonry, there is no doubt that the institution is an ancient one, "having subsisted from time immemorial" (En. Br.). The statement made in the "Book of Constitutions" that Cyrus constituted Jerubbabel grand master in Judah (En. Br.) may not be without a substratum of truth.

150 Rá'iná is equivalent to give ear to, hearken, or listen to us, but with a slight change of accent it becomes ra'ina, which means he is foolish or stupid or unsound in intellect, the derivation in the first case being from ra'á, i.e. being mindful, and in the second case from ra'n, i.e. being foolish (LL). The Jews in derision changed the accent, "distorting the word," as stated in 4 : 46, and thus made it a term of reproach. The word unẓurná, which means wait for us or grant us a little delay, is suggested instead, because it cannot be distorted like its equivalent rá'iná. The Muslims are here forbidden to use a certain form of expression, but the real object is to show how great was the hatred of the Jews towards the Holy Prophet, so that they did not observe even the ordinary rules of decency. Morally the injunction is one worthy of the highest regard, as it disapproves of the use of words bearing a sinister meaning.

151 Khair, lit., good, and raḥmat, lit., mercy, both stand here for Divine revelation, for it was this good which the Jews would not like to be sent down to the Muslims, and it was this mercy for which the Muslims had been chosen (AH).

152 These words are generally considered as forming the basis of what is known as the doctrine of abrogation in the Qur-án. The very disagreement of all authorities upholding it as to the actual verses abrogated is sufficient testimony against it, for while some accept no more than five verses to be abrogated, others carry the number to hundreds. If any verses that are to be met with in the Holy Qur-án were really abrogated, there ought to have been the same agreement regarding their abrogation as regarding their being part of the Divine revelation. But the hopeless disagreement on this point of the upholders of this doctrine shows clearly that the doctrine of abrogation in reference to the Qur-án is based on mere conjecture. What happened was really this, that somebody, being unable to reconcile one verse with another, pronounced one of them to have been abrogated by the other, while another was able to effect a reconciliation between them, and therefore dismissed the idea of abrogation. The right course would have been to produce the authority of the Holy Prophet. But there is not a single report tracing the abrogation of a single verse to the Holy Prophet, who could be the only authority whose pronouncement regarding the abrogation of a verse could be accepted as final. That is another reason which discredits the doctrine of the abrogation of the Quranic verses.

Reading the verse under discussion in the light of the context, it is clear that the Jews are addressed here. The two previous sections deal, more or less, with a particular Jewish objection to the revelation of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, viz., that they could not accept a new revelation which was not granted to an Israelite. This is plainly stated in vv. 90 and 91: "Evil is that for which they have sold their souls, that they should deny what Allah has revealed, out of envy that Allah should send down of His grace on whomsoever of His servants He pleases"; "They say: We believe in that which was revealed to us; and they deny what is besides that." The same subject is continued, the Jews being addressed throughout. Their objection was: why was another revelation sent down to Muhammad, and why was a law containing new commandments promulgated? That objection was to be answered. The answer is given partly in v. 105, and partly in the verse under discussion. In the former of these they are told that Allah chooses whom He pleases for His revelation. In the latter, that if one law (i.e. the Jewish law) was abrogated, one better than it was given through the Holy Prophet. The word áyat, which means a message or a communication, does not signify here an áyat of the Holy Qur-án, but the message or the law given to the Jews. In the verse that follows, attention is called to the laws of nature as prevailing in the universe. Is it not true that the old order in nature gives place to a new one, the inferior to the better? It was therefore quite natural that the Mosaic law, which was in the main given for a particular people in a particular age, and suited only their requirements, should give place to a new and a universal law, the law of Islam. The old law had been partly forgotten, and what remained was now abrogated to give place to one better, and in certain matters one like it. It will thus be seen that the reference here is to the abrogation of the Jewish law, the statement being really an answer to the objection of the Jews, and there is no mention of the abrogation of the Quranic verses. See also 16:101, which, being a Meccan revelation, makes it clear that similar words there could only refer to the abrogation of a previous law, for details of the Muslim law were revealed at Medina, and consequently there could possibly be no abrogation of the Quranic verses at Mecca; nor is any Meccan verse considered even by the upholders of the doctrine of abrogation to be among the verses which abrogate others. It may also be added that in the words like it the reference may be to the prophecy of Deut. 18:18.

153 The Jews are addressed here, because it is they who vexed Moses with different demands and different questions. The words whoever adopts unbelief instead of faith do not signify a change of unbelief for belief, but the adoption of the former instead of the latter, and therefore these words also apply to the Jews.

the Christians will be saved are groundless. It is entire submission to Allah and the doing of good to His creatures that is the true source of salvation, and that is what Islám means according to the Holy Qur-án. In the expression اسلم وجهه لله as also in اسلمت وجهي the word waj-h does not stand for the face, but is used "for the whole, because it is the most noble part" (Jal-LL), or waj-hí signifies my person or myself (TA). Waj-h also means course, way, purpose, or object.

From aslama, meaning he submitted himself, is derived the name of the religion which the Holy Qur-án preaches, i.e. Islám, signifying literally, submitting oneself or resigning oneself (M, Q-LL), and Islam is therefore the religion of entire submission to Allah. See for full explanation foot-note 400 on the word Islám itself.

157 The original words are على شيء the word 'alá signifying in such cases conformity, as in the proverb الناس على دين ملوكهم which means the people are in conformity to, i.e. are followers of, the religion of their kings (LL); while the word shai, which primarily means simply a thing, signifies in such cases a thing worth being regarded, or a thing of any account or value, or anything good, as in the proverb ليس بشيء (LL).

158 The Jews and the Christians are here blamed for denying all good in each other like ignorant men, notwithstanding that they are both followers of one Book, i.e. the Old Testament. As against this, the Qur-án accepts that there is partial truth in all religions. The declaration of this cosmopolitan principle by Islam as regards a substratum of truth underlying all religions is the more wonderful when it is borne in mind that Islam took its birth in a country which had no connection with the outside world, and the principle was proclaimed by a man who had not read the scriptures of any other religion, at a time when the two most closely allied religions declared each other to be devoid of all truth.

159 The fate of those who prevented Muslims from worshipping Allah in the mosques is predicted here, and the fate of the opponents of Islam bears ample testimony to the truth of this prediction. The Jewish residents of Medina, who exerted themselves to their utmost to bring ruin to Islam, were either banished in disgrace or perished in their struggle to annihilate Islam. The idolaters, or the Quraish, who prevented Muslims from repairing to the sacred mosque at Mecca, were also finally subjugated and had to bow their heads before the very men whom they persecuted for no other fault than that they worshipped Allah.

The fulfilment of the first part of the prophecy, viz. they shall meet with disgrace in this world, is a conclusive proof of the truth of the second part, viz. they shall have great chastisement in the hereafter.

160 This verse has no connection with the turning of the face to one direction or another while saying prayers, which subject is discussed further on. The mistake arises from not reading the verse in the light of the context. The previous verse predicts disgrace for those who persecuted the Muslims; this one predicts the Muslim conquests by which the enemy was to be disgraced. The concluding words, Allah is Amply-giving, Knowing, also support this conclusion. The Muslims, who had been deprived of all they possessed and made utterly destitute, were promised ample gifts. The words whither you turn, thither is Allah's purpose point clearly to the Divine promise that all obstacles in the path of the Muslims shall be removed and victory shall follow their footsteps. Another interpretation is whichever way you turn fleeing, those who ruin the mosques being addressed (AH).

The word waj-h occurring here denotes countenance or face, as well as course, purpose, or object which one is pursuing, or a direction in which one is going or looking (TA-LL). According to Rgh it signifies attention or course.

161 The Christian doctrine that God has a son is refuted here, as also the pagan Arab idea that the angels were the daughters of God. Some Jews paid a like reverence to Ezra. The phrase subḥána-hú is always used to declare the freedom of the Divine Being from all imperfections such as are to be met with in the creatures, and is always mentioned in connection with the doctrine of sonship to show that to attribute a son to the Divine Being in a literal sense is to attribute an imperfection to Him which is met with in human beings. As regards the metaphorical use of the word, it gives rise to a misunderstanding, for really all that is in the heavens and the earth is His in that sense, all angels and human beings being alike His creation. As creatures they all equally proceed out of His hands. The doctrine of sonship is mentioned here as being opposed to the religion which requires entire submission from every man and thus dispenses with the necessity of a conciliator.

162 The original word is badi', which is applicable to the thing made as well as to the maker. A thing is badi' which is not after the similitude of any thing pre-existing, and badi' is also the person who makes or produces or brings into existence for the first time and not after the similitude of any thing pre-existing (LL).

163 كن فيكون is the oft-recurring phrase in which Allah's act of the creation and annihilation of things is spoken of in the Holy Qur-án. It is an answer to those who think, as the Arya Samajists do, that the creation of things by God is dependent on the previous existence of matter and soul and the adaptability of their attributes. But if God could not make things independently of matter, He could not even hear and see independently of it. Another argument given here is that man, who stands in need of matter to make things, also stands in need of a pattern after which to make them, but God stands in need of neither. The verse seems particularly to refer here, however, to the revolution that was to be brought about by the Holy Prophet. It seemed an impossibility to men, but Allah had decreed it. And, in fact, the revolution brought about in Arabia by the Holy Prophet was so wonderful that the old heaven and earth of the peninsula may be said to have been changed into new ones.

164 The unbelievers refused to accept the truth of Islam unless either Allah spoke to them, so that they should have a proof that He sends His messages to men, or that a sign should come to them. The sign which they often demanded was the threatened punishment, and as here disgrace in this world is predicted for them (v. 114), their demand is that as an evidence of the Prophet's truth that punishment should overtake them. The answer to both these demands is contained in v. 119, for as bearer of good news the Holy Prophet told them that if they purified themselves by walking in his footsteps Allah would speak to them, and as a warner he informed them of the coming wrath if they persisted in their evil ways.

165 The words convey a clear threat of the punishment awaiting the opponents of Islam.

166 The Muslims are meant, while the Book is the Qur-án (AH). I'Ab interprets يتلونه حق تلاوته as meaning follow it as it ought to be followed (IJ). For talá, meaning he followed it, or did according to it, see LL, which quotes several authorities.

167 The meaning is that Abraham observed all Divine commandments faithfully, and was therefore rewarded by being made a leader of men. As a spiritual leader of three great nations of the world, that patriarch occupies a unique position among religious personalities. Having discussed at length that a prophet from among the Ishmaelites had come in accordance with the prophecies of the Israelite prophets, the Holy Qur-án now proceeds to show that even the covenant with their great ancestor Abraham necessitated the appearance of a prophet in Arabia.

168 The Israelites' contention was that prophethood should always remain in the house of Israel, and that the promised prophet of Deut. 18:18 should be an Israelite. In this section they are told that the covenant was made, not with Israel but with Abraham and Ishmael, and that therefore the seed of Ishmael and Isaac were equally to be blessed.

125 And when We made the house a resort for men and a (place of) security, and: Appoint for yourselves a place of prayer on the standing-place [169] of Abraham. And We

وَإِذْ جَعَلْنَا الْبَيْتَ مَثَابَةً لِّلنَّاسِ وَأَمْنًا وَاتَّخِذُوا مِن مَّقَامِ إِبْرَاهِيمَ مُصَلًّى

The Jewish and Christian contention that the covenant made with Ishmael was simply of a temporal nature is groundless; on the other hand, the following arguments show that the covenant included both Ishmael and Isaac. (1) The promise to bless Abraham and his seed was given long before either Ishmael or Isaac was born: "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing. . . . And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:2, 3). (2) The promise given to Abraham regarding the multiplicity of his seed is the same as that given to Hagar regarding Ishmael when she conceived him: "And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be" (Gen. 15:5). "And the angel of the Lord said unto her (i.e. Hagar), I will multiply thy seed exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude" (Gen. 16:10). (3) The covenant was made again with Abraham after Ishmael was born, while Abraham had no hope of another son, nor was there a Divine promise that a son should be born to him from Sarah, the promise contained in Gen. 15:4: "But he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir" having been fulfilled in the birth of Ishmael. This promise is contained in Gen. 17:2–6: "And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly. . . . And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee." (4) The covenant was renewed with Ishmael after Isaac was promised: "And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee; Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation" (Gen. 17:20). It should also be noted that God's hearing Abraham with regard to Ishmael refers to Abraham's prayer in Gen. 17:18: "O that Ishmael might live before thee," and shows that Ishmael was righteous in the sight of God. (5) The nature of the promise made to Ishmael does not differ materially from that made to Abraham: they are both to be blessed, both to be made fruitful, the seed of both is to be multiplied exceedingly, princes and kings are promised among the descendants of both of them, and both are promised to be made a great nation. Nothing is said regarding Abraham that is not said regarding Ishmael. (6) The covenant on the part of Abraham's seed was kept by the children of Isaac as well as of Ishmael. According to Gen. 17:10: "This is My covenant which ye shall keep between Me and you and thy seed after thee: Every man child among you shall be circumcised." Now, circumcision has been a characteristic of the Israelites as well as of the Ishmaelites. Hence God's covenant was with both these nations. (7) The fulfilment of the covenant on the part of God has also been true with regard to both nations. "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God" (Gen. 17:8). Now, if the covenant was only with Isaac's children, the promise of an everlasting possession failed with the advent of Islam, so that even God could not keep His promise. But the fact is that the land of Canaan continues to remain as an everlasting possession in the hands of the seed of Abraham, for as soon as the Israelites or their representatives, the Christians, were deemed unfit to have the holy land in their possession because of their unrighteousness, that holy land was given to the Arabs, who were Ishmaelites, and to this day it remains in the hands of the Muslims, who are the true representatives of the house of Ishmael.

169 The commentators have different opinions as to what the maqám-i-Ibráhím or the standing-place of Abraham is. Some say the pilgrimage is meant, others understand one of the places where the pilgrims assemble; still others regard it as the whole of the sanctuary. Some say that it is the name of a place within the sacred mosque which was known by that name in the time of the Holy Prophet, and is still known by that name (AH, IJ). "It is a small building supported by six pillars about 8 ft. high, four of which are surrounded from top to bottom by a fine iron railing, while they leave the space between the two hind pillars open; within the railing is a frame about 5 ft. square, said to contain the sacred stone on which Abraham stood when he built the Ka'ba" (Rodwell-Burckhardt). By muṣallá, i.e. the place of prayer, is meant, according to Hasan, the qiblah, or the direction facing which prayer is to be said (Rz). The commandment given here thus relates to the Ka'ba being taken as the qiblah.

enjoined Abraham and Ishmael,

170 The injunction to Abraham and Ishmael to purify "My House" (Ar. Baiti or Bait-Ullah and the Beth-el of the Bible) for those who visit it and those who abide in it shows that the Ka'ba or Bait-Ullah was there even before Abraham, and this view is supported by what is stated in 3:95 about the Ka'ba as the "First House" made on earth for the worship of Allah, and its appellation "Ancient House" stated in 22:29 and 33. Sir William Muir admits the very remote antiquity of the Ka'ba in the Introduction to his Life of Muhammad, and the following lengthy quotation from him is the testimony of an adverse critic to the truth of the view taken above. He says: "A very high antiquity must be assigned to the main features of the religion of Mecca. . . . Diodorus Siculus, writing about half a century before our era, says of Arabia washed by the Red Sea, 'There is in this country a temple greatly revered by the Arabs.' These words must refer to the Holy House of Mecca, for we know of no other which ever commanded such universal homage. . . . Tradition represents the Ka'ba as from time immemorial the scene of pilgrimage from all quarters of Arabia: from Yemen and Hadhramaut, from the shores of the Persian Gulf, the deserts of Syria, and the distant environs of Hira and Mesopotamia, men yearly flocked to Mecca. So extensive a homage must have had its beginnings in an extremely remote age."

Is this conclusion in any way inconsistent with the popular Arab tradition connecting the names of Abraham and Ishmael with the Ka'ba? True, according to it the Ka'ba existed before Abraham, but this does not imply that Abraham never visited it. The statement made in the Qur-án shows that Abraham and Ishmael had purified the House of God of idol worship, and they also raised its foundations (v. 127). But this would imply no more than that they rebuilt the edifice, and the connection of their names with the Holy House is preserved to this day in a tangible form in the Maqám-i-Ibráhím. Moreover, if tradition can prove its antiquity, why not the connection of the names of Abraham and Ishmael with it? The one tradition is as authentic and ancient as the other. Sir William Muir admits that "this was no Muslim fiction, but the popular opinion of the Meccans long before the era of Muhammad, otherwise it could not have been referred to in the Qur-án as an acknowledged fact, nor would the names of certain spots around the Ka'ba have been connected, as we know them to have been, with Abraham and Ishmael." Muir's difficulty is only this, that the existence of the Holy House is traced to a more remote antiquity than the age of Abraham and Ishmael, but, as I have stated above, the fact of a remoter antiquity does not disprove the connection of the names of the patriarchs with the Holy House. The connection of Ishmael's name with Arabia is an incontrovertible fact, for Kedar (son of Ishmael, Gen. 25:13) stands throughout the writings of the Old Testament for Arabia (Ps. 120:5, Isa. 42:11, 60:7, etc.).

Moreover, the story of Ishmael and Hagar's casting forth is substantially true, though the description of it given in Genesis, viz. Abraham's sending her forth with bread and 126 And when Abraham said, My Lord, make it a secure town and provide its people with fruits, such of them as believe in Allah and the last day, He said: And whoever disbelieves, I will grant him enjoyment for a short while, then I will drive him to the chastisement of the fire; and it is an evil destination.

a bottle of water, as if she were going to settle in the next village, cannot be accepted as true. Sarah could not be satisfied with such expulsion of her rival. The Arab tradition representing Abraham as coming with Hagar and Ishmael to the place where Mecca now is, is quite independent of the Bible statement, and the two taken together justify us in drawing the conclusion as to the truth of the old Arab tradition. Moreover, the situation of Mecca on a well-recognized ancient route from Syria to Yemen and the visits from the deserts of Syria to that "Ancient House" corroborate this conclusion. Thus there is not the least reason to reject the popular tradition as a fable, and the facts recorded in the Qur-án are borne out by all considerations.

170A References to Ishmael are very frequent in the Holy Qur-án. For further references see 2:133, 136, 140; 3:83; 4:163; 6:87; 14:39; 19:54, 55; 21:85; 37:101–107 (where he is not mentioned by name); and 38:48.

171 The phrase سفه نفسه was originally سفهت نفسه i.e. he himself or his mind was unwise or destitute of wisdom, etc.; but when the reference in the verb was transferred from nafs (i.e. mind) to the person possessing it, what followed the verb was put in the accusative case, being its objective complement, for the phrase became identical in meaning with جهل نفسه i.e. he made himself unwise, etc. (LL). AH gives the meaning to be he was unwise in his mind; Zj, he was ignorant or unreflecting in his mind. According to I'Ab it means he lost himself or his own soul.

172 Iṣṭafainá-hu, according to AH, means We made him pure from all dross. According to TA, اصطفاء الله عباده sometimes means Allah's creating His servants pure, for it is sometimes by His bringing them into existence clear from the admixture that is found in others, and sometimes it is by His choice and judgment. And iṣṭifá also signifies the choosing of one thing above another (LL).

173 Compare Gen. 18:19: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment."

174 Ḥanīf is from the root ḥanf, meaning inclining or declining (LL). Hence ḥanīf is one inclining to a right state or tendency (Rgb, TA-LL). The word is often mentioned in connection with the name of Abraham and the Holy Prophet, and his followers are also enjoined to be ḥanīf. In seems to signify firmness in sticking to the right state, and has, no doubt, reference to the inclining to error on the part of both the Jews and the Christians. As opposed to both these professed followers of Abraham, the Muslims are enjoined to remain firm in the right state, and thus to be the true representatives of the Abrahamic faith in the world. It is for this reason that the word ḥanīf is used here in opposition to the attitude of both the Jews and the Christians. The word was not used in this sense in Arabic before the advent of Islam.

175 This shows the cosmopolitan nature of a Muslim's belief. Not only is belief in the great prophets of Israel an article of faith with a Muslim, but the words that which was given to the prophets from their Lord make the Muslim conception of belief in prophets as wide as the world. And it should be noted that this broad conception was promulgated at a time when the Jews and the Christians were exerting themselves to the utmost against the new faith.

176 Shiqāq may mean rebellion and separation (IJ), or it may mean opposition (I'Ab) or enmity (Zaid). It has a reference to the opposition of the Jews to the faith of Islam, which recognized their prophets. The meaning is that their rejecting such broad principles of faith is due to their enmity.

177 The meaning of فسيكفيكهم الله or Allah will suffice you against them, is that Allah will guard you against their evil plans to annihilate you (AH). This shows that the Jews had become active opposers to the spread of Islam at this early stage, and formed plan to take the life of the Holy Prophet.

178 Sabgh means dyeing or colouring, and also dipping or immersing in water; hence sibghah indicates baptism, which the Christians effect by immersing in water. The word is used here as a hint to the Christians that the Divine baptism is not the baptism of water, the result of which is the rejection of all the prophets, but the baptism of the broad principle of faith, which accepts the prophets of all nations and all ages. It is through this baptism that the new birth is received, because it opens the mind for the reception of all truths, and inspires it with love and reverence for all good men. Divine baptism, therefore, indicates the religion of Allah or the nature according to which Allah has created man (AH). As the word is used as an objective complement, I have added the word receive to indicate the full sense.

179 A Muslim's conception of Allah is very broad. It includes all that is best in all other religions, but is free from the limitations they put. Therefore no one who is true to his own religion can dispute the Muslim conception of the Divine Being.

180 The interrogation indicated by the word am in the original simply expresses disapproval. For instance, we have in 7:195, "Have they feet with which to walk, or have they hands with which to assault, or have they eyes with which to see, or have they ears with which to hear?" This is said of the idols. Similarly, the interrogation here is simply to reprove the Jews and the Christians, when they affirmed respectively that none could be a follower of the right way who was not a Jew or who did not believe in the Christian scheme of salvation, for their ancestors who were prophets were followers of neither the one nor the other. Islam was, in fact, a reversion to the simple faith of sincerity, the faith of Abraham and his immediate followers and descendants.

181 Qiblah means the direction or point towards which one turns his face as opposed to dibrah, which indicates the direction or point towards which one turns his back (LL). Literally it simply indicates a direction, not a place. In its religious usage it means the direction towards which one turns his face when saying his prayers. The change here referred to is the change which took place at Medina about sixteen months after the flight to that city (Bkh). It should be noted that while the Holy Prophet was at Mecca among the idolaters of Arabia, he used to pray with his face to the holy temple at Jerusalem, but when he came to Medina, where the Jewish element was strong and powerful, he was directed by Divine revelation to turn his face to the Ka'ba as his qiblah. The Jews are here spoken of in particular (I'Ab-Rz), and the subject is one in continuation of what is said in the last two sections, for if Abraham's seed was to be blessed in Ishmael's progeny, it was necessary that the new qiblah should be the House purified by Abraham and Ishmael, the temple at Jerusalem being only the qiblah for the Israelites. This change contained a clear prophecy that Mecca would be conquered by the Muslims, for an idolatrous temple could not be the qiblah in a religion of pure monotheism. To this conquest of Mecca there is also a reference in the words: the East and the West belong only to Allah, and Allah's guiding the Muslims to the right path also includes His directing them to a path of success and final triumph over their enemies.

182 The word in the original is wasaṭ, which signifies the middle part of any thing, and therefore, as being removed from either extreme, it signifies the best part of a thing according to LL, who translates امة وسطا as meaning a just, equitable or good nation, that is, one not inclining to either extreme. Or it means the best because the middle position can only be occupied by one, and therefore it has no second to it. The usual translation "intermediate nation" does not convey the right sense. The commentators explain wasaṭ as meaning equitable and exalted (Rz, AH, Kf), and this sense fits in with the context. By making the Ka'ba their qiblah, Allah had made it known that they were the people, the Muslim nation, for whom Abraham had prayed (v. 128), and therefore they were the inheritors of all those Divine blessings which had been promised for the seed of Abraham.

144 Indeed We see the turning of your face to heaven,[187] so We shall surely turn you to a qiblah which you shall like; turn then your face towards the sacred mosque, and wherever you are, turn your faces towards it, and those who have been given the Book most surely know that it 183 One explanation of the word shahid or bearer of witness is given in the following words: So that you may carry to them what you have learned of the revelation and the faith as Allah's apostle has brought to you (AH, Rz). Therefore the bearers of witness are the persons who carry knowledge to others, bearing testimony to its truth in their own persons; hence some commentators explain the word as meaning a purifier (AH). But shahid also signifies one possessing much knowledge, hence Ash-shahid is also a name of the Divine Being (LL), and it means also an imám or a leader.

184 Rz explains the words كُنتَ عليها as meaning on which you had firmly set your heart that it should be your qiblah. It thus appears that the Holy Prophet longed that the Ka'ba should be his qiblah, yet he did not take any step until he had received the Divine revelation. If his revelations had been the outcome of his own desires, he would not have waited for sixteen months for a revelation from on high to change the qiblah.

185 The ordinary meaning of na'lama would be we might know, but I have followed AH in translating it as meaning we might distinguish, leaving the ordinary significance for the margin, for 'ilm is not followed by min except when it is used in the sense of distinguishing one thing from another. The significance given in the margin implies the knowledge of the event when it has taken place.

186 By some the word ímán, lit., faith, is explained as meaning prayer (I'Ab-Bkh). Adopting the ordinary significance, the words would mean that the faithful had no hesitation in accepting the change, and thus their faith bore fruit by keeping them in the right path.

187 The Prophet's turning the face to heaven signifies his looking up to Allah for guidance in the matter of the qiblah. The difficulty of the qiblah had arisen at Medina, for there it was that in turning his face to Jerusalem he had to turn his back to Mecca, Medina being situated between Mecca and Jerusalem. Hence, the Prophet waited for a revelation to guide him in the matter.

188 There is a report according to which the Holy Prophet speaks of himself as "the prayer of my father Abraham." The followers of the Book knew that not only had Abraham prayed for the appearance of a prophet from among the sons of Ishmael, but that God had also promised a blessing (foot-note 168). The Sacred House which Abraham had purified with his own hands in the place where he left Ishmael must therefore have been known to the Israelites to be the centre of the exertions and of the future conquests of the only prophet of Ishmael's seed.

189 Notwithstanding that the Jews and the Christians both looked to the temple at Jerusalem as their central temple, they were not agreed upon it as their qiblah, for the Christians turned towards the east (Muir). Moreover, there are differences among the Jews and the Samaritans, though both follow the law of Moses.

190 All the prophets of Abraham's seed had hitherto appeared among the children of Israel, and hence as they know their sons is equivalent to as they know the Israelite prophets, the significance of the whole passage being that the Israelites or the Jews recognized the Holy Prophet who appeared among the children of Ishmael as they recognized the prophets who appeared among the children of Israel. They knew this not only because blessing had equally been promised for both sons of Abraham, but also because of the clear prophecy of Moses that a prophet like him would be raised among the brethren of the Israelites, i.e. the Ishmaelites, and because no prophet answering that description had appeared among the Israelites.

191 The meaning is that Allah intends to make all Muslims as one people, therefore He requires all to turn to one direction, to set one goal before them, and to have one centre to turn to wherever they may be. The unity of the qiblah among the Muslims really stands for their unity of purpose as being a nation which strives after one goal, and forms the basis on which rests the brotherhood of Islam; hence the saying of the Prophet: Do not call those who follow your qiblah unbelievers. But that noble lesson is now almost lost to the Muslims.

Thus the chief reason given for appointing one qiblah for all Muslims, wherever they may be, is that this should be an ostensible sign of their unity of purpose, the reason why that honour is given to the Ka'ba being given in v. 151 (see foot-note 193). It may be added that the Ka'ba has never been supposed by any Muslim to possess any Divine attribute, nor is any petition or prayer ever addressed to it, and hence the strange conclusion drawn by some Christian writers, that the honour thus given to the Ka'ba is a remnant of the pre-Islamite Arab polytheism or idolatry, is unworthy of serious attention. Even the idolatrous Arabs never worshipped the Ka'ba, though they had placed idols in it which they worshipped. It should also be borne in mind that the famous black stone was not one of the Arab idols, nor can the kissing of it in performing the pilgrimage be looked upon as a remnant of idolatry. That stone stands only as a monument: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head-stone of the corner" (Ps. 118:22). Ishmael was looked upon as rejected, and the covenant was considered to have been made with the children of Isaac or Israelites, yet it was that rejected stone, for which the black stone at Ka'ba, the place where Ishmael was cast, stands as a monument, that was to become "the head-stone of the corner." The black stone is unhewn, so it is the stone that was "cut out of the mountain without hands" (Dan. 2:45). Jesus Christ made this clear in the parable of the husbandmen, when he plainly told the Israelites that the vineyard (i.e. the kingdom of God) would be taken away from them and given to "other husbandmen," i.e. to a non-Israelite people, immediately giving indication of that people in the words: "Did ye never read in the Scripture, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?" (Matt. 21:42), and again emphasized his object in the words: "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43), thus showing that he was referring to a rejected nation. Hence if the black stone is kissed, it is not kissed as an idol or as a god, but as a monument of the rejection of a nation which was to become the corner-stone in the Divine kingdom.

192 By completing of favour is meant the fulfilment of all those promises of blessings which were made regarding the descendants of Ishmael. Had the Prophet's qiblah been other than the Ka'ba, it would have been an argument against him, for in that case the prophecy would have remained unfulfilled in one part. But when the prophecy and the promises made to Abraham were fulfilled in their entirety, none but the unjust could now object.

193 The connection with the previous verse is clear: That I may complete My favour on you, even as We have sent among you an Apostle. The reference is to Abraham's prayer in v. 129, in fulfilment of which the Holy Prophet was raised; because it was to Abraham that the injunction was given that the Sacred House dedicated to Allah's worship at Mecca should be purified, so that it might be the centre to which all His true and faithful devotees should turn. Compare the words of v. 129 regarding the functions of the promised prophet, which are exactly the same as those mentioned here.

194 Man's remembrance of Allah is to walk humbly in His ways, and Allah's remembrance of man is to pour His blessings upon him (IJ). But as the word ẕikr also means eminence (LL), the meaning may therefore be, therefore remember Me or glorify Me; I will make you eminent.

it the qiblah of the Muslims, promise was no doubt given that it would soon be theirs, purified of idol worship. But to attain this great object they must seek Divine assistance, which would be granted them if they endured trials with manliness and prayed to Allah.

196 The sacrifice of life which must be undergone in the cause of truth is hinted at in this passage. The words في سبيل الله frequently occurring in the Holy Qur-án signify literally in the way of Allah or in the cause of Allah. As opposed to this occur the words في سبيل الطاغوت i.e. in the way or cause of the devil, regarding the fighting of the enemies of Islam (4 : 76). The two expressions therefore signify only in the cause of truth and in the cause of falsehood respectively. Whether the cause of the Muslims was really the cause of truth, right, and justice, and whether they were compelled to fight to defend the truth or had undertaken wars to compel the unbelievers to accept Islam, is quite a different question, which has been discussed in various places. Here I may only point out that the Qur-án has over and over again asserted that the Muslims were compelled to take up the sword in the cause of truth and justice and in self-defence when they had no other alternative, and Sale's comment that the words fisabíl-illáh always "meant war undertaken against unbelievers for the propagation of the Muhammadan faith" is a prejudiced statement, opposed to the Qur-án itself, which says that "there is no compulsion in religion" (v. 257).

197 That those who sacrifice their lives in the cause of truth never die is a truth which is generally recognized. As truth lives and falsehood must die, so those who make the triumph of truth the object of their lives do not die, even if they are slain in the cause of truth. It may be added, however, that the words maut and ḥayát apply respectively to grief or sorrow and freedom from grief or sorrow (Rgh), and therefore those who have fulfilled the object of their lives shall never grieve, this being the oft-recurring description of the state of salvation as given in the Holy Qur-án. Or, those who have sacrificed their lives in the cause of truth gain the life eternal, while the dead are really those who are dead in ignorance.

198 This is the true expression of a Muslim's resignation under trials: We come from Allah, and Allah is our goal. Therefore no trial or misfortune can disturb the course of our life, which has a much higher goal before it than mere comfort. These words are uttered by a Muslim when any misfortune befalls him. Come what may, the contentment of his mind is never disturbed.

199 The Ṣafá and the Marwah are two mountains near Mecca. They were the scene of Hagar's running to and fro in quest of water when left alone with Ishmael in the wilderness. The two mountains being therefore the scene of her troubles, now serve as two monuments of the reward which patience brought, and it is as a memorial to Hagar's patience that they are now gone round by the pilgrims. This circumstance explains the connection of this verse with the previous verses.

200 On the Ṣafá was an idol called Usáf, and on the Marwah one called Náilah, which the pilgrims respectfully touched in the days of ignorance, and hence the apprehensions of the Muslims in going round them (IJ). According to Bkh, however, the people of Medina were averse to going round the Ṣafá and the Marwah, though no reason for their aversion is given.

201 For the meaning of la'nat, or curse, see foot-note 131. By "those who curse" and the curse of "Allah and the angels and men" in v. 161 are meant the curses predicted for the Israelites by Moses: "But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all His commandments and His statutes which I command thee this day, that all these curses shall come upon thee and overtake thee: cursed shalt thou be in the city and cursed shalt thou be in the field, cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out" (Deut. 28:15–19). After enumerating the curses of the Lord, His sending upon them "cursing, vexation, and rebuke," His making the pestilence "cleave" to them, His smiting them with "a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting . . . and the botch of Egypt . . . and madness and blindness," the curses of men are thus spoken of: "Thou shalt go out one way against them and flee seven ways before them," "thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore," "thou shalt betroth a wife and another man shall lie with her: thou shalt build an house and thou shalt not dwell therein," "thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people . . . the fruit of thy land and all thy labours shall a nation which

Unity must prevail ultimately

164. Divine Unity manifested in nature. 165–167. Fate of those who set up equals with Allah.

164 Most surely in the creation of the heavens and the earth and the alternation of the night and the day, and the ships that run in the sea with that which profits men, and the water that Allah sends down from the cloud, then gives life with it to the earth after its death and spreads in it all (kinds of) animals, and the changing of the winds and the clouds made subservient between the heaven and the earth, there are signs for a people who understand.[203]

165 And there are some among men who take for themselves objects of worship besides Allah,[204] whom they love thou knowest not eat up; and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed always" (Deut. 28: 20–68).

202 The introduction of the formula of Divine Unity in this, the concluding verse of the section, is to show that this was the grand object which was set before the Muslims, while its ultimate prevalence is more clearly set forth in the next section, and that it was for this object that the trials and privations spoken of in this section were to be undergone.

203 The Unity of Allah is declared by the whole of nature, and being such a clear doctrine, must no doubt at last prevail over idolatry and polytheism of every kind. Not only did Arabia witness the truth of this thirteen hundred years ago, but even to-day we see that as man is freed from the trammels of prejudice he realizes the truth of Divine Unity more and more. The uniformity that is clearly observed in the diversity in nature is constantly appealed to in the Qur-án as a sign of the Unity of the Maker.

204 The objects of worship here referred to may include idols, but the reference is apparently to the leaders who lead their followers into evil. This is made plain by the verses that follow, where "those who were followed," i.e. the leaders, renounce those who followed them.

Ar. the love of.

as they love Allah—and those who believe are stronger in love for Allah[205]—and O that those who are unjust had seen, when they see the chastisement, that the power is wholly Allah's and that Allah is severe in requiting (evil).

166 When those who were followed shall renounce those who followed (them), and they see the chastisement and their ties are cut asunder.

167 And those who followed shall say: Had there been for us a return, then we would renounce them as they have renounced us. Thus will Allah show them their deeds to be intense regret to them, and they shall not come forth from the fire.[206]

SECTION 21

Prohibited Foods

168–171. Injunction to use good and lawfully acquired things for food. 172, 173. Food prohibited for Muslims. 174–176. Warning against neglecting moral injunctions, which amounts to eating of fire.

168 O men! eat the lawful and good things out of what is in the earth, and do not follow the footsteps of the devil; surely he is your open enemy;[207]

يٰٓاَيُّهَا النَّاسُ كُلُوا مِمَّا فِي الْاَرْضِ حَلٰلًا طَيِّبًا ۖ وَّلَا تَتَّبِعُوا خُطُوٰتِ الشَّيْطٰنِ ۗ اِنَّهُ لَكُمْ عَدُوٌّ مُّبِينٌ ○

205 While Allah's love and affection for His creatures is the ever-recurring theme that finds expression in the Holy Qur-án, man's love for Allah, which is the real basis of Islam, or absolute submission to the Divine Being, is here declared to be stronger than all other ties of love and friendship, including that which unites a man to his idols or other false deities. The words give a direct lie to the allegation that love of God does not form the basis of the religion of Islam.

206 The mutual renouncement of the leaders and their followers takes place sometimes in this very life. The poorer Jews must surely have regretted their blindly following their leaders in their opposition to the Holy Prophet when the whole community was at last banished or otherwise punished on account of their casting their lot with the enemies of the Muslims.

It should also be noted that it is the intense regret for the evil deeds done which is here described as being the fire from which there is no escape.

207 The fundamental principle of faith, Divine Unity, having been discussed at full length, certain secondary rules and regulations are now considered, and among these the subject of prohibited foods is introduced first with a twofold object. In the first place it enjoins that only lawful and good things should be eaten. The lawful things are not only those which the law has not declared to be forbidden, but even unforbidden things 169 He only enjoins you evil and indecency, and that you may speak against Allah what you do not know.

170 And when it is said to them, Follow what Allah has revealed, they say: Nay! we follow what we found our fathers upon. What! and though their fathers had no sense at all, nor did they follow the right way.

171 And the parable of those who disbelieve is as the parable of one who calls out to that which hears no more than a call and a cry; deaf, dumb (and) blind, so they do not understand.[208]

172 O you who believe! eat of the good things that We have provided you with, and give thanks to Allah if Him it is that you serve.[209]

173 He has only forbidden you what dies of itself, and blood, and flesh of swine, and that over which any other (name) than (that of) Allah has become unlawful if they are acquired unlawfully, by theft, robbery, cheating, bribery, etc. The Israelites stood in special need of being reminded of this, for while they laid too much stress upon the ceremonial of religion, they were utterly indifferent to internal purity, and they would make a show of utter abhorrence to forbidden things but gladly devoured what was unlawfully acquired, a practice of which they are elsewhere condemned in plain words: "Why do not the learned men and the doctors of law prohibit them from their speaking of what is sinful and their eating of what is unlawfully acquired?" (5 : 63).

Secondly, by adding the injunction do not follow the footsteps of the devil the real object of the prohibition is made plain. The Holy Qur-án recognizes some sort of relation between the physical and the spiritual conditions of man. There is not the least doubt that food plays an important part in the formation of character, and the heart and the brain powers are clearly affected by the quality of food. The same law is seen working in the whole of the animal kingdom. As the Holy Qur-án is meant for all stages of the development of human society, it contains rules and regulations for the betterment of the physical as well as the moral and the spiritual conditions of man.

208 The Prophet is likened to the crier who calls out, but the disbelievers are deaf to reason, and are like cattle which only hear the cry of the driver, but do not understand the meaning of what he says: this is in accordance with what is said in the previous verse. Some commentators are of opinion that the crier is the disbeliever, who cries for help or guidance to his false gods, but these do not know what he says. But the addition of the words deaf, dumb, and blind, which apply to the disbelievers, shows that the first explanation is the correct one.

209 The injunction to eat of the good things is directed against the use of things which are injurious to health, though they may not be forbidden by law, as well as against what is unlawfully acquired.

been invoked;[210] but whoever is driven to necessity, not desiring, nor exceeding the limit, no sin shall be upon him; surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[211]

174 Surely those who conceal any part of the Book that Allah has revealed and take for it a small price, they eat nothing but fire into their bellies,[212] and Allah will not speak to them on the day of resurrection, nor will He purify them, and they shall have a painful chastisement.

175 These are they who buy error for the right direction and chastisement for forgiveness; how bold they are to encounter fire!

210 The Jews objected to certain foods being allowed to Muslims which were forbidden by the Mosaic law; see 3 : 92 and foot-note 466. That which dies of itself and that which was torn by beasts was forbidden by the law of Moses also (Lev. 17 : 15), so was blood (Lev. 7 : 26), and the flesh of swine (Lev. 11 : 7). As for things specially prohibited to Jews and not prohibited to the Muslims, see 6 : 146 and foot-note 836. The Jews held the swine in great detestation, and the mention of the animal in the Gospels shows that Jesus Christ held it in equal abhorrence, which proves that he too regarded the animal as impure. Neither does he appear to have broken the Jewish law in this respect.

The same prohibition had already been revealed while the Holy Prophet was yet at Mecca in almost identical words in 16 : 114, whereas in 6 : 146 reasons are added for the prohibition; see foot-note 836. And 5 : 3, which was revealed later at Medina, adds several things by way of explaining what dies of itself, and that over which any other name than that of Allah has been invoked. It is there shown that this last description applies to animals which were offered to idols. The commentators also are of opinion that the reference in that over which any other name than that of Allah has been invoked is to the animals slaughtered by the worshippers of idols, which they used to slaughter as offerings to their idols (Rz), or to that over which the name of an idol is invoked at the time of its slaughter (Bḍ), for among the Arabs the practice was that animals were slaughtered in the name of an idol. But the statement made in the Holy Qur-án is general, and the invocation of any other name than that of Allah makes the animal slaughtered unlawful.

211 غير باغ signifies not desiring to eat it for the sake of enjoyment, and لا عاد means not exceeding the bare limit of want.

212 The physical and the spiritual are beautifully welded together in the Holy Qur-án. The prohibition to eat certain impure or injurious foods is followed by a warning against the eating of fire, and thus the connection is established. Caution is always given lest too much stress should be laid upon the outward ceremonial of the law, and here we are told that even more dangerous than the prohibited foods is the eating of fire, which means the concealing of what is revealed in the Book. The concealment in this case means not acting upon the teaching of the Book, and though the Jews may serve as an example, the Muslims are equally warned of the danger of being strict in external acts of purity while neglecting internal purity.

176 This is because Allah has revealed the Book with the truth; and surely those who go against[212A] the Book are in a great opposition.

Retaliation and Bequests

177. Righteousness consists not in formalities but in accepting broad principles of faith and sympathetic and equal treatment of fellow-beings. 178, 179. Retaliation. 180–182. Bequests.

177 It is not righteousness that you turn your faces towards the East and the West,[213] but righteousness is this that one should believe in Allah and the last day and the angels[214]

Ar. he who.

لَيْسَ الْبِرَّ اَنْ تُوَلُّوْا وُجُوْهَكُمْ قِبَلَ الْمَشْرِقِ وَالْمَغْرِبِ وَلٰكِنَّ الْبِرَّ مَنْ اٰمَنَ بِاللّٰهِ وَالْيَوْمِ الْاٰخِرِ وَالْمَلٰٓئِكَةِ

212A الذين اختلفوا فى الكتاب is generally rendered as meaning those who disagree about the Book, but this significance does not convey any clear idea as to what is meant. Rgh gives as one significance: they do with respect to it, or introduce into it, what is against the Divine revelation. Bḍ says ikhtilâf may in this case signify their believing a part and rejecting a part, while another significance given by him is, they fall short of the right way in its interpretation, instead of which we might say they fall short of the right way in acting upon it. Hence the best interpretation is going against the Book, and this is the significance that I have adopted.

213 This is one of the passages which have elicited words of praise even from the most hostile critics of the Qur-án: "This is one of the noblest verses in the Qur-án. It clearly distinguishes between a formal and a practical piety. Faith in God and benevolence towards man is clearly set forth as the essence of religion" (Wh).

While it is true that the uselessness of lifeless ceremonial, to which all nations, and none more than the Jews, adhered at the time, is pointed out, and this establishes the connection of this verse with what precedes and what follows, a comparison with v. 115 and a perusal of foot-note 160 will show that the verse conveys a deeper significance, which is hinted at in its concluding words. In the turning of the face to the East and the West there is an allusion to the Muslim conquests in the East and the West, and the Muslims are told that it is not the Divine purpose that they should be merely a conquering nation, but that their special characteristic as a nation should be that they propagate the true principles of religion in the world and do good to their fellow-beings. If they adhered to these principles, conquests would follow their footsteps, as is said in v. 115: "And Allah's is the East and the West; therefore whither you turn, thither is Allah's purpose."

The essence of the verse is therefore this, that the Muslims should be righteous first and conquerors afterwards, so that they may sow the seed of righteousness in all countries which they conquer.

214 A belief in angels, while hinted at in the opening verses of this chapter, is clearly spoken of here as one of the basic principles of Islam. The belief in angels may not be as universal as a belief in the Divine Being, but it is accepted generally in all monotheistic religions. As in the case of all other principles of faith, Islam has pointed out a certain significance underlying the belief in angels. Just as our physical faculties are not by themselves sufficient to enable us to attain any object in the physical world without the assistance of other agents—as, for instance, the eye cannot see unless there is and the book[215] and the prophets, and give away wealth out of love for Him[216] to the near of kin and the orphans and the needy and the wayfarer and the beggars and for (the emancipation of) the captives,[217] and keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate; and the performers of their promise when they make a promise,[218] and the patient in distress and affliction and in time of conflict[219]—these are they who are true (to themselves), and these are they who guard (against evil).

light—so our spiritual powers cannot by themselves lead us to do good or evil deeds, but here too intermediaries which have an existence independent of our internal spiritual powers are necessary to enable us to do good or evil deeds. Now, there are two attractions placed in man—the attraction to good or to rise up to the higher spheres of virtue, and the attraction to evil or to stoop down to a kind of low, bestial life; but to bring these attractions into operation external agencies are needed, as they are needed in the case of the physical powers of man. The external agency which brings the attraction to good into work is called an angel, and that which assists in the working of the attraction to evil is called the devil. If we respond to the attraction for good we are following the Holy Spirit, and if we respond to the attraction for evil we are following Satan. Our belief in angels carries, therefore, the significance that whenever we feel a tendency for the doing of good we should at once obey that call and follow the inviter to good. That it does not simply mean that we should admit that there are angels is clear from the fact that not only are we not required to believe in devils, whose existence is as certain as that of the angels, but we are plainly told that we should disbelieve in the devils (v. 257). As a disbelief in the devil means that we should repel the attraction for evil, so a belief in angels means that we should follow the inviter to good.

215 While a belief in all the prophets is stated to be necessary, the Book is spoken of here in the singular, though clearly the books of all the prophets are included. The reason seems to be that elsewhere it is said that the Qur-án is a Book "wherein are all the right books" (98 : 3), so that a belief in the Qur-án includes a belief in all these books, and therefore the Book here signifies the Qur-án.

216 The love of Allah is here, as in many other places in the Holy Qur-án, stated to be the true incentive to all deeds of righteousness.

217 Riqáb is the plural of raqabah, which literally signifies a neck, and then comes to signify by a synecdoche a slave or a captive (TA-LL). Hence فى الرقاب here means the emancipation of captives (IJ). No religion in the world other than Islam has told us how love for the enemy may be shown in practice. What kind of a conquering nation does Islam require its followers to be? A nation of conquerors who must spend part of their wealth for setting free those enemies who have been captured in war! No nobler teaching, no practical ordinance on this point, is met with outside the pages of the Holy Book. However noble the teaching, "Love your enemies," it did not pass beyond the domain of dream in Christianity; only a practical benefactor of humanity could say: For the love of Allah give away your wealth in freeing those enemies whom you have captured in war.

178 O you who believe! retaliation is prescribed for you in the matter of the slain: the free for the free, and the slave for the slave, and the female for the female,[220] but if any remission is made to any one by his (aggrieved) brother,[221] then prosecution (for the bloodwit) should be made according to usage, and payment should be made to him in a good manner; this is an alleviation from your Lord and a mercy; so whoever exceeds the limit after this, he shall have a painful chastisement,

179 And there is life for you in (the law of) retaliation, O men of understanding, that you may guard yourselves.[222]

يٰۤاَيُّهَا الَّذِيْنَ اٰمَنُوْا كُتِبَ عَلَيْكُمُ الْقِصَاصُ

وَلَكُمْ فِي الْقِصَاصِ حَيٰوةٌ يّٰۤاُولِي
الْاَلْبَابِ لَعَلَّكُمْ تَتَّقُوْنَ ۝

218 That is another characteristic which should distinguish the Muslim conquerors. The performance of promises on the part of individuals as well as of nations is one of the first essentials of the welfare of humanity, and hence the stress laid upon it by the Holy Qur-án. Faithlessness to treaties and pledges on the part of nations has wrought greater havoc on humanity than any other cause. Just as no society can prosper until its individual members are true to their mutual agreements and promises to each other, humanity at large will always remain in a degraded condition unless and until the different nations are true to their promises. And the sufferings which naturally must be the lot of a conquered nation could be reduced to their minimum if the conquerors should be true to their promises.

219 The concluding words of the verse, the patient . . . in time of conflict, are a clear indication of what the whole verse aims at, and the coming conflicts with the opponents of Islam, ultimately leading to the triumph of Islam over those who were bent upon extirpating it, are plainly hinted at.

220 The Jewish law of retaliation is greatly modified in Islam, being limited only to cases of murder, while among the Jews it extended to all cases of grievous hurt. But in Islam "retaliation is prescribed for you in the matter of the slain," which amounts to saying that the murderer shall be put to death. After promulgating that law in general terms, the Qur-án proceeds to describe a particular case, viz. that if a free man is the murderer, he himself is to be slain; if a slave is the murderer, that slave is to be executed; if a woman murdered a man, it was she that was to be put to death. The pre-Islamic Arabs used in certain cases to insist, when the person killed was of noble descent, upon the execution of others besides the murderer; they were not content with the execution of the slave or the woman, if one of them happened to be the murderer. The Holy Qur-án abolished this custom (AH, Rz).

221 There may be circumstances which alleviate the guilt: in that case the murderer may be made to pay a fine to the relatives of the murdered person. Such money is called diyat or bloodwit. The reference to the alleviation of the guilt is plainly contained in the concluding words of the verse: This is an alleviation from your Lord. Alleviation from the Lord would no doubt be a natural consequence of alleviation in the guilt of the murderer. A comparison with 4:92 makes it clear that when homicide is not intentional, bloodwit may be paid.

180 Bequest is prescribed for you when death approaches one of you, if he leaves behind wealth for parents and near relatives, according to usage, a duty (incumbent) upon those who guard (against evil).[223]

181 Whoever then alters it after he has heard it—the sin of it then is only upon those who alter it; surely Allah is Hearing, Knowing.

222 Hitherto the Muslims had suffered in silence every excess against them. Many of them had been put to death cruelly. Now the opponents were contemplating an extermination by the sword of all the Muslims, and the latter are warned that their life now depended on making the law of retaliation work, while, generally speaking, too, life can not be safe unless those who are guilty of homicide are sentenced to capital punishment.

223 It is a mistake to think that the injunction contained in this verse does not hold good, and that the verse is abrogated. Some commentators hold the opinion that the direction to make a bequest, as contained in this verse, is abrogated by 4 : 11, which fixes the shares of the heirs of the deceased person, whereas a perusal of that verse shows clearly that it recognizes the validity of any bequest that may have been made. As a further evidence that the law of making a bequest was not abrogated by 4 : 11, see 5 : 106 (the revelation of which is decidedly later than 4 : 11), where the calling of witnesses at the time of making a bequest is enjoined. In practice, however, traced to the time of the Holy Prophet himself, the right to make a will as regards one's property has been subject to the condition that not more than a third of the property shall be bequeathed, and that those who take as heirs shall not be entitled to take under the bequest. But even this practice does not show that the verse is abrogated; on the other hand, it emphasizes the injunction to make a bequest, and shows, in fact, what bequests are spoken of here, by giving further directions as to what could make bequests injurious to the rights of the heirs.

All difficulties in connection with this verse are overcome if we read the words للوالدين و الاقربين meaning for the parents and the kindred, with ان ترك خيرا meaning if he leaves behind any goods, instead of taking them, as referring to the bequest; so that the passage stands thus: Bequest is prescribed for you when death approaches one of you if he leaves behind wealth for parents and kindred. Thus the bequest is not to be made for the parents and the kindred, for their shares are fixed by 4 : 11, but it is to be made for charitable or other purposes. Thus read, the verse is quite in accordance with the other two verses, 4 : 11 and 5 : 106, and with the Holy Prophet's practice as recorded in reports, three of which may be noted here. The first of these, which is recorded by both Bkh and Muslim, is the statement of Sa'd bin Abí Waqqas: "I fell sick in the year of the conquest of Mecca with a sickness which almost made me sure of death. The Holy Prophet came to me, and I told him that I had a large property and had only a daughter to inherit it, and asked his permission to bequeath the whole of my property (evidently for charitable purposes), but I was permitted only to bequeath one-third." That is an abstract of Sa'd's statement. The mention of the year of the conquest of Mecca shows clearly that the incident relates to a time when both the verse under discussion and 4 : 11 had long been revealed. Hence the making of a bequest was not contrary to v. 180, and this verse really speaks of bequests made for charitable or other purposes, and not of bequests to heirs. Two other incidents are of a still later date. 'Áyesha says that a man intended to make a bequest. She asked him how much property he had, and being told that he had 4,000 Drs. and four heirs, told him not to make a bequest and to leave the amount to his heirs, and recited the words ان ترك خيرا occurring in this verse as signifying the leaving of a large property as a condition for a bequest (Bḍ). A similar incident is reported in connection with 'Ali, the fourth caliph. He had a freedman possessing 700 Drs., and 'Ali told him not to make a bequest, reciting the same words, ان ترك خيرا in support of his contention (Bḍ). Both these incidents, happening after the death of the Prophet, show conclusively (1) that v. 180 was not regarded as abrogated, because people still made bequests under it, and both 'Áyesha and 'Ali drew inferences from it; and (2) that the bequests spoken of in this verse were never meant for those who would inherit under 4:11, but for charitable purposes, or in certain cases for those relatives who could not inherit under 4:11.

183, 184. Fasting enjoined. 185. The month of Ramaḍán to be observed as a month of fasting. 186. Acceptance of prayers. 187. The limits of fasts. 188. Rights of property to be respected.

224 Proper advice may be tendered to the testator not to show undue favour to any one or not to exceed the limits of the law to the detriment of the legal heirs.

225 Fasting is a religious institution almost as universal as prayer, and in Islam it is one of the four fundamental practical ordinances, the other three being prayer, poor-rate, and pilgrimage. The words of the Qur-án show that fasting was enjoined on all nations by the prophets who passed before the Holy Prophet Muhammad. "Fasting has in all ages and among all nations been an exercise much in use in times of mourning, sorrow, and afflictions" (Cr. Bib. Con.). Fasting has also been in vogue among the Hindus. Even Christians, who think that they have no need of any religious exercise on account of Jesus' atonement, were commanded by that prophet to keep the fasts: "Moreover, when ye fast, be not as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance. . . . But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head and wash thy face" (Matt. 6:16, 17). Again, when the Pharisees objected to Jesus' disciples not keeping the fast as often as John's, his only answer was that when he will be taken away "then shall they fast in those days" (Luke 5:33–35).

But Islam has introduced quite a new meaning into the institution of fasting. Before Islam, fasting meant the suffering of some privation in times of mourning and sorrow; in Islam, it becomes an institution for the improvement of the moral and spiritual condition of man. This is plainly stated in the concluding words: So that you may guard against evil. The object is that man may learn how he can shun evil, and hence fasting in Islam does not mean simply abstaining from food, but from every kind of evil. In fact, abstention from food is only a step to make a man realize that if he can, in obedience to Divine injunctions, abstain from that which is otherwise lawful, how much more necessary it is that he should abstain from the evil ways which are forbidden by God. All the institutions of Islam are, in fact, practical steps leading to perfect purification of the soul. But along with moral elevation, which is aimed at in fasting, another object seems to be hinted at. In fact, the twofold object is that Muslims may be able to guard themselves, (a) morally and spiritually, against evil, for one who is able to renounce the lawful satisfaction of his desires in obedience to Divine commandments certainly acquires the power to renounce their unlawful gratification; and (b) physically against their opponents by habituating themselves to suffer tribulations which they must suffer in defence of Islam and Muslims.

184 For a certain number of days;[225A] but whoever among you is sick or on a journey, then (he shall fast) a (like) number of other days; and those who are able to do it may effect a redemption by feeding a poor man;[226] so whoever does good spontaneously it is better for him; and that you fast is better for you if you know.

185 The month of Ramaḍán[227] is that in which the Qur-án[228]

225A The number of days is definitely stated in the next verse as being the twenty-nine or thirty days of the month of Ramaḍán. For details of fasting see Preface.

226 The word fidyah used in this verse is thus explained by Rgh: That by means of which a man saves himself, being the wealth which he spends on account of some devotion in which he has fallen short. The word also indicates the giving away of property by which freedom of any kind is purchased. By those who are able to do it are meant those who are able to feed a poor man. As regards those who cannot keep the fasts on account of constant or long illness, or who are too old or too weak (including in this class the woman who is with child or who gives suck), the practice has been to give away the measure of one man's food to a poor man every day during the whole month (Bkh, AD). Doing good to others is enjoined in addition to fasting in the month of Ramaḍán. We are told that the Holy Prophet, who was universally recognized for his abundant charity, was most charitable in the month of Ramaḍán (Bkh). In its mildest form the injunction is generally observed by giving away the measure of a poor man's feeding at the close of the month, which is called the sadaqat-ul-fiṭr, and which is obligatory on every male, female, and child, master and servant (Bkh).

227 The revelation of the Holy Qur-án commenced in the month of Ramaḍán, which is the ninth month of the Arabian year (Rz), hence, the month of Ramaḍán is particularly spoken of as being the month in which the Holy Qur-án was revealed. The root meaning of Ramadán is excessiveness of heat; the month was so called because "when they changed the names of the months from the ancient language, they named them according to the seasons in which they fell, and this month agreed with the days of excessive heat" (LL, Bḍ). Some say that it is one of the names of Allah, for which, however, there is no reliable authority.

228 Al-Qur-án is the name by which the Holy Book revealed to the Prophet Muhammad—peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him!—is known, and by this name the Holy Book is frequently mentioned in the Divine revelation. The word is an infinitive noun from the root qara-a, which signifies primarily he collected together the things (LA, TA-LL). The secondary significance of the root-word is reading or reciting a book, the word being applied to reading or recitation because in reading letters and words are joined to each other in a certain order (Rgh). The name Qur-án really refers to both the root-meanings, for on the one hand it signifies a book in which are gathered together all the Divine Books, a distinction to which the Qur-án itself lays claim in 98 : 4 and elsewhere (Rgh); on the other it means a book that is or should be read, the Holy Qur-án being the book "that has been truly described as the most widely read book in existence" (En. Br.). The commentators have pointed out thirty-one different names under which the Holy Qur-án is spoken of in the revelation itself, the most important of these being Al-Kitáb, or the Book, and Az-Zikr, or the Reminder.

229 There are three statements made here regarding the Holy Qur-án; firstly, that it is a guidance for all men, and that therefore it contains teachings which are suitable for the various classes and grades of men in different countries and ages; secondly, that it contains comprehensive arguments of the guidance, thus demonstrating the truth of what it asserts; and thirdly, that in addition to the arguments it affords a clear distinction, separating the truth from the falsehood by making the faithful taste the fruits of faith and the rejecters the evil consequences of their rejection of truth. The battle of Badr, which is called yaum-ul-furqán, or the day of distinction, in 8 : 41, also took place in the month of Ramaḍán.

230 The connection of this verse with the previous and the following verses consists in the fact that fasting, which includes shunning every sort of evil, brings a man nearer to the fountain-head of purity, and the more a man is brought near to the Holy One, the more do his supplications find acceptance with his Master. Hence, it is related that in the month of Ramaḍán the Holy Prophet exerted himself the greater in his prayers (Bkh), and induced his followers to do likewise (Muslim).

That the prayer of a devout suppliant is accepted is plainly stated here, but two points must be noted in connection with this subject. In the first place, there is an impression that the efficacy of prayer in some way interferes with resorting to practical means to attain an object, so that if this impression has produced a class of men who totally deny the efficacy of prayer, it has also led others to think that by resorting to prayer

187 It is made lawful to you to go in to your wives on the night of the fast; they are an apparel for you and you are an apparel for them;[231] Allah knew that you acted unfaithfully to yourselves,[232] so He has turned to you (mercifully) and removed from you (this burden); so now be in contact with them and seek what Allah has ordained for you, and eat and drink until the whiteness of the day becomes distinct from the blackness of the night at a man may dispense with all external means for the attainment of his object. Both these views are wrong, and opposed to the true doctrine of the efficacy of prayer as taught in Islam. The fact is that there is an indissoluble connection between practical means and prayer. Any one who sets before himself the attainment of an object first looks for the practical means to achieve it, and endeavours to his utmost to find out the agencies by which he can possibly attain that end. In this search for means he has to apply all his faculties to the object before him, and to give his whole attention to the finding of those means which will secure his object. This deep reflection or will-power may be called a prayer in a certain sense. For when we strive hard in search of what is hidden from us and unknown to us, we really seek for guidance from a Higher Power from whom nothing is hidden in a language which is expressed by our very condition. It cannot be doubted that when, in search of a thing, the soul stretches itself out in true zeal and ardour to the Giver of all gifts, and finding itself weak and unable to attain the end by itself, seeks for light from the Higher Source, it is plunged in a prayerful meditation, and its condition then is truly that of one who prays to God. The difference is only this, that the truly wise, the holy men of God, pray with due respect to Him whom they recognize to be the Source of all blessings, and their supplications are based upon a clear knowledge; while the prayer of those upon whose eyes a veil is cast is like wandering in darkness, and it takes the form of meditation and reflection. Thus those who neglect prayer in search of means and do not reflect well upon their course in a prayerful mood are as wrong as those who do not resort to practical means on account of their prayers.

Secondly, it should be borne in mind that the efficacy of prayer does not mean that every object for which a man prays to the Divine Being should be immediately attained. This is made clear by the Holy Qur-án itself: "Him you will call upon, so He clears a way that for which you pray if He pleases" (6 : 41); so that every object prayed for may not be attained. And again: "And We will most certainly try you with somewhat of fear and hunger and loss of property and lives and fruits" (v. 155); so that trials and hardships must be undergone even by the faithful, and they must be prepared to suffer every kind of loss. But just as the efficacy of a medicine cannot be denied because it does not prove efficacious in all cases, so the efficacy of prayer cannot be denied on this ground.

231 This description of the mutual relations of husband and wife, and the mutual comfort they find in and the protection they afford to each other, is unsurpassed in beauty.

232 All that the reports narrated in connection with this verse show is that the Muslims at first thought that it was illegal to go in to their wives, even at night-time, on the days during which they kept fasts, but this practice, which, according to AbM, was adopted from the Christians (Rz), was, at any rate, according to the unanimous opinion of all commentators, not based on any Quranic revelation, the only revelation on this point being the one given in this verse, which pointed out the error of the view and removed the rigour under which the Muslims had placed themselves.

dawn,[233] then complete the fast till night, and have not contact with them while you keep to the mosques;[234] these are the limits of Allah, so do not go near them. Thus does Allah make clear His communications for men that they may guard (against evil).

188 And do not swallow up your property among yourselves by false means, neither seek to gain access thereby to the judges, so that you may swallow up a part of the property of men wrongfully while you know.[235]

233 Khaiṭ originally means thread, but is not limited to that use. The خيط الرقبة (lit., the thread of the neck) means the spinal cord of the neck (S, Q-LL). And خيط من الصبح is also said to signify a tint of the dawn (TA-LL). Hence you say, تبين الخيط من الخيط The night became distinct from the day (TA-LL). Hence الخيط الابيض signifies the whiteness of the dawn and الخيط الاسود the blackness of the night (LL); so here the break of the dawn is meant, after which no food or drink should be taken till sunset.

An important question arises here regarding countries in which the days are sometimes very long, where it would be beyond the power of ordinary men to abstain from food from the breaking of the dawn to sunset. There is a report according to which the companions of the Holy Prophet are related to have asked him about their prayers in a day which extended to a year or a month, and the Prophet is related to have answered that they should measure according to the measure of their days (Muslim-Msh). From this it would follow that in countries where the days are too long the time of fasting may be measured in accordance with the length of days in Medina, or the measure of a poor man's feeding may be given in charity for every fasting day. But postponing to days of shorter length, when that is possible, would be best.

234 By this is meant those who cut themselves off from all worldly connections during the last ten days of the month of Ramaḍán, passing day and night in mosques. This practice is known as I'tikáf. But it is voluntary and not obligatory.

235 The injunction to abstain from illegally taking other men's property is a fitting sequel to the injunction relating to fasting, for by fasting a man abstains from using what he has a legal right to, simply in obedience to Divine commandments. Fasting, in fact, enables a man to control his passions, and once the passions are mastered, the greed for illegally acquiring what belongs to others will also vanish.

236 The indefiniteness of the question is removed by the answer. There were certain months which were observed by the Arabs as sacred, in which the bitterest hostilities ceased and peace was established throughout the land, and thus trade was carried on peacefully and without molestation. It was also during these months that the pilgrimage to the sacred sanctuary at Mecca was performed. As this section deals with the injunctions relating to fighting, the question relating to the sacred months, which is made clearer in v. 218, is appropriately put here, and the answer recognizes the sacred character of those months, for their sacredness afforded to the people the material advantage of being able to carry on trade and the spiritual benefit of performing the pilgrimage.

237 The Arabs were a very superstitious people. When one of them set before himself an important object and was unable to attain it, he would not go into his house by the door, but entered it by the back and kept on doing so for a year (Hasan, Asamm-Rz). As the Muslims were now about to be charged with an onerous duty, viz., the establishing of religious freedom in that land of persecution, which confronted them with the greatest difficulties, they were told not to give way to the old superstitious Arab practices. They were told on the other hand that their remedy in great difficulties was sticking to righteousness.

Some commentators are, however, of opinion that entering by the back indicates turning aside from the right course, while entering by the doors signifies sticking to the right course (Rz). Or the reference may be to the practice prevalent in the days of ignorance of entering the houses by the back after performing the pilgrimage (Bkh).

238 Rabi' and Ibn-i-Zaid are of opinion that this verse is the earliest revelation regarding the permission to fight (Rz), while according to others 22 : 39 is the earliest (Rz). Anyhow, it is one of the earliest revelations on the point. The subject is dealt with here in six verses, closing with v. 195, being again taken up in the following sections. A remarkable point about the injunction to fight in the way of Allah is that it is very often mentioned in connection with the subject of pilgrimage, as here and in the 3rd and 22nd chapters. From this circumstance may be concluded what is clearly stated

191 And kill them wherever you find them,[239] and drive them

وَاقْتُلُوهُمْ حَيْثُ ثَقِفْتُمُوهُمْ وَأَخْرِجُوهُمْ

many times, viz., that fighting was permitted or ordained as a measure of self-defence and to put a stop to religious persecution; the pilgrimage to Mecca, which is one of the four fundamental principles of Islam, being impossible so long as the holy place was in the hands of unbelievers, who had driven the Muslims from Mecca by cruel persecutions.

The first restriction to which fighting in the way of Allah is made subject is that the Muslims should fight only against those "who are fighting with you." These words so clearly show that the Muslim wars were a measure of self-defence that they need no comment. It shows that the enemy had first taken up arms with the object of extirpating Islam, and this fact is borne out by history; it was after that that the Muslims were allowed to fight. This restriction further shows that women, children, and old men who could not take up arms against the Muslims were not to be molested (Rz). A similar exception was also made in favour of monks and hermits. And under the new conditions the civil population of towns and villages would be treated similarly, for only those are to be fought against who actually take part in fighting. The second restriction is that the Muslims shall not exceed the limits of the necessity of war. This direction was the sore need of a community which had been subjected to the cruellest persecutions and the severest tortures at the hands of tyrants, who had neither a law nor any authority over them which should keep them within bounds. The Muslims would have been quite within their rights if in case of victory they had taken their revenge upon their persecutors. But they were warned beforehand that they should not exceed the limit of the bare necessity of the war.

These directions were faithfully followed by the Muslims. They were by no means the aggressors. In the very first important battle they were forced to fight against an army advancing upon Medina, which was only three days' journey from that city. And in all their fighting they only killed or captured the armed foes, and never harmed undefended women or children or old men, though their own women and children had been mercilessly put to death by their persecutors. If they had done so they would have gone beyond the necessity of war and exceeded the previously prescribed limits.

It should be noted that it is this defensive fighting which is called fighting in the way of Allah. Fighting for the propagation of faith is not once mentioned in the whole of the Qur-án, and is solely the product of the inventive brains of Christian missionaries. The hatred which Islam had for fighting is shown by the fact that the Muslims were not allowed to fight until the very existence of Islam was in danger. The excuses for which wars are undertaken in civilized countries had long existed in the case of the Muslims, but such excuses were deemed insufficient.

The injunctions relating to fighting are given in this chapter in order to show their lenity as contrasted with the Israelite law. The first point of contrast is that in the Israelite law fighting was ordained to turn a people out of a land of which they were the rightful owners for centuries. It was not the enemy that had taken up the sword first, whereas in Islam the Muslims were forbidden to fight except against those who first took up the sword. The second point of contrast lies in the treatment of the enemy. The Muslims were forbidden to go beyond the bare necessity of the war, and thus not only women, children, and old men were always safe in their fighting, but even the enemy's habitations, their gardens and their tillage, and everything else, were equally safe. In the Jewish wars, however, men, women, and children were all put to death and cities were destroyed. In fact, the Jewish wars were wars of extermination, while the Muslim wars were undertaken as a defensive measure against extermination by the enemy.

The wars of some of the Christian nations of Europe are more of the nature of the Jewish than the Islamic wars, notwithstanding all their pretensions to civilization.

239 To kill the enemy wherever one finds him is nothing strange when a state of war exists, and yet the critics of Islam draw the most grotesque conclusions from these simple words. The verse, read together with the first, runs thus: And fight with those who out from whence they drove you[240] out, and persecution[241] is severer than slaughter; and do not fight with them at the sacred mosque until they fight with you in it,[242] but if they do fight you, then slay them; such is the recompense of the unbelievers.

192 But if they desist, then surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[243]

193 And fight with them until there is no persecution, and religion should be only for Allah;[244] but if they desist, then there should be no hostility except against the oppressors.[245]

مِّنْ حَيْثُ أَخْرَجُوكُمْ وَالْفِتْنَةُ أَشَدُّ

الْمَسْجِدِ الْحَرَامِ حَتَّىٰ يُقَاتِلُوكُمْ فِيهِ ۖ
فَإِن قَاتَلُوكُمْ فَاقْتُلُوهُمْ ۗ كَذَٰلِكَ
جَزَاءُ الْكَافِرِينَ ۝
فَإِنِ انتَهَوْا فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ غَفُورٌ رَّحِيمٌ ۝
وَقَاتِلُوهُمْ حَتَّىٰ لَا تَكُونَ فِتْنَةٌ
وَيَكُونَ الدِّينُ لِلَّهِ ۖ فَإِنِ انتَهَوْا فَلَا عُدْوَانَ إِلَّا عَلَى الظَّالِمِينَ ۝

are fighting with you, and kill them wherever you find them. Do the civilized nations fight with each other to spare their enemies? Rz says: "And the personal pronoun in the words kill them refers to those with whom fighting is enjoined in the previous verse." In fact, it cannot refer to anything else, nor to unbelievers generally, who are nowhere mentioned in the previous verses, not even in the previous section.

240 These words state the ultimate object of the Muslim wars: And drive them out from whence they drove you out. The persecutors had driven the Muslims out from their houses in Mecca and from the sacred mosque there, which was now the Muslim centre. Thus the Muslims were ordered to carry on war against their persecutors so long as they were not dispossessed of that which they had taken possession of by force. These words further show that the enemy was not to be exterminated, but only to be dispossessed of what he had unlawfully taken.

241 The word which I have rendered as persecution is fitnah, which originally means a burning with fire, and then affliction, distress, and hardship, slaughter, misleading or causing to err, and seduction from faith by any means (LL). The Qur-án explains its use of the word fitnah in v. 217: "They ask you concerning the sacred month—about fighting in it. Say: Fighting in it is a grave matter; and hindering (men) from Allah's way and denying Him and (hindering men from) the sacred mosque and turning its people out of it is still graver with Allah, and persecution is graver than slaughter," where the fitnah is clearly synonymous with hindering men from Allah's way and the sacred mosque, and denying Allah and turning people out of the sacred mosque, thus clearly indicating the persecution of the Muslims. Ibn-i-'Umar explained the word fitnah when he said: And there were very few Muslims, so a man used to be persecuted on account of his religion: they either murdered him or subjected him to tortures until Islam became predominant, then there was no fitnah, i.e. persecution (Bkh). The object is to state that all those who persecuted the Muslims were to be treated as enemies, because persecution of the weaker party led to graver consequences than fighting.

242 The sacredness of the Meccan territory was not to be violated by the Muslims, notwithstanding the terrible afflictions that they had to suffer there, so long as the unbelievers were not the aggressors in this respect too and fought with the Muslims within the sacred territory.

243 Note the clemency of the Islamic fighting injunctions. The Muslims were to sheathe their swords if the enemy desisted from fighting. The unbelievers took advantage of such directions in practising deception on the Muslims: "Those with whom you make an agreement then they break their agreement every time" (8:56).

194 The sacred month for the sacred month and all sacred things are (under the law of) retaliation; whoever then acts aggressively against you, inflict injury on him according to the injury he has inflicted on you and be careful (of your duty) to Allah, and know that Allah

١٩٤ اَلشَّهْرُ الْحَرَامُ بِالشَّهْرِ الْحَرَامِ وَالْحُرُمٰتُ

عَلَيْكُمْ ص وَاتَّقُوا اللّٰهَ وَاعْلَمُوْٓا اَنَّ اللّٰهَ

244 The meaning of the word fitnah has already been explained in foot-note 241. When persecution ceases, and men are not forced to accept or renounce a religion, but are at liberty to profess any religion of the truth of which they are convinced for the sake of Allah, then there should be no more fighting. The words that follow make the sense quite clear: "But if they desist" from causing distress to the converts to Islam by their cruel persecution, the Muslims are at once to stop fighting against them, and hostilities are not to be continued against any except those who continue to oppress.

A comparison with 22:40 will show that this is the correct explanation. There the object of the Muslim fights is plainly set forth in the following words: "And had there not been Allah's repelling some people by others, surely there would have been pulled down cloisters and churches and synagogues and mosques in which Allah's name is much remembered." This shows clearly that the Muslims fought not only in defence of mosques, but also in that of churches and synagogues, and even of the cloisters of monks. The same object is stated here in the words يكون الدين لله which only mean that religion should be only for Allah, so that there remains no compulsion in the matter of religion (v. 256), and every one is at liberty to hold any religion which he likes. The verse, in fact, lays down the broad principle of religious freedom for which one searches elsewhere in vain.

It should also be noted that if we give any other interpretation to the words which makes them signify that fighting is to be continued until the religion of Allah or Islam alone remains, all those verses in which agreements with the enemy and the enemy's desisting from fighting are spoken of as giving the Muslims cause for ceasing hostilities become meaningless. Such an interpretation not only openly contradicts other verses of the Holy Qur-án, but is belied by history itself, for many a time did the Prophet make peace with the unbelievers. A saying of Ibn-i-'Umar casts further light on this point. When he was asked to join one of the two Muslim parties then fighting with one another, he said: "You wish to fight until there is persecution and religion becomes for others than Allah" (Bkh). As the fighting forces were both Muslims, there was no danger of unbelief becoming predominant whichever party won, and therefore the meaning of religion becoming for others than Allah is nothing but the vanishing of religious freedom, and hence the words religion should be for Allah only signify the establishment of religious freedom in the country.

245 The word 'udwán here, and the word i'tidá used thrice in the following verse, generally indicate an exceeding of the proper limit, and hence it is applied to wrongful or unjust conduct, but the punishment by which an injury is inflicted on the offender for wrongful conduct is also called i'tidá, for "it is sometimes in the way of aggression and sometimes in the way of requital" (LL). Rgh says i'tadú here means requite or punish him according to his wrongful conduct. To speak of the punishment of an evil in the terms of that evil is an idiom of frequent use in the Holy Qur-án and in Arabic literature. See further foot-note 27. The words except against the oppressors signify that hostilities can only be carried on against the oppressors, so that when they desist from oppressing, hostilities against them must be stopped.

is with those who guard (against evil).[246]

195 And spend in the way of Allah and cast not yourselves to perdition with your own hands, and do good (to others); surely Allah loves the doers of good.[247]

196 And accomplish the pilgrimage and the visit[248] for Allah, but if you are prevented,[249] (send) whatever offering is easy to obtain,[250] and do

246 This is similar to what is said in v. 191. If the opponents violated the sacred months by attacking the Muslims first in those months, then they, too, were permitted to fight against them in the sacred months. And generally retaliation or requital within the limits of the original act of aggression is permitted in the case of all sacred objects, for silence in that case would be suicidal. This injunction was never abrogated nor ever violated by the Holy Prophet's order. See foot-note 278. The following four months were recognized as sacred: Rajah, Ẕiqa'd, Ẕil-ḥajj, Muharram.

247 For if you withhold monetary aid to your own people when you are attacked, your very existence would be in danger, and thus by your slackness in helping the cause of the community you would be really casting yourselves to perdition with your own hands.

248 Ḥajj and 'umrah, the latter of which is generally translated as the minor pilgrimage, but which may more correctly be rendered as the visit, differ slightly. The 'umrah may be performed at any time, while the ḥajj or the pilgrimage proper can only be performed at a particular time. Of the ceremonies connected with pilgrimage proper, the staying in the plain of 'Arafát is dispensed with in the case of the 'umrah. Thus the principal requirements of the ḥajj are Al-iḥrám, making circuits round the Ka'ba, running between the Ṣafá and the Marwah, and staying in the 'Arafát, while that of the 'umrah are the first three, in both cases there being a difference of opinion as to the shaving of the head subsequently, which indicates only that the pilgrimage is over.

The pilgrimage is the fourth or the last of the fundamental ordinances of a practical nature in Islam, and it in fact represents the last stage in the progress of the spiritual pilgrim in this life. Of the principal requirements of the pilgrimage, the first, or iḥrám, represents the severance of all worldly connections. All those costly and fashionable dresses in which the inner self is so often mistaken for the outward appearance, are cast off, and the pilgrim has only two seamless wrappers to cover himself, and thus shows that in his love for his Master he is ready to cast off all lower connections. The other important requirement is making circuits round the Ka'ba, called ṭawáf, and running between the Ṣafá and the Marwah, called sa'y, and both these are external manifestions of that fire of Divine love which has been kindled within the heart, so that, like the true lover, he makes circuit round the house of his beloved one. He shows, in fact, that he has completely surrendered himself to his beloved Master, and sacrificed all his interests for His sake.

To call these movements of a true lover "puerile rites and ceremonies," as Christians do, is not only to show contempt for the Christ-like appearance of the pilgrim but to deny that love to Allah is anything but mere talk. That the kissing of the black stone is not inconsistent with true monotheism has already been shown in foot-note 191, and as proof of this I may add here 'Umar's words: "Verily I know that thou art a stone; thou dost no good or harm in the world, and if it was not that I saw the Prophet kiss thee, I would not kiss thee" (Msh).

249 Mecca was still in the hands of the opponents of Islam, who prevented the Muslims from performing the pilgrimage. According to I'Ab and many other authorities prevention here means prevention by the enemy and not by a disease, while according to others pre-not shave your heads until the offering reaches its destination; but whoever among you is sick or has an ailment of the head, he (should effect) a compensation by fasting or alms or sacrificing; then when you are secure,[251] whoever profits by combining the visit with the pilgrimage[252] (should take) whatever offering is easy to obtain; but he who cannot find (any offering) should fast for three days during the pilgrimage and for seven days when you return;[253] these (make) ten (days) complete; this is for him whose family is not present in the sacred mosque,[254] and be careful (of your duty) to Allah, and know that Allah is severe in requiting (evil).

The Pilgrimage and the Mischief-makers

197–203. Further ordinances relating to pilgrimage. 204–206. Enemies who work mischief in the garb of friends. 207–209. Necessity of perfect submission. 210. Unbelievers would not cease persecuting until their power is completely broken down.

197 The pilgrimage is (performed in) the well-known months;[255] so whoever determines the performance of the pilgrimage therein, there shall be then no foul speech nor abusing nor disputing in the pilgrimage;[256] and whatever good you do, Allah knows it;

وَمَا تَفْعَلُوْا مِنْ خَيْرٍ يَّعْلَمْهُ اللّٰهُ

vention of both sorts is included (Rz). I see no reason why the verse must be referred to the year of the Hudaibiyya truce.

250 That is in case of prevention, the offering should be sent to the sacred house, or if this is not possible, sacrificed where detained.

251 This is a prophecy that a time would come when the power of the enemy would be completely broken down, and the Muslims would make their pilgrimage to Mecca safe and secure, not having to fear detention by him.

252 A combination of the visit and the pilgrimage means that after the performance of the visit, the pilgrim does not remain in state of iḥrám.

253 That is, when returning home after the performance of the pilgrimage.

254 By this are understood those who do not live in Mecca.

255 The well-known months are Shiwal, Ziqa'd, and the first nine days of Zil-ḥajj.

256 The pilgrimage represents the final stage of spiritual progress, and hence the pilgrim is enjoined not to speak words which should be a source of annoyance to anybody.

Rafas̱ means obscene or foul speech or vain words (Ab 'Ubd-Rz). According to M, Msb, Mgh, it signifies foul, unseemly, immodest or obscene speech (LL). Fusuq, according to a saying of the Holy Prophet, signifies abusing (Rz). Jidál signifies contending in an altercation or disputing or litigating (TA-LL).

257 By provision is meant provision for the journey to Mecca. Some men used to start for a pilgrimage to Mecca without sufficient means, on the pretence that they had their trust in God for their sustenance (I'Ab-Rz). This is prohibited by Islam, and every one who undertakes to perform the pilgrimage is told that he must first provide himself with the necessary requisites, while in the next verse he is even permitted to increase his wealth by trading after he has performed the pilgrimage. But provision may also mean provision for the next life, and in that case taqwá would have its technical meaning of guarding against evil, and the meaning would be that guarding against evil is the best provision for the next life.

258 Faḍl here stands for trading (Rz). The word is elsewhere used in this sense in the Holy Qur-án in several places, as in 73 : 20. What is meant is that there is no harm in seeking an increase of wealth by trading in Mecca in the pilgrimage season. Before the advent of Islam, fairs were held for trading purposes in the pilgrimage season, the most well-known of which are the 'Ukáẓ and Majinnah and Ẕul-majáẓ. The Muslims thought it a sin to take a part in this, and they are told that trade was not forbidden to them even in these days (Bkh).

259 Ifáḍah signifies the advancing or pressing on in journeying with multitude (Ham-LL).

260 The Mash'ar-ul-ḥarám, which literally signifies the holy monument, stands for the place known as Muzdalafa, or the ground bordering on it, where the pilgrims stop for the night after their return from 'Arafát on the evening of the ninth Ẕil-ḥajj.

201 And there are some among them who say: Our Lord! grant us good in this world and good in the hereafter, and save us from the chastisement of the fire![263]

202 They shall have (their) portion of what they have earned, and Allah is swift in reckoning.

Or, on account of.

203 And laud Allah during the numbered days;[264] then whoever hastens off in two days, there is no blame on him, and whoever remains behind, there is no blame on him,[265] (this is) for him who guards (against evil), and be careful (of your duty) to Allah, and know that you shall be gathered together to Him,

204 And among men is he whose speech about the life of this world causes you to wonder, and he calls on Allah to witness as to what is in his heart, yet he is the most violent of adversaries.[266]

261 The Quraish and the Kanana, who styled themselves the Ḥamṣ, as indicating their strength and vehemence, used to stay at Muzdalafah, thinking it beneath their dignity to join other pilgrims in going forth to the plain of 'Arafát. As all distinctions were levelled by Islam, they were told to consider themselves on a par with others (Bkh, Rz).

262 In the days of ignorance they used to boast among themselves of the greatness of their fathers after they had performed the pilgrimage, when they used to assemble in 'Ukáz and other places. This shows what the Qur-án destroyed and what it constructed; what it swept off, and what it established in its place. They were forbidden to boast of the greatness of their fathers, and bidden to laud Allah instead, who would make them much greater than their forefathers. And the insignificant Arab nation was made a world-conquering one.

263 The Holy Prophet used to pray thus (Bkh), and this is the true Muslim's prayer. And as he is taught to pray for both the good of this life and that of the next, so he should exert himself to attain good in this life as well as in the hereafter. Islam points out to us the middle course between materialism and monkery.

264 The numbered days are the three days following the day of sacrifice, and are called the days of tashríq.

265 Ordinarily pilgrims leave on the afternoon of the last of the tashríq days, but they are allowed here to leave on the evening of the second day.

266 Various conjectures have been made as to the particular person meant, and the name of Akhnas bin Shuraiq is suggested, but the best authorities agree that no particular person is meant (Rz). The context also shows that the words relate to mischief-makers, who assured the Prophet of their sympathy with him, but who were really waiting for an opportunity to inflict any loss upon the Muslims.

205 And when he turns back, he runs along in the land that he may cause mischief in it and destroy the tilth and the stock, and Allah does not love mischief-making.

206 And when it is said to him, Guard against (the punishment of) Allah, pride carries him off to sin; therefore hell is sufficient for him; and certainly it is an evil resting-place.[267]

207 And among men is he who sells himself to seek the pleasure of Allah; and Allah is Affectionate to the servants.

208 O you who believe! enter into submission one and all, and do not follow the footsteps of the devil; surely he is your open enemy.

Or, complete submission.

209 But if you slip after clear arguments have come to you, then know that Allah is Mighty, Wise.

210 They do not wait aught but that Allah should come to them in the shadows of the clouds along with the angels, and the matter has (already) been decided; and (all) matters are returned to Allah.[268]

267 Mihād means a cradle, and also what a man has prepared for himself (LL). Both these significances illustrate the nature of hell. It is a thing which a man prepares for himself, and for spiritual growth it serves as a cradle for those who retarded that growth here by their engrossment in the world or by pursuing evil courses.

268 The coming of Allah stands for the execution of His command or the coming of the threatened punishment for the unbelievers (Rz). A verse in the 16th chapter, which was revealed earlier, explains this: "They do not wait aught, but that the angels should come to them, or that the commandment of your Lord should come to pass . . . so the evil consequences of what they do shall afflict them, and that which they mock shall encompass them" (16:33, 34). The first part of this quotation is in almost identical words with the first part of the verse under discussion, and explains the meaning of the coming of Allah. The same phrase is used to indicate the execution of the Divine punishment in 59:2, where the Jews, who were ultimately banished on account of their mischiefs, are spoken of: "They were certain that their fortresses would defend them against Allah, but Allah came to them whence they did not expect."

In like manner the coming of the angels stands for punishment. Thus: "On the day when they shall see the angels, there shall be no good news on that day for the guilty" (25:22). Their desire to see the angels was fulfilled in the battle of Badr, and on that day the heaven was also made to "burst asunder with the clouds" (25:25), which is a metaphorical expression for the coming down of Allah and the angels "in the shadows of clouds": "When you sought aid from your Lord so He answered you: Surely I will assist 269 By the favour of Allah is here meant the revelation of the Holy Prophet, and its change implies its rejection. Compare the buying of error for guidance in v. 16 and elsewhere. The clear signs which were given to the Israelites include the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet, which were repeatedly made known to that people through their prophets, as well as the clear arguments of the truth of the Prophet's mission, which were clearly convincing when compared with what arguments they possessed of the truth of their own prophets.

270 These words give us an image of how the emigrants of Mecca, having left everything behind and being thus reduced to the last straits of poverty, were mocked by the wealthy Jews, whose trade of lending money at usurious rates everywhere brought to them the riches of other people. The mention of the Israelites in the previous verse, and reports showing the connection of this verse with the Jewish chiefs (see Rz), lead us to the same conclusion. The concluding words not only show that moral worth which raised a man above another did not depend on wealth, but also contain a prophetic reference to the time when those who were mocked at on account of their poverty would have abundance even of the provisions of this life.

271 The word Kána does not necessarily refer to the past, but is often used in the Holy Qur-án to convey the idea of a general truth, as in كان الانسان كفورا which means man is ungrateful.

it differed about it after clear arguments had come to them, revolting among themselves;[272] so Allah has guided by His will those who believe to the truth about which they differed;[273] and Allah guides whom He pleases to the right path.

214 Or do you think that you would enter the garden[274] while yet the state of those who have passed away before you has not come upon you: distress and affliction befell them and they were shaken violently, so that the Apostle and those who believed with him said: When will the help of Allah come? Now surely the help of Allah is nigh![275]

272 The significance of this verse has not been rightly understood. The first part of this verse, as distinguished from the second, which is dealt with in the next note, states the universal law according to which Allah raised prophets among all nations, because all nations are a single people, as is said in the opening words of the verse, and therefore it could not be that prophets should be raised in one nation and not in another. With every one of these prophets, we are then told, a book was revealed, so that it might point out the right way to the various contending parties that existed before the advent of that prophet. But, as time passed on, the very people to whom the Book was given so that they might follow it went against it. Thus, though a prophet had been raised in every nation, yet every nation had forsaken the right way, and acted against the very directions which had been given to it, so differences again arose, which necessitated the advent of another prophet. Hence it was necessary to raise a prophet who should show the right way to all nations, and this is what is stated in the second part of the verse.

273 Allah's guiding those who believe refers to the raising of the Holy Prophet, through whom the Muslims were guided to the right path, to the truth, regarding which differences had arisen among all people. If a prophet was needed by every nation to settle its own differences, one was surely now needed to settle the differences of the various nations, for the truth which had been shown to different nations by different prophets had again become obscured. Thus among the different national religions of the world Islam occupies the position of an international religion.

274 Entering the garden stands for success against the enemy in this life and salvation in the next. The concluding words of the verse, Allah's help is nigh, make the reference to the triumph of the cause of truth very clear.

216 Fighting is enjoined on you, and it is an object of dislike to you; and it may be that you dislike a thing while it is good for you, and it may be that you love a thing while it is evil for you, and Allah knows, while you do not know.[277]

كُتِبَ عَلَيْكُمُ الْقِتَالُ وَهُوَ كُرْهٌ لَّكُمْ
وَعَسَىٰ أَن تَكْرَهُوا شَيْئًا وَهُوَ خَيْرٌ لَّكُمْ
وَعَسَىٰ أَن تُحِبُّوا شَيْئًا وَهُوَ شَرٌّ لَّكُمْ
وَاللَّهُ يَعْلَمُ وَأَنتُمْ لَا تَعْلَمُونَ

275 This verse inculcates faith and perseverance under the hardest trials and is an indication of the Prophet's own unequalled endurance and faith. It refers not only to the great trials and hardships which the Muslims had already suffered at Mecca, and the privations which they had to undergo in their exile, but more particularly to the hardships which were yet in store for them, and which they could clearly see in the massing of all forces that could be used to annihilate them. As regards the trials and tribulations of the former prophets, the case of Jesus Christ crying "Eli, Eli, lama sabachtani" on the cross was the most recent in the history of prophets.

276 The meaning is that you should spend the wealth that you have for the benefit of such and such persons. As the fund for the defence of the Muslim society was also utilized for the help of the parents of some and relatives of others, and the fatherless children and the poor men who had not the means to quit their homes, who were still being oppressed at Mecca by the unbelievers, and for the wayfarer who had no security, the Muslims are told that what they spent on wars was really for the good of their own helpless relatives and brethren.

277 Let those who think that the Muslims fought for the booty ponder! They were too weak to carry on the struggle against the mighty forces that were bent upon their destruction, and disliked the war. Only a diseased brain could come to the conclusion that the Prophet "had now determined to resort to the sword to accomplish what his preaching had failed to do" (Wh). Where were the military forces with which the Prophet was going to convert the proud and warring Arabs who had not listened to his word? His first army at Badr, when the Quraish of Mecca were marching upon Medina with a thousand of their most experienced warriors, was 313, including boys of thirteen years of age. Could any sensible man say that the Prophet was now going to convert the hundreds of thousands of Arab warriors with his 313 unequipped and inexperienced followers? And do not the very words of the verse give the lie to this most irrational conclusion? A picture of the distresses and afflictions to which the few converts to Islam were subject is drawn in v. 214. They were few in numbers, poor, exiled, and distressed, yet it became inevitable that they should fight in self-defence or they would have been swept off. It was their utter weakness and the enormous disparity of numbers that made them dislike the fighting. And I may add that not a single instance is recorded in the whole of the Prophet's history showing the conversion of an unbeliever under the pressure of the sword, not a single case is met with of an expedition being undertaken to convert a people. If ever in the world's history a people were compelled to fight in the defence of a grand cause, no nobler instance of it could be given than that of the Prophet with his few faithful followers braving the whole of Arabia in the midst of enemies who had taken up the sword to annihilate them for no other reason than that they were upholders of the cause of Unity (see 22:40). If ever there was a just cause for war, there never was one more just than the cause of humanity at large, the combined cause of the Christian church, of the Jewish synagogue, of the Sabean's house of worship, and of the Muslim mosque, which the early Muslims set before themselves (see 22:40). Compare the injunction given here with the permission contained in v. 190 and 22:39, and the conditions under which this injunction was given will become clear. It was an injunction to fight against those who took up the sword first and turned the Muslims out of their homes. It was an injunction to fight to end persecution and to establish religious freedom, and to save the houses of worship of every religion from being ruined.

278 The last verse contains the Divine injunction to the Muslims to fight with a very powerful enemy. This one gives the reason which necessitated the taking up of the sword. It first prohibits fighting in the sacred months (the reasons for which are given in v. 189) except by way of reprisal (see v. 194). It is an error to suppose that this verse legalizes fighting in the sacred months. The story of 'Abdulla bin Jahsh clearly shows that the injunction of v. 194 was never violated. The Holy Prophet's express commandments to him were to bring him news regarding a caravan of the Quraish (Rz). Seeing three men at Nakhla, 'Abdulla killed one of them and imprisoned the other two. The question arose whether this occurred in a sacred month or not. 'Abdulla's explanation was that the man was killed on the last day of Jamádí before evening, and that the new moon of Rajab was seen afterwards when the sun went down.

After mentioning the exception relating to the sacred months, the unbelievers, who made much of this incident, are told that having done all those acts of violence against the lives and property of the helpless converts of Islam within the sacred territory, and never caring for the sacred months when persecuting the Muslims, they could not question the legality of what 'Abdulla had done. Why was fighting ordained? Because the opponents indulged in serious crimes against the Muslims and showed no respect either for the name of Allah or for the sacred mosque, and continued their persecution of the Muslims, which grew daily in intensity and was worse than slaughter. As there was no hope now that the enemy would cease persecution so long as there remained a single Muslim in Arabia—note the words they will not cease fighting with you until they turn you back from your religion, if they can—the Muslims were compelled to take up the sword in self-defence.

279 The persons spoken of in this passage are the apostates, or those who "turn back from their religion." A wrong impression exists among non-Muslims, and among some Muslims as well, that the Holy Qur-án requires those who apostatize from Islam to be put to death, but this is not true. Some Christian writers have gone so far as to misconstrue the word fa-yamut as meaning he shall be put to death—although it really means then he dies. As the plain words of the Qur-án show, what is stated here is that the opponents of Islam exerted themselves to their utmost to turn back the Muslims from their faith by their cruel persecutions, and therefore if a Muslim actually went back to unbelief he would be a loser in this life as well as in the next, because the desertion of Islam would not only deprive him of the spiritual advantages which he could obtain by remaining a Muslim, but also of the physical advantages which must accrue to the Muslims through the triumph of Islam. And neither here nor anywhere else in the Holy Qur-án is there even a hint at the infliction of capital or any other punishment on the apostate.

It should also be noted that though the word irtidád, which is the technical word for apostasy, is used only twice in the Holy Qur-án, here and in 5 : 54, a return to unbelief after belief is mentioned several times, and on not a single occasion is death stated to be the punishment for return to unbelief. The only report which records a case of death being inflicted on apostasy is that of the party of 'Ukl, who, after professing Islam, feigned that the climate of Medina was insalubrious, and being told to go to the place where the herds of camels belonging to the state were grazed, murdered the keepers and drove the herds along with them. But it will be easily seen that capital punishment in this case was not inflicted on change of faith, but on account of the crime of murder and dacoity. This case is generally cited by the commentators under 5 : 33, which speaks of the punishment of dacoits. There is no other case showing that the punishment of death was ever inflicted on apostasy from Islam.

It may, however, be added that after the first eighteen months of their residence at Medina the Muslims were in a state of constant warfare with the Quraish and the Arab tribes, and apostasy, under these circumstances, meant the desertion of the cause of the Muslims and joining their enemies, so it would have been quite justifiable for the Muslim Law to prescribe the punishment of death for those traitors. But the Holy Qur-án is silent.

280 "Khamr means wine or grape-wine. . . . It has a common application to intoxicating expressed juice of any thing (Q, TA) or any intoxicating thing that clouds or obscures (lit., covers) the intellect, as some say (Mgh, Msb) . . . and the general application is the more correct, because khamr was forbidden when there was not in El-Medinah any khamr of grapes" (LL). It will thus be seen that the word khamr, not only with reference to its root meaning of covering the intellect but also having regard to its usage, includes all intoxicating substances, and therefore I make a departure in translating it as intoxicants, and not as wine or intoxicating liquors. The prohibition of intoxicants in connection with the mention of war shows that Islam wanted to inspire true courage into its followers, and disliked the reckless daring which a man shows under the influence of intoxicating liquors and which has so often led to acts of butchery in wars. And the prohibition spoken of here as regards both intoxicating liquors and games of chance is made plainer in 5 : 90, 91. Those who think that the verse under discussion does not contain a prohibition only fail to understand the language of the Qur-án. When the harm of a thing is stated to be greater than its advantage, it is sufficient indication of its prohibition, for no sensible person would take a course which is sure to bring him to a much greater loss than any advantage.

The change which these simple words, "their sin is greater than their profit," brought about in Arabia will always remain a riddle to the social reformer. The constant fighting of Arab tribes, one against another, had made the habit of drink a second nature with the Arab, and wine was one of the very few objects which could furnish a topic to the mind of an Arab poet. Intoxicating liquors were the chief feature of their feasts, and the habit of drink was not looked upon as an evil, nor had there ever been a temperance movement among them, the Jews and the Christians being themselves addicted to this evil. Human experience with regard to the habit of drink is that of all evils it is the most difficult to be uprooted. Yet but one word of the Holy Qur-án was sufficient to blot out all traces of it from among a whole nation, and afterwards from the whole of the country as it came over to Islam. History cannot present another instance of a wonderful transformation of this magnitude brought about so easily yet so thoroughly. It may also be added here that Sale's remark that "the moderate use of wine is allowed," and that only drinking to excess is prohibited, according to some, is absolutely without a foundation. The companions of the Holy Prophet never made use of a drop of wine after the prohibition was made known, and the Holy Prophet is reported to have said: "A small quantity of any thing of which a large quantity is intoxicating is prohibited" (AD-Rz). Nor does Kf say what Sale attributes to him, for the words which give rise to Sale's misconception deal with, not wine, but another preparation regarding which there is a difference of opinion among the jurists.

281 The original word is maisir, derived from yasara, meaning he divided anything into parts or portions. Maisir was a game of hazard of the Arabs, and in the legal language of Islam includes all games of chance. Some derive it from yusr, meaning ease, because of the ease with which wealth could be attained by it. Wine and gambling are both declared in 5 : 91 as causing "enmity and hatred to spring in your midst," and a society the members of which are imbued with feelings of hatred and enmity towards each other must be a very unfortunate society, especially when it is in a state of war with external foes.

282 In consequence of the fighting which was necessitated by the persecutions of the opponents of Islam against the helpless Muslims, it was inevitable that many children would be left orphans, so an injunction regarding the care of orphans is added here. But it may be added that the earliest revelations of the Holy Qur-án always speak of the orphans, the needy, and the slave in the kindest words, and lay special stress on helping and feeding them. One quotation from one of the earliest revelations will suffice here: "But he would not attempt the uphill road, and what will make you comprehend what the uphill road is? It is the setting free of the slave, or the giving of food in a day of hunger to an orphan, having relationship, or to the poor man lying in the dust" (90 : 11-16).

Injunctions like these give one a true insight into the character of the Holy Prophet as the greatest benefactor of humanity, with whom actual good to fellow-man was the primary duty which is always mentioned in conjunction with one's duty to God.

283 Copartnership with an orphan is expressly allowed here, because when strict injunctions were given regarding the safeguarding of orphans' property, some men thought it was a sin to have anything to do with it (Rz). It further shows that orphans must be treated as brethren.

284 The war with the idolaters, who really now stand not for a people differing in religious views but for enemies bent upon the destruction of the Muslims, had brought new conditions into existence. Intermarriages with those who were warring upon the Muslims would have led to serious troubles and numerous complications. A reference to 60:10 will show that even the marital relations already existing with these people had to be ended on account of the war. Hence the prohibition of such intermarriages. But as idolatry does not allow the intellect to develop, the prohibition, though introduced on a particular occasion, becomes permanent. It may, however, be added that all those people who have been given a scripture are treated differently (see 5:5), and hence by the idolaters here are meant particularly the Arabs, who possessed no scripture for their guidance. The Jewish law prohibited intermarriages with all other people (Deut. 7:3, 4), and even Paul, so liberal in his other views, strictly prohibited intermarriages with all unbelievers: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness?" (2 Cor. 6:14). The Islamic law offers an improvement on both the Jewish and the Christian laws, for which see 667.

285 Reason is here given why marriage relations with an idolatrous people who are enemies of the Muslims are forbidden. The fire to which they invite stands for destruction in this life, as the garden stands for success. The Turks who married Greek, Austrian, and French ladies, although they knew that those people aimed at their destruction, have learned a good lesson as to what this fire is, for the foreign blood thus introduced among them has sapped the Turkish Empire from within.

286 The last section dealt with some of the questions arising out of a state of warfare in which the Muslims at this time found themselves. The last of these questions was about intermarriages with the enemy, and the subject of marriage having been introduced, the Qur-án naturally passes on to the question of marital obligations. There is another aspect, too, of the relation of this question to the subject of war. Just as war made many children orphans, it made many women widows, and the rights of the widows as well as the question of their remarriage is dealt with here; but as the rights of the divorced women and the question of their remarriage are closely related with similar questions relating to widows, the subject is introduced with matters relating to divorced women. The subject of the monthly courses is introduced as a preliminary to the subject of divorce, because any divorce pronounced at such a time is illegal and does not take effect (Bkh). In fact, divorce, being a separation, could not take place when the menstrual discharge had already brought about a kind of separation, sexual intercourse being forbidden during the time. For divorce to be effective according to Islam, it is necessary that there should exist between the parties a state making possible the loving communion of husband and wife, so that the smaller frictions of which the marriage relations are not always free may vanish into nothingness before the ecstasy of mutual love.

287 Azá signifies a slight evil, slighter than what is termed ḍarar (LL), or anything that causes a slight harm (Mgh-LL). The Jewish law contains a similar prohibition in Lev. 18: 19 and 20: 18, though Jewish practice rendered it necessary that the separation between husband and wife should be more complete, and should not be limited to the cessation of sexual intercourse.

288 Anná means either matá, i.e. when, or kaifa, i.e. how (AH). There is nothing disgusting in these simple words. The Qur-án contains directions for the physical as well as the moral and spiritual welfare of man, and it deals with the most delicate questions in language unapproached in its purity in any other law dealing with similar questions. It is a miracle of the Holy Qur-án that while it was produced in the language of a people whose poets took pride in describing the relations of the sexes in the most indecent words and phrases, the language of the Qur-án is unsurpassed in purity, and any one who doubts this statement need only compare the treatment of such subjects in the Qur-án and the Bible. Many of the phrases dealing with the delicate relations of the sexes were introduced by the Holy Qur-án itself, and its literature is therefore one which brings no shudder to the fair reader, unlike many of the descriptions contained in the Bible. The comparison of the woman to the tilth is simply to show that it is she who brings up the child and through whom is made the character of the man, and to show that the real object of conjugal relations is not the satisfaction of carnal desires. As it is the ground on which the growth of the plant depends, so it is the mother on whom depends the growth of the man and the building up of his character. This shows the importance of the woman in the marital relation and in society.

289 The meaning is that you should not every now and then swear by Allah that you will not do such and such a thing, so that you deprive yourselves of the occasions of doing good, and at the same time, since you swear by Allah, you allege Him to be an obstacle in the way of your doing good, whereas He bids you do good. 'Urḍah is a thing that is set as an obstacle in the way of a thing, or that is set as a butt like the butt of archers. Or it signifies intervention with respect to good and evil, and the meaning is: "Do not intervene by swearing by Allah every little while, so as not to do good, etc., or, Make not Allah an object of your oaths by ordinary and frequent swearing by Him, or a butt for your oaths like the butt of archers, in order that, etc. (Bḍ). Or, as some say: Make not the mention of Allah a means of strengthening your oaths" (LL). As the temporary separation of husband and wife with which the verse following the next verse deals rested on an oath on the part of the husband to refrain from going in to his wife, the Holy Qur-án discourages all oaths of this kind, i.e. oaths which would keep a man back from doing good of any kind, the fulfilment of marital obligations being thus shown to be a good thing. Hence the subject of oaths is only another preliminary to the question of divorce.

227 And if they have resolved on a divorce,[293] then Allah is surely Hearing, Knowing.
228 And the divorced women should keep themselves in waiting for three courses ;[294]

وَإِنْ عَزَمُوا الطَّلَاقَ فَإِنَّ اللَّهَ
سَمِيعٌ عَلِيمٌ ۝
وَالْمُطَلَّقَاتُ يَتَرَبَّصْنَ بِأَنْفُسِهِنَّ ثَلَاثَةَ قُرُوءٍ

291 Ílá signifies an oath that one shall not go in to one's wife. In the days of ignorance the Arabs used to take such oaths frequently, and as the period of suspension was not limited, the wife was compelled sometimes to pass her whole life in bondage, having neither the position of a wife nor that of a divorced woman free to marry elsewhere. The law of the Qur-án declares that if the husband does not reassert conjugal relations within four months the wife shall be divorced (Rz).

292 By going back is meant the re-establishing of conjugal relations (Rz).

293 Taláq is an infinitive noun from talaqat, said of a woman, meaning she was left free to go her way or became separated from her husband (TA–LL), and signifies the dissolving of the marriage tie (TA–LL). The subject of divorce, which is introduced here, is dealt with in this and the following two sections, and further on in the 4th and 65th chapters. It may be noted that the words in which the subject is introduced give a warning against resorting to this measure except under exceptional circumstances. At the conclusion of the previous verse we are told that if the husband reasserts conjugal relations after temporary separation he is forgiven, for Allah is Forgiving, Merciful. But if he is determined to divorce, then if he is guilty of an excess against the wife he will be punished, because the epithets Hearing and Knowing are only mentioned when the act is either disapproved or highly approved, i.e. when either punishment or a reward is to be given. As reward in such a case is quite out of the question, it is clear that the words contain a warning in case injustice should be done in divorcing.

Divorce is one of the institutions of Islam regarding which much misconception prevails, so much so that even the Islamic law, as administered in the British courts in India, is not free from these misconceptions. The chief features of the Islamic law of divorce, as dealt with in the Holy Qur-án, will be noticed under the particular verses dealing with them. Here I may state that the Islamic law has many points of advantage as compared with both the Jewish and Christian laws as formulated in Deuteronomy and Matthew. The chief feature of improvement is that the wife can claim a divorce according to the Islamic law, neither Moses nor Christ conferring that right on the woman, though it is to be regretted that this very feature is the one that is not recognized in India. Another feature of the Islamic law of divorce is that it is elastic and does not strictly limit the causes of divorce. In fact, if the civilized nations of Europe and America, who own the same religion, are at the same stage of advancement, and have an affinity of feeling on most social and moral questions, cannot agree as to the causes of divorce, how could a universal religion like Islam, which was meant for all ages and all countries, for people in the lowest grade of civilization as well as those at the top, limit those causes, which must vary with the varying conditions of humanity and society.

It may also be added here that, though divorce is allowed by Islam if sufficient cause exists, yet the right is to be exercised under exceptional circumstances. The Qur-án itself approves of the Holy Prophet insisting on Zaid not divorcing his wife, notwithstanding a dissension of a sufficiently long standing (33 : 37). And the Holy Prophet's memorable words, of all the things which have been permitted to men divorce is the most hated by Allah (AD), will always act as a strong check on any loose interpretation of the words of the Holy Qur-án. There are cases on record in which he actually pronounced divorce to be illegal (Bkh).

294 The period of waiting, or 'iddat, forms the first condition in the Islamic law of divorce. But for cases in which marriage is not consummated no period of waiting is necessary (33–49).

and it is not lawful for them that they should conceal what Allah has created in their wombs, if they believe in Allah and the last day; and their husbands have a better right to take them back in the meanwhile if they wish for reconciliation;[295] and they have rights similar to those against them in a just manner,[296] and the men are a degree above them,[297] and Allah is Mighty, Wise.

Divorce

229. When divorce becomes irrevocable and wife's claim to it. 230. Effect of an irrevocable divorce. 231. Wife's right not to be retained for injury.

229 Divorce may be (pronounced) twice;[298] then keep (them) in good fellowship or let (them) go with kindness;[299] and it is not lawful for you to take any part of what you have given them,[300] unless both fear that they cannot keep within

اَلطَّلَاقُ مَرَّتٰنِ ۖ فَإِمْسَاكٌ بِمَعْرُوْفٍ

أَنْ تَأْخُذُوْا مِمَّآ اٰتَيْتُمُوْهُنَّ
شَيْئًا إِلَّآ أَنْ يَّخَافَآ أَلَّا يُقِيْمَا

295 The period of waiting is really a period of temporary separation, during which conjugal relations may be re-established. This period of temporary separation serves as a check upon divorce, and it is the second point mentioned by the Holy Qur-án in connection with the law of divorce. If there is any love in the union its pangs would assert themselves during the period of temporary separation, bringing about a reconciliation, and the differences would sink into insignificance. This is the best safeguard against a misuse of divorce, for in this way only such unions would be ended by divorce as really deserve to be ended, being devoid of the faintest spark of love. A conjugal union without love is a body without a soul, and the sooner it is ended the better. Thus, while the Islamic law of divorce makes every possible provision for love to assert itself, it requires the dissolution of the marriage tie when it is proved that mutual love is not possible.

296 The rights of women against their husbands are here stated to be similar to those which the husbands have against their wives. The statement must, no doubt, have caused a stir in a society which never recognized any rights for the woman. The change in this respect was really a revolutionizing one, for the Arabs hitherto regarded women as mere chattels, and now the women were given a position equal in all respects to that of men, for they were declared to have rights similar to those which were exercised against them. This declaration brought about a revolution not only in Arabia but in the whole world, for the equality of the rights of women with those of men was never previously recognized by any nation or any reformer; nay, it is not to this day recognized among the most civilized nations. The woman could no longer be discarded at the will of her "lord," but she could either claim equality as a wife or demand divorce.

297 The statement that "men are a degree above them" does not nullify the rights asserted in the previous passage, but refers to quite a different aspect of the question, which is made clear in 4 : 34 (see 568).

the limits of Allah; then if you fear that they cannot keep within the limits of Allah, there is no blame on them for what she gives up to become free thereby.[301] These are the limits of Allah, so do not exceed them, and whoever exceeds the limits of Allah, these it is that are the unjust.

حُدُوْدَ اللّٰهِ فَاِنْ خِفْتُمْ اَلَّا يُقِيْمَا

فَلَا تَعْتَدُوْهَا وَمَنْ يَّتَعَدَّ حُدُوْدَ
اللّٰهِ فَاُولٰٓئِكَ هُمُ الظّٰلِمُوْنَ ۝

298 The third rule regarding divorce is that the revocable divorce of the previous verse can be pronounced only twice. In the days of ignorance a man used to divorce his wife and take her back within the prescribed time, even though he might do this a thousand times (Rz). Islam reformed this practice by allowing a revocable divorce twice, so that the period of waiting in each of these two cases might serve as a period of temporary separation during which conjugal relations could be re-established.

299 The fourth point is that the husband must make his choice after the second divorce either to retain her permanently or to bring about a final separation. The object of a true marriage union is indicated in the simple words keep them in good fellowship. Where the union is characterized by quarrels and dissensions instead of good fellowship, and two experiences of a temporary separation show that there is no real love in the union, and good fellowship is therefore entirely absent, the only remedy that remains is to let the woman go with kindness. An earnest endeavour has been made, and has shown that the illuminating spark of love is not there; therefore the marriage union must be looked upon as a failure, and it is both in the interests of the husband and the wife and in the interests of society itself that such a union should be brought to a termination, so that the parties may seek a fresh union. But even in taking this final step the woman must be treated kindly.

300 The full payment of the dowry to the woman is the fifth rule relating to the Islamic law of divorce, and it serves as a very strong check upon the husband in resorting to unnecessary divorce. The dowry is usually sufficiently large to make divorce a step which can only be adopted as a last measure.

301 This is the sixth rule with regard to divorce, and it gives the wife a right to claim a divorce. Among the religions of the world it is one of the distinguishing characteristics of Islam that it gives the wife the same right to claim a divorce as it gives the husband to pronounce one, if she is willing to forego the whole or part of her dowry. The case of Jameelah, wife of Sâbit bin Qais, is one that is reported in numerous reports of the highest authority. Here it was the wife who was dissatisfied with the marriage. There was not even a quarrel, as she plainly stated in her complaint to the Holy Prophet: "I do not find any fault with him on account of his morals (i.e. his treatment) or his religion." She only hated him. And the Holy Prophet had her divorced on condition that she returned to her husband the garden which he had made over to her as her dowry (Bkh). It is even said that the husband's love for the wife was as intense as her hatred for him (Rz). If, then, a woman could claim a divorce for no reason other than the unsuitableness of the match, she had certainly the right to claim one if there was ill-treatment on the part of the husband or any other satisfactory reason, and among the early Muslims it was an established right. Even now it is a right which is maintained in many Muslim countries. Technically such a divorce is called Khula'.

It will be noted that though this verse forms the basis of the law relating to Khula', the words indicate an unwillingness on the part of both spouses to continue the marriage relation: Unless both fear that they cannot keep within the limits of Allah, which is explained as meaning their inability to perform towards each other their marital obligations and to maintain good fellowship (Bkh). The reason for this, apparently, is 230 So if he divorces her[302] she shall not be lawful to him afterwards until she marries another husband; then if he divorces her there is no blame on them both if they return to each other (by marriage), if they think that they can keep within the limits of Allah;[303] and these are the limits of Allah which He makes clear for a people who know.

231 And when you divorce women and they reach their prescribed time, then either retain them in good fellowship or set them free with liberality, and do not retain them for that the passage follows one requiring a permanence of relationship that can no more be broken when the husband has adopted this choice after a second divorce, so that the relation can only be broken if the wife finds it unbearable. Another reason seems to be that the woman is usually the last to be willing to break up the marriage relationship.

The words if you fear evidently refer to the properly constituted authorities (Rz), and this brings us to the seventh point with regard to the law of divorce, viz. that the authorities can interfere in the matter, and cases are actually on record in which a wrong done by an unjust divorce was mended by the authorities.

302 The words refer to the "putting off with kindness" of the previous verse, and hence by divorce here is meant the irrevocable divorce pronounced a third time, i.e. after there has been a divorce and a restitution of conjugal rights twice.

303 After the irrevocable divorce is pronounced the husband cannot remarry the divorced wife until she has been married elsewhere and divorced, and this is the eighth point with regard to the rules of divorce. The verse abolishes the immoral custom of ḥalálah, or temporary marriage gone through with no other object than that of legalizing the divorced wife for the first husband, a custom prevalent in the days of ignorance, but abolished by the Holy Prophet, according to a report which speaks of his having cursed those who indulge in the evil practice (IMj-Msh). There must be a genuine marriage and a genuine divorce.

This restriction makes the third pronouncement of divorce very cautious, and, in fact, very rare, and thus acts as another check against frequent divorce. Muir's remarks as to the hardship which this rule involves not only for "the innocent wife" but also for the "innocent children," for "however desirous the husband may be of undoing the wrong, the decision cannot be recalled," are totally unjustified, for the irrevocable divorce cannot be pronounced until a temporary separation has taken place twice and the experiences of both have shown that the marriage relationship cannot be continued. It should also be uoted that the irrevocable divorce cannot be pronounced all at once. The special checks on divorce have already been mentioned, and it may be added here that the third or the irrevocable divorce would be very rare if the rules relating to divorce as given in the Holy Qur-án are observed. Cases are on record in which long years elapsed between the pronouncement of the first and the second divorce. For instance, the case of Rukána may be noted, who first divorced his wife in the time of the Holy Prophet, then remarried her, then divorced her a second time in the time of 'Umar, the second Caliph, and finally in the time of 'Usmán, the third Caliph (AD, IMj, Tr, Dr-Msh).

Remarriage of Divorced Women and Widows

232. Divorced women not to be prevented from remarrying. 233. The giving of suck to children by the divorced wife. 234. The period of waiting for the widows. 235. Remarriage within the prescribed period of waiting is illegal.

232 And when you have divorced women and they have ended their term (of waiting), then do not prevent them from marrying their husbands when they agree among themselves in a lawful manner;[306] with this is admonished he among you who believes in Allah and the last day; this is more profitable and purer for you; and Allah knows while you do not know.

وَإِذَا طَلَّقْتُمُ النِّسَاءَ فَبَلَغْنَ أَجَلَهُنَّ

304 Hence if the husband is proved to give injury to the wife, he cannot retain her, and she can claim a divorce. Injury to the wife may be of a general nature or one given with the object of compelling her to remit the whole or part of her dowry to obtain a divorce. This practice was resorted to by the pre-Islamite Arabs, and the words are meant to abolish the evil (Rz). It is for the judge to see that the husband is not taking undue advantage of his position. On the other hand, the husband is enjoined to show liberality to the divorced wife, and the judge would no doubt see that the injunctions of the Holy Book are observed.

305 These words show that divorce is a very serious matter, and the injunctions given in this respect are not to be treated lightly.

306 This is the ninth point in the rules of divorce. It has already been stated that the conjugal relations can be re-established within the period of waiting. Here it is stated that if the period of waiting has elapsed, even then the former husband can remarry the divorced wife, on the first two occasions when the divorce is pronounced. The case of the sister of Ma'qil bin Yasár is well known on this point. Being divorced by her husband, and the period of waiting having elapsed, the two were again willing to remarry, but Ma'qil objected, and the marriage was performed when the verse was revealed (Bkh).

233 And the mothers[307] should suckle their children for two whole years for him who desires to make complete the time of suckling; and their maintenance and their clothing must be borne by the father according to usage; no soul shall have imposed upon it a duty but to the extent of its capacity; neither shall a mother be made to suffer harm on account of her child, nor a father on account of his child, and a similar duty (devolves) on the (father's) heir;[308] but if both desire weaning by mutual consent and counsel, there is no blame on them, and if you wish to engage a wet-nurse for your children, there is no blame on you so long as you pay what you promised for according to usage; and be careful of (your duty to) Allah and know that Allah sees what you do.

234 And (as for) those of you who die and leave wives behind, they should keep themselves in waiting for four months and ten days;[309] then when they have fully attained their term, there is no blame on you for what they do for themselves in a lawful manner;[310] and Allah is aware of what you do.

The verse also legalizes the remarriage of divorced women in general, and the words their husbands would in this case signify their prospective husbands.

307 By mothers here are meant in particular, as the context shows, women who have been divorced having children to suckle (Rz).

308 In case the father dies before the child is weaned, the heir is bound to pay the expenses.

309 The period of waiting in the case of a widow is four months and ten days. But in case a divorced woman or a widow is with child, the period of waiting is extended to the time of delivery (see 65 : 4).

310 The meaning is that the widow may look out for a husband and remarry.

Additional Provisions for Divorced Women and Widows

236, 237. Provision for women divorced before consummation of marriage. 238, 239. Prayers should be observed though facing the enemy. 240. Bequeathal in favour of widows for residence and maintenance for one year. 241, 242. Divorced women are also entitled to maintenance.

236 There is no blame on you if you divorce women when you have not touched them or appointed for them a portion, and make provision for them, the wealthy according to his means and the straitened in circumstances according to his means, a provision according to usage; (this is) a duty on the doers of good (to others).[312]

237 And if you divorce them before you have touched them and you have appointed for them a portion, then (pay to them) half of what you have appointed, unless they relinquish or he should relinquish in whose hand is the marriage tie;[313] and it is nearer to righteousness that you should relinquish; and do not neglect the giving of free gifts between you;[314] surely Allah sees what you do.

311 The literal significance of the words is given in the margin. By the writing is meant the period of waiting written down for women (Bḍ), so that a marriage contracted during the period of waiting is illegal.

312 The fariḍah or the portion is the dowry, so that even when no dowry has been agreed upon, and marriage has not been consummated, liberality must be shown to the divorced wife, and some provision should be made for her, even though the husband may be in straitened circumstances.

313 The husband is the person in whose hand is the marriage tie (Rz). His relinquishing his due is equivalent to not claiming the half of the dowry which he is entitled to by this verse. Note that relinquishing on the part of husbands is here stated to be the more commendable course: It is nearer to righteousness that you should relinquish.

314 By fadl is meant here the doing of an act of grace or bounty, that which one is not in duty bound to do; and therefore what is implied is the giving of free gifts.

315 Aṣ-Ṣalát-ul-wusṭá means the best or the most excellent prayer, not the middle prayer, because wusṭá is a comparative degree, and middle does not admit of comparison, hence the other significance of wasaṭ, which is excellent, and which can admit of comparison, must be adopted. In fact, wusṭá could have meant most middle or most excellent, but as the former is meaningless, the latter significance is adopted. The later afternoon prayer is said to be meant here (Bkh), but in the face of seventeen different conjectures as to what it refers to, I am of opinion that it does not refer to any particular prayer, and that the injunction simply amounts to this, that we should attend to prayer in the most excellent form. The very use of the word wusṭá is an answer to the critics who think that prayer in Islam is simply the observance of the outward form. The Holy Qur-án is full of injunctions showing that it is the spirit which Islam is after and not the form. The Holy Qur-án even condemns those whose prayers have no inner meaning (107: 4-6). But if regularity and method had not been adopted, Islam, like other religions, would have passed into mere idealism. It is strange that those who are so strict about regularity with regard to the needs of the body should be so adverse to regularity concerning the needs of the soul. It is absurd on the part of a Christian to pretend that there is anything like a sincere praying emotion in the vast majority of Christians. They have neglected the very faculty of prayer, and so it is almost, if not wholly, dead in them. Islam requires that faculty to be constantly exercised by enjoining prayer to be regularly attended to, even though one should be facing the enemy. For introduction of an injunction relating to prayer into a subject to which it seems quite foreign, see next foot-note.

316 The reference to danger is the danger from the enemy, who might make an onslaught on the Muslims if they neglect their defence when attending to prayer. There is thus a reversion here to the subject of fighting, which was introduced with the question of the qiblah, and which is really dealt with throughout this chapter; and while the question of widowhood which is being dealt with here is closely associated with this subject, because fighting was to leave many widows, it is plainly reverted to in the next section.

241 And for the divorced women (too) provision (must be made) according to usage; (this is) a duty on those who guard (against evil).[318]

317 There is nothing to show that this verse is abrogated by any other verse of the Holy Qur-án. Neither v. 235 nor 4 : 12 contains anything contradicting this verse. The former of these states the period of waiting for a widow to be four months and ten days, but here we have nothing about the period of waiting; it simply speaks of a year's residence and maintenance, while the latter portion of the verse plainly says that if the widow of her own accord leaves the house . . . she is not entitled to any further concession, and there is no blame on the heirs of the deceased husband for what the widow does of lawful deeds, i.e. if she remarries after her waiting period of four months and ten days is over. As regards 4 : 12, the fourth or eighth part of the property of the deceased husband is hers in addition to what she obtains under this verse, and 4 : 12 plainly says that any thing which is to be paid under a will shall have precedence of the division of property into shares under that verse. Not being opposed to any other verse, there is nothing to justify us in considering this as an abrogated verse, neither is it true that the widow's share was limited only to one year's residence and maintenance at first; this was simply an additional benefit, and the verse that follows, requiring maintenance even for divorced women, makes it further clear, for they could not be imagined as claiming maintenance as heirs.

I may add here that, though Bkh has a report showing that 'Us̱mán and Ibn-i-Zubair considered the injunction as to the widow's maintenance for a year to be abrogated, yet that very report shows that even 'Us̱mán mentioned it as his own opinion; and when he was asked by Ibn-i-Zubair to leave the verse out he refused, saying that he could not make any alteration in what the Prophet had left (Bkh). This shows clearly that the Holy Prophet never said that the verse was abrogated, and 'Us̱mán was aware of this fact. Hence he did not dare to make any alteration. All that appears from that report is that 'Us̱mán thought that the year's maintenance was obligatory, and he could not reconcile this with v. 235. But not only was it not obligatory, as the translation shows, but even if it were considered obligatory, the injunction did not clash with that contained in v. 235, as Mujáhid's explanation, quoted along with what 'Us̱mán said by Bkh, clearly shows. Mujáhid says: "Allah gave her (i.e. the widow) the whole of a year, seven months and twenty days being optional under the bequest; if she desired she could stay according to the bequest (i.e. having maintenance and residence for a year), and if she desired she could leave the house (and remarry), as the Qur-án says: then if they leave of their own accord there is no blame on you" (Bkh).

318 Note that this provision is in addition to the dowry which must be paid to them. This shows how lenient and just are the injunctions of the Holy Qur-án towards women.

319 Ulúf is plural either of alf, meaning a thousand, or âlif (AH, Bd, Rz), the meaning in this case being a congregation or in a state of union (Bd, Msb-LL). The congregation referred to in this verse is the congregation of the Israelites who left Egypt with Moses, the whole body of the Israelites being called a congregation in the Torah, and the clear mention of the children of Israel after Moses in v. 246 corroborates this. Here we have a people who left their homes for fear of death, and besides the Israelites' exodus from Egypt no incident in history answers to this description. In fact, the very word khurúj (going forth) contains a direct hint of the Exodus. And they were no doubt thousands, their number being over six hundred thousand according to Num. 1:46. Then there is no doubt, too, that they left Egypt for fear of death, for death would surely have been the fate of that nation if they had not emigrated. Not only were orders given by Pharaoh for their male offspring to be killed, but they were also kept in a state of bondage which would soon have brought them to a state of intellectual and moral death (compare v. 49). The next incident in the history of that nation as referred to here is the Divine commandment to them, to "die." This is more fully stated in 5:21–26. Moses told them to enter the holy land "which Allah has prescribed for you," but they refused and were made to wander about in the wilderness for forty years, so that that generation perished. This is also shown by their history as given in the Old Testament: "Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness . . . doubtless ye shall not come into the land" (Num. 14:29, 30). This was their death.

After that, we are told, Allah gave them life. This refers to the next generation, which was made to inherit the promised land: "But your little ones . . . they shall know the land which ye have despised" (Num. 14:31). The whole is meant as a warning for the Muslims, who are told that if they follow the footsteps of those people death must be their fate, as it was the fate of a much greater nation. This warning is made clear in the next verse: And fight in the way of Allah.

They said: And what reason have we that we should not fight in the way of Allah, and we have indeed been compelled to abandon our homes and our children.[324] But when fighting was ordained for them, they turned back, except a few of them, and Allah knows the unjust.

320 A comparison with 2:190 will clearly show that fighting in the way of Allah is equivalent to fighting in defence of the faith and rights.

321 A misunderstanding as to the conception of these words has led to much carping at the Qur-án. Aqrada-hú does not originally mean he made him a loan, but the real significance is, he cut off for him a portion to be requited or compensated for it (LL). The root word qard also means cutting originally. Hence the idea of making a loan is not a primary but only a secondary significance of the word. Commenting on this verse, LL says: "It means, according to AIs, the grammarian, who is he who will offer unto God a good action or gift, or any thing for which a requital may be sought, or, as Akh, one of the most famous grammarians says, who will do a good action by following and obeying the command of God"; and he adds: "The Arabs say, قد اقرضتني قرضا حسنا which signifies thou hast done to me a good deed which I am bound to requite (TA-LL)." According to Zj, qard signifies any thing done on which a reward may be expected, and hence the Arabs say قرض حسن meaning a deed on which a good reward is expected, and قرض سيئ meaning a deed on which an evil reward is expected (Rz). And a verse of Umayyah bin Salt is an evidence of the truth of this significance:

كل امرئ سوف يجزى قرضه حسنا او سيئا و مدينا كالذي دانا

i.e. every man will have his deeds rewarded to him in a goodly manner or in an evil manner, and he will be rewarded as he did.

322 The meaning is either that Allah receives the gift that is offered to Him and then amplifies it, the significance being that any sacrifice made in the cause of truth is amply rewarded by Allah, or it is a general statement indicating that the tightening of the means of subsistence and their amplification are in the hands of Allah.

323 The prophet alluded to is Samuel: "Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us . . . that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles" (1 Sam. 8:19, 20). In the history which follows, the Qur-án does not show any important difference with the Bible narrative, and to call the account given here "a garbled rendering of the Israelitish history" is due to ignorance. It is quite true, however, that the Bible itself is neither an absolutely trustworthy authority nor a full record of the Israelitish history, nor is proof wanting in many cases that where the Qur-án differs from the Bible it corrects some misstatement. See, for instance, foot-note 147.

248 And their prophet said to them: Surely the sign of his kingdom is that there shall come to you the heart[328] in which there is tranquility from your Lord and the best[329] of what the followers of Moses and the followers of Aaron have left, the angels bearing it:[330] most surely there is a sign in this for you if you are believers.

324 1 Sam. 15:33 shows that the Amalekites had killed the children of Israel, while 1 Sam. 17:1 shows that they had taken lands which belonged to Judah.

325 Saul is here called Ṭálút, which is of the measure of fá'lút from ṭála, meaning he or it was tall, and he is so called on account of the tallness of his stature. It appears from the Bible narrative that Saul was the tallest of men among his compatriots: "And when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people" (1 Sam. 10:23). The proper names used in the Holy Qur-án, while differing slightly from the Hebrew originals, have a significance of their own, and the change of names is thus a significant circumstance.

326 The murmurings of the people on Saul's selection as king, as recorded in the Holy Qur-án, have something corresponding to them in the Bible, showing that, though the Bible does not record the fact, it is still a fact: "And Saul answered and said, Am not I a Benjamite, of the smallest of the tribes of Israel? and my family the least of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin?" (1 Sam. 9:21). And again: "But the children of Belial said, How shall this man save us? And they despised him, and brought him no presents" (1 Sam. 10:27). This shows that the fact recorded in the Holy Qur-án is essentially true, though omitted by the Bible.

327 Compare 1 Sam. 10:24, "And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people."

328 The tábút mentioned here has given rise to a number of stories, because of its two-fold significance. It means a chest or a box, and it also signifies the bosom or the heart (LL). Taking the first significance, the reference is said to be to the ark, to which, however, it is objected that the ark was restored to the Israelites long before the time of Saul. But, as I have often shown, we cannot be so certain of the Bible narrative as to reject as untrue every thing differing from it. I prefer, however, the latter significance, and the use of the word in that sense is well known. LL quotes the proverb ما اودعت تابوتى شيئا ففقدته i.e. I have not deposited in my bosom any thing of knowledge that I have lost. Rgh also says that tábút denotes qalb or the heart, and he quotes 'Umar bin Mas'úd as speaking of tábút: "How it is filled up with knowledge," referring evidently to the heart. That the word is used in the Holy Qur-án in this sense is abundantly clear from the description of it that follows. Tranquility from the Lord is not a thing which is placed in boxes, but the heart is its real repository. On five other occasions the coming down of sakínah, or tranquility, is mentioned in the Holy Qur-án, and every time it is the heart of the Prophet or the faithful that is the recipient of it. For instance, in 48:4 it is plainly said: "He it is who sent down tranquility into the hearts of the believers that they may have more of faith." According to LA, sakínah means also mercy; and he quotes a saying of the Holy Prophet: "There came down upon them mercy (Ar. sakínah), the angels bearing it."

فَإِنَّهُ مِنِّي إِلَّا مَنِ اغْتَرَفَ غُرْفَةً

By the coming of "the heart in which there is tranquility" is meant the change which came over Saul when he was made king. That change which came over his heart is thus clearly spoken of in the Bible: "And it was so, that when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart" (1 Sam. 10:9). This exactly corresponds with the statement made in the Qur-án. And further it is said: "And the Spirit of God came upon him and he prophesied" (1 Sam. 10:10). This is no doubt the best of what the true followers of Moses and Aaron left.

329 The word baqiyyah means both a residue and excellence or the best of a thing (LL). You say فلان من بقية القوم meaning such a one is of the best of the people (LL). And اولوا بقية in the Holy Qur-án (11:116) means persons possessed of excellence. And بقية الله (11:86) signifies obedience, or the state of goodness that remains. Hence baqiyyah in either sense signifies the blessings of the earlier days, i.e. prophecy. And thus it became a proverb among the Israelites: "Is Saul also among the prophets?" (1 Sam. 10:12).

330 The ark of 1 Samuel 4:4 was drawn by bullocks and not by angels, and since, according to the Holy Qur-án, the bearers of the tábút were angels, it is additional reason that by tábút here is meant the heart. But see a saying of the Holy Prophet quoted in foot-note 328, from which it is clear that "it" in the verse may refer not to tábút but to sakínah and baqiyyah, and the meaning would thus be that tranquility and inspiration were borne by the angels into the heart of Saul.

So when he had crossed it, he and those who believed with him, they said: We have to-day no power against Goliath[332] and his forces. Those who were sure that they would meet their Lord said: How often has a small party vanquished a numerous host by Allah's permission, and Allah is with the patient.[333]

250 And when they went out against Goliath and his forces, they said: Our Lord pour down upon us patience, and make our steps firm and assist us against the unbelieving people.

331 "The story of Saul is here confounded with that of Gideon"—such is the judgment of the Christian critic, and for this the Qur-án is called a "ridiculous jumble." Yet, strange to say, when the same critic reads the New Testament, his critical faculties are, as it were, quite benumbed, for when he finds Matthew stating that Mary's husband Joseph was the son of Jacob, who was son of Matthan, who was son of Eleazar, and so on, and reads on the other hand Luke stating that Joseph was the son of Heli, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, and so on, he fails to see any ridiculous jumble, as if Joseph could be the son of two fathers.

Now I fail to see what confusion there exists in the case of the Quranic narrative. All that it states is that Saul tried his forces by a river, and the Bible does not say anything about it. On the other hand, the Bible speaks of a trial of a somewhat similar nature by Gideon (Judges 7 : 1–6), while the Qur-án does not speak of Gideon at all. We admit that the Qur-án does not undertake to give a full and detailed history of the Israelites, and no Christian does, I think, hold the belief that the Bible gives a full and detailed record of the whole history of the Israelite nation so that it could not have omitted a single incident. Nor is there anything strange if history repeated itself in any incident. Is it not a simple and natural explanation of the statements made in the Holy Qur-án and the Bible that Saul followed the example of Gideon? That these are two different incidents is made clear by the fact that while Gideon tried his forces by "the well of Harod" (Judges 7 : 1), Saul tried his forces by a river, as stated in the Qur-án. It further appears from the Bible that the river Jordan was there: "Some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead" (1 Sam. 13 : 7).

332 The Arabic word is jálút, of the same measure as Ṭálút, being from the root جال (في الحرب) meaning he assailed or assaulted (in the battle) (LL), and thus instead of Goliath the Holy Qur-án has adopted a name which expresses his chief characteristic, viz. that his assaults in the battlefield could not be met by Saul and his army. It may be added here that, according to the Bible, too, Saul led his armies against the Philistines, and Goliath was one of their champions. Saul, of course, had to fight many battles, and the Holy Qur-án only speaks of one of them.

333 Compare 1 Sam. 14 : 6: "For there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few." And on one occasion only six hundred men were left with him (1 Sam. 13 : 15).

251 So they put them to flight by Allah's permission. And David slew Goliath, and Allah gave him kingdom[334] and wisdom, and taught him of what He pleased. And were it not for Allah's repelling some men with others, the earth would certainly be in a state of disorder;[335] but Allah is Gracious to the creatures.

334 That David slew Goliath and afterwards was made a king is also stated in the Bible.

335 Thus the Muslims are told that they have to fight to restore order and establish peace in the country.

336 The principle is here recognized that some apostles excel the others, and it contains, apparently, a reference to the excellence of the Holy Prophet. The mention of David and Jesus in particular here is to show that, notwithstanding that these two prophets represented two different aspects of the advancement of the Israelite nation, David standing for their worldly eminence and Jesus for their spiritual eminence, they both sang praises of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, and both spoke of his advent as the advent of God Himself, thus indicating that, looked at from both standpoints, the excellence of the Holy Prophet over other prophets was so immeasurable as to have led two of the most eminent Israelite prophets to speak of him as the Lord.

Numerous verses of the Holy Qur-án bear testimony to the greatness of the Holy Prophet. He is repeatedly spoken of as being endowed with all those qualities of greatness in the highest degree which to others were given only partially and in a less degree. It is for this reason that the Holy Prophet is declared to be a mercy to all the generations of men (21 : 107), and his followers are called the best of the people (3 : 109), which shows that he is the greatest of the prophets.

337 Allah spoke to all the apostles, but as there were some who were exalted above others by many degrees, this form is adopted. An instance of this is furnished by v. 87: "And some of them (the prophets) you called liars, while others you slay," whereas those that were slain were also called liars.

338 The carrying on of the struggle for existence against the numerous enemies of Islam required in the first place the raising of funds and other acts of self-sacrifice; hence the repeated exhortations to spend. The subject is dealt with at length in the two sections that follow the next.

339 The twofold significance of intercession has been explained in foot-note 79. The principle is here recognized that there may be intercession with Divine permission. It is true that Islam does not recognize the doctrine that man stands in need of any mediator to reconcile him with God, and therefore mediation or intercession in the 256 There is no compulsion in religion;[342] truly the right way has become clearly distinct from error; therefore, whoever disbelieves in the devil[343] and believes in Allah, he indeed has laid hold on the firmest handle, which shall not break off, and Allah is Hearing, Knowing.

257 Allah is the guardian of those who believe: He brings them out of the darkness into the light;[344] and (as to) those who disbelieve, their guardians are the devils who take them out of the light into the darkness; they are the inmates of the fire, in it they shall abide.

sense in which the Christian doctrine is held is unknown to Islam. But there is another aspect of it. The Prophet, to whom the Divine will is revealed, is the Model for his people. He is perfect, and by pointing out a way enables others to attain to perfection. In this sense he is called a shafi' or an Intercessor. See foot-note 79, where this significance is referred to, and also foot-note 607. Those who take the Prophet for their model may thus attain to perfection, which is the real meaning of salvation in Islam. But as all men are not equally gifted, nor have all equal occasion to attain to a state of perfection, although they have exerted themselves to their utmost, Divine mercy will take them by the hand and amends will be made for such defects through the intercession of the Holy One who has served for a model to his followers. It is in this sense that Islam recognizes the doctrine of intercession in the life after death.

340 The true significance of kursi here is not throne or chair, but knowledge (Bkh, Rgh); see also foot-note on 7:54.

341 This is a very well-known verse which goes under the name of áyat-ul-kursí, or the verse of power or knowledge, because it deals with the all-comprehensive knowledge and power of Allah. It is an assurance to the Muslims that Allah, who knows the sacrifices they have made and the wrongs that their opponents are doing them, and has power to reward and punish, shall soon deal with each party as it deserves.

342 To all the nonsense which is being talked about the Prophet offering Islam and sword as alternatives to the pagan Arabs, this verse is a sufficient answer. Being assured of success, the Muslims are told that when they hold the power in their hand their guiding principle should be that there should be no compulsion in the matter of religion. The verse was no doubt revealed later than that which has already preceded with respect to fighting in the way of Allah with those who fight first. The presumption that this passage was directed to the early converts and that it was abrogated later on is utterly baseless. The words religion should be only for Allah in v. 193, and the words there is no compulsion in religion here, are really two different forms of expressing one and the same idea.

343 Ṭágh út is derived from ṭaghá, meaning he was inordinate or exorbitant, and is variously explained as meaning "the exorbitant in pride or corruptness or disbelief of the people of the Scriptures (Q), or any head or leader of error (S, Q), or he who turns from the good (Rgh), or the idols or whatever is worshipped to the exclusion of God (Zj, Q, TA), or the devil" (LL). As the word devil carries most of the significances given to the word ṭághút, I have throughout the translation adopted it as its equivalent. But it is not a proper name, as it accepts the definite article al. It is used as plural here, though it has also a separate plural form, ṭawāghīt.

344 Faith is here spoken of as light and unbelief as darkness. The contrast is brought out to the best advantage in 24 : 35–40.

345 The words "because Allah had given him the kingdom" are taken by the majority of commentators to refer to Abraham's opponent, but the view of the minority that the personal pronoun him in the above quotation refers to Abraham (Rz) appears to be more correct, being corroborated by 4 : 54: "We have given to Abraham's children the Book and the wisdom and We have given them a grand kingdom." By Abraham in the verse under discussion are also meant Abraham's children, because the promise was made to Abraham, and even in Genesis the promised land is spoken of as being given to Abraham: "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it" (Gen. 15 : 7). Moreover, the word ātā sometimes signifies not that he actually gave the thing away, but that he promised to give it. Compare v. 233, where in when you pay what you promised for, the concluding words convey the true significance of ātaitum according to all commentators.

This interpretation, moreover, makes the sense of the verse very clear. The Muslims are told that just as a promise is given to them that they will be raised to great eminence from the state of insignificance in which they were, which is equivalent to raising the dead to life, a similar promise was given to Abraham, that promise being in fact the basis of the present promise to the Holy Prophet, because the kingdom to be given to him was really in fulfilment of the promise of kingdom to Abraham. It further shows why the question of raising the dead to life came under discussion, for making a great nation out of one man was really giving life to the dead, and it was this which Abraham upheld, having perfect faith in the Divine promise (v. 260), and which his adversary denied.

346 Both statements relating to giving life and causing death are silent as to what it was to which the giving of life or bringing of death relates, but, by putting into the mouth of the disputant the same words as are attributed to the Divine Being, the Qur-án makes itself clear, for quickening into life in the ordinary sense of the word could not be claimed by a mortal. Moreover, as the discussion arose out of the promise given to Abraham that he should be the father of a great nation and possess the lands of a flourishing people, who must therefore be ruined, it is clear that it refers to the life and death of nations, to the population of desolate places and the desolation of populous places. It should be noted that the words ḥayāt and maut, literally life and death, are as well applicable to nations and places as to men, animals, and vegetation. Thus ماتت الارض signifies the land became destitute of vegetation and inhabitants (Msb–LL). What is stated here is further illustrated in the verse that follows by the Divine promise as to the rebuilding of Jerusalem, where the desolation of the sacred city is spoken of as its death and its rebuilding is called its life. In fact, the very circumstance that the verse (259) relating to the rebuilding of Jerusalem is an illustration of this verse, is sufficient to show that it is the population and desolation of towns and the life and death of nations that are meant by ḥayāt and maut in this verse.

259 Or the like of him who passed by a town, and it had fallen down upon its roofs; he said: When will Allah give it life after its death? So Allah caused him to remain in a state of death for a hundred years, then roused him. He said: How long have you tarried? He said: I have tarried a day, or a part of a day. Said He: Nay! you have tarried a hundred years; then look at your food and drink—years have not passed over it; and look at your ass; and that We may make you a sign to men, and look at the bones, how We set them together, then clothe them with flesh; so when it became clear to him, he said: I know that Allah has power over all things.[348]

347 The disputant belonged to a race of sun-worshippers, and therefore when he claimed that he could give life and cause death, Abraham advanced an argument which quite confounded his adversary. If he could give life and cause death he could control even his deity, the sun, for to give life and cause death were the work of the deity and not of the devotee, and hence he could make it rise from the opposite direction. The adversary was confounded, because he saw that he had made an assertion which was opposed to his own avowed belief. The commentators are also of opinion that, in referring to the course of the sun, the continuity of the argument is not broken by Abraham, but they give a different explanation, although it is admitted that Abraham's opponent was a worshipper of the sun (AH). The explanation accepted as the correct one by Rz and AH is that, in referring to the course of the sun, Abraham suggested that his adversary's assertion that he could give life and cause death could not hold, because, admitting for the sake of argument that life and death were brought about in this world through intermediaries, these intermediaries were subject to the control of the Divine Being, and not to that of any human being, citing the sun as an instance of these intermediaries.

348 Between the two incidents relating to Abraham in verses 258 and 260, the insertion of the verse (259) relating to an incident in later Israelitish history may seem to be out of place to a superficial observer. But a careful consideration of the three verses will

Ar. dost thou.	260 And when Abraham said, My Lord! show me how Thou givest life to the dead, He said: What! and do you not believe? He said: Yes, but that my heart may be at ease. show that not only the subject matter of this section fits in with the context, but the three verses of the section itself are beautifully arranged. Verse 258 refers to the promise given to Abraham that a great nation should arise out of him, which would inherit the fertile lands of the powerful nations then living, and to a controversy on that subject held with the ruler of the land, who is told that Allah had power to give life to a dead nation. Verse 260 relates how Abraham was satisfied that a dead nation may be raised to life, while verse 259, citing an example of what is said in verse 258, affords in fact a proof of the assertion made in that verse, the Muslims being referred to a more recent historical incident so that the reference might carry a greater conviction to their hearts.

That the incident mentioned in this verse relates to later Israelitish history is clear from the following considerations:—

Firstly, from the interpretations given to this verse it appears that by "the town which had fallen down upon its roofs" is meant Jerusalem (Rz, AH) as it was left after its desolation by Nebuchadnezzar in 599 B.C.

Secondly, the concluding words of this incident, "look at the bones, how We set them together, then clothe them with flesh," undoubtedly refer to Ezekiel's vision as related in Ezekiel, ch. 37. The concluding verses of the previous chapter of that book state exactly what is stated in verse 258: "I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that that was desolate; I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it" (Ezek. 36:36). The first part of ch. 37 relates how Ezekiel was taken (in a vision, as I will now show) "in the midst of the valley which was full of bones," and asked, "Son of man, can these bones live?" and, after a Divine assurance, Ezekiel is made to witness the scene which is also narrated in the Qur-án: "the bones came together, bone to his bone," and "the sinews and the flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them above," and then "the breath came into them, and they lived" (Ezek. 37:1–10).

The identity of this vision with that narrated in the Holy Qur-án is so clear that I need not dwell upon it any further. That what is narrated in Ezekiel, ch. 37, is a vision is clear from the introductory words of that chapter: "The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit of the Lord"—words always used to signify a state of vision. What follows the incident makes it still more clear, for verse 11 (Ezekiel, ch. 37) goes on to say: "Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost"; while verse 12 gives them the Divine promise, "Behold, O My people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you in to the land of Israel." This shows conclusively that the bones were only a symbol of the fallen condition of the whole house of Israel. I lay stress upon the word whole in Ezekiel 37:11, because the actual bones were only of the very few among them who were put to the sword, by far the greater number being in captivity or held in a slavish condition in subjugation to the Babylonians. The words of verses 11 and 12 are too clear to need any further comment.

It being thus established that the incident of the bones in Ezekiel, ch. 37, is a vision of the prophet Ezekiel, it is only too clear that the identical incident related in verse (259) now under discussion is also a vision. The Qur-án usually dispenses with words showing an incident to be a vision when either the context or the nature of the incident or a reference to earlier history makes it clear that it is a vision. Compare the words in which Joseph narrated his vision to his father in 12:4: "O

Ar. thee	of the birds, then train them to follow you, then place on every mountain a part of them, then call them, they will come to	مِّنَ الطَّيْرِ فَصُرْهُنَّ إِلَيْكَ ثُمَّ اجْعَلْ عَلَىٰ كُلِّ جَبَلٍ مِّنْهُنَّ جُزْءًا
Ar. thee.	you flying; and know that Allah is Mighty, Wise.[349]	ثُمَّ ادْعُهُنَّ يَأْتِينَكَ سَعْيًا ۚ وَ اعْلَمْ أَنَّ اللَّهَ عَزِيزٌ حَكِيمٌ ۝

my father! surely I saw eleven stars and the sun and the moon—I saw them making obeisance to me," not making any mention at all that he had seen this in a vision. In the verse under discussion, however, it is not only its identity with Ezekiel 37:1–10 that shows the incident to be a vision, but the insertion of a káf, signifying likeness, before the whole is a further indication of the same; for otherwise the káf would be redundant, as some commentators have supposed it to be (Rz). If the incident had been a real one, as in the previous verse, the verse should have commenced with the words or him instead of or the like of him, the insertion of the káf giving the incident the colour of a parable or a vision. Sayed Ahmad Khan considers او كالذى مر على قرية as being equivalent to او الذى كانه مر على قرية meaning "or him who, as it were, passed by a town."

Thirdly, the causing the prophet to remain in a state of death is thus also an incident of the vision which, though not narrated in the Bible, is corroborated by facts, standing symbolically for the death of the Jewish nation, a death of disgrace and sorrow, or the desolation of Jerusalem, which covered a period of almost a hundred years. Jerusalem was taken by Nebuchadnezzar in 599 B.C. (2 Kings 24:10); Cyrus gave permission to rebuild the temple in 537 B.C. (Ezra 1:2), the house being eventually finished in 515 B.C. (Ezra 6:15). The Bible does not give us the history of the period from 515 B.C., and even if we are not allowed to conjecture that another fifteen years may have been taken by the Israelites to settle back in Jerusalem and to rebuild the city itself for their own habitation, the period from 599 to 515 B.C. covers almost fully the whole of the sixth century B.C., and hence the hundred years of Ezekiel's death in the vision represent the hundred years of the death of the Israelite nation.

I may further add that the reference to the food and drink of the prophet, which did not show any influence of years, and to his ass, which was still standing by, only proves that the hundred years' death which the prophet underwent was only symbolic death. The mention of the bones has been taken by some commentators to refer to the ass, but this is an obvious error, for the two statements are separated by a sentence: "And that We may make you a sign to men"; and there is also a pause after the word ass, separating what follows from that which has preceded.

How was Ezekiel a sign to the people? Because the vision made him a symbol of the whole Jewish nation, and his symbolical death for a hundred years represented the sorrows and afflictions of Israel for a similar period, after which they were once more to be restored to life as the prophet was raised from death.

The only word to be explained in this verse is yatasannah, which is from تسنهت عنده meaning I abode with him a year, and one says, تسنهت النخلة i.e. the palm-tree underwent the lapse of years (S, Msb-LL). The word applied to food and drink carries a similar significance, meaning it became altered (for the worse) by the lapse of years (LA-LL). Rz explains the lapse of years to be the real meaning of the word, for his explanation is the years did not pass over it.

349 This verse is a natural sequel to v. 258, which speaks of the manifestation of Allah's power in the life and death of the nations. Verse 259, as already noted, has been interposed to afford to the companions of the Holy Prophet a proof of the assertion made in v. 258. In v. 260 it is made clear to Abraham, by means of a parable, how flourishing nations may be brought to naught and insignificant ones made to flourish, referring in particular to his own case. In Gen. 15:8 Abraham is made to say, after receiving a promise of the land of Canaan, "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" The Quranic parallel to this is: "My Lord, show me how Thou givest life to the dead." He believed in the Divine promise, and was so sure of it that he had even contended with and overcome an adversary on this point. But was it not strange that out of his seed should arise a nation that should supplant the powerful nations that ruled the land? The sign given to Abraham according to Gen. 15:9–11 is quite meaningless, not making it clear how Abraham's seed was to inherit the land. He is told to take "a heifer of three years old, a she goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old and a turtle-dove, and a young pigeon"; he "divided them in the midst." "And when the fowls came down upon the carcases, Abraham drove them away." How this was a sign of Abraham inheriting the land of Canaan is a mystery. It only shows that the text here has been tampered with.

The answer to Abraham's how as given in the Qur-án is a perfectly intelligible parable. If he should take four birds and tame them, they would obey his call and fly to him even from the distant mountains. If the birds, then, obey his call, he being neither their master nor the author of their existence, would not nations submit to the call of their Divine Master and the Author of their existence? Or if the birds, being only tamed for a short time by a man who had otherwise no control over them, become so obedient to their tamer, has not Allah the power to control all those causes which govern the life and death of nations? Whenever He wishes to destroy a people He brings together the causes of their decline and evil fortune overtakes them, and when He wishes to make a people prosperous He creates those causes that bring about the rise and progress of nations. That the word ṭáir (plural ṭair as used here), which signifies a bird, also signifies the cause of good and evil, or misery or happiness (TA-LL), in which sense the word is used in 7:131 and elsewhere in the Holy Qur-án, is a further indication of the significance of the parable of the birds, through which Abraham is made to realize how the Almighty controls the fortunes of the nations. It is an error to suppose that Abraham actually took four birds and tamed them. The Qur-án does not say it. It only makes Abraham realize the wonderful manifestation of Divine power by a parable.

The commentators have been at great pains to explain the words صرهن اليك so as to make them signify cut them into pieces, as it is on this interpretation that they base the puerile story of Abraham having taken four birds and cut them into pieces, which being afterwards quickened to life, satisfied Abraham that Almighty God had the power to raise the dead to life. The words do not suggest any such story. Ṣára-hú and aṣára-hú, of which ṣur is an imperative form, signify he made it to incline (S, Msb, Q-LL), and it is in this sense only that the word is followed by ilá. Thus one says of a man يصور عنقه الى الشئ, meaning he inclines his neck to the thing (Ls-LL). Agreeably with this, which is the only true significance of the word, the phrase signifies turn them toward you (Akh, S, M, LL), i.e. tame the birds. Even Rz accepts this to be the primary meaning, but even then, so fond are the commentators of the story of cutting the birds into pieces, he makes the words cut them into pieces to be understood. The other significance, dissect them or divide them into pieces, is accepted on the authority of I'Ab in the verse under discussion, but it seems to have been an error due to the fact that ṣára (aorist, yaṣúr-u) has two contrary significations, viz. he separated or dispersed, and he collected (LL, quoting Fretag, who makes the statement on the authority of Kitáb-ul-'Adad), the latter significance being clearly related to the primary meaning of the word as stated above.

Spending Money in the Cause of Truth

261. Money spent in the cause of Islam compared to seed sown in fertile land. 262, 263. What may destroy the effect. 264. Those who spend for show shall not prosper—a parable. 265, 266. Two other parables.

261 The parable of those who spend their property in the way of Allah[350] is as the parable of a grain growing seven ears (with) a hundred grains in every ear; and Allah multiplies for whom He pleases; and Allah is Ample-giving, Knowing.[351]

262 (As for) those who spend their property in the way of Allah, then do not follow up what they have spent with
Ar. nor. reproach or injury, they shall have their reward from their Lord, and they shall have no fear nor shall they grieve.[352]

خَوْفٌ عَلَيْهِمْ وَلَا هُمْ يَحْزَنُونَ ○

350 The words in the way of Allah, as already noted, stand throughout the Holy Qur-án for the cause of the Divine faith or the defence of Islam. As Rz says, the words apply exclusively to Jihád (i.e. a struggle in the cause of the faith) in the language of the Holy Qur-án. This is specially made clear by 9 : 60, which mentions the heads of expenditure of the legal alms, and in which fi sabîl illáh (which cannot there signify anything but defence or advancement of the faith) is a particular head, in addition to helping the poor, the indigent, and the wayfarer, the setting free of slaves, etc. Hence the primary object of this and the following section in exhorting the faithful to spend money, and the inculcation of charity, is the advancement of the cause of Islam, though other objects of charity are also included. Some commentators think that the injunctions are particularly given only with regard to Jihád, while others hold that all charitable objects, including Jihád, are meant (Rz).

351 The comparison of money spent in the cause of truth to a grain yielding seven-hundredfold fruit is to show: firstly, that the progress of Islam depended on the sacrifices which the individual members of the community made; and secondly, that the expenditure of money must be accompanied with hard labour, as a seed cast on untilled ground unaccompanied by any labour would not even grow. It is noteworthy that while the Qur-án represents the increase to be seven-hundredfold, or even double of it, Jesus, in a similar parable—the parable of the sower—promises thirty, sixty, or at the most a hundredfold increase (Matt. 13 : 23; Mark 4 : 8).

352 Mann is originally the conferring of a benefit or a favour upon one (LL), and is so used in the Holy Qur-án frequently; it also has a secondary meaning, i.e. giving expression to the good done to anybody (Rz), or, reminding one of the favour done to one by way of reproach, and this is the meaning here. Azá signifies harm or annoyance, by speaking evilly of one or inflicting slight injury. Gifts, whether given in the cause of national or individual suffering, must not be accompanied by any interested motives, hence the donor is forbidden even to mention them afterwards, so as not to create the impression that he had laid anybody under an obligation by that deed or to cause annoyance or harm.

Ar. there follows it.

263 Kind speech and forgiveness is better than charity followed by injury; and Allah is Self-sufficient, Forbearing.

264 O you who believe! do not make your charity worthless by reproach and injury, like him who spends his property to be seen of men and does not believe in Allah and the last day;[353] so his parable is as the parable of a smooth rock with earth upon it, then a heavy rain falls upon it, so it leaves it bare; they shall not be able to gain anything of what they have earned; and Allah does not guide the unbelieving people.[354]

265 And the parable of those who spend their property to seek the pleasure of Allah and for the certainty of their souls is as the parable of a garden on an elevated ground, upon which heavy rain falls so it brings forth its fruit twofold, but if heavy rain does not fall upon it, then light rain (is sufficient); and Allah sees what you do.[355]

Or, dew.

266 Does one of you like that he should have a garden of palms and vines with streams flowing beneath it: he has in it all kinds of fruits, and old age

الْاَنْهٰرُ ۙ لَهٗ فِيْهَا مِنْ كُلِّ الثَّمَرٰتِ ۙ

353 The expression conveys a very strong disapproval of giving alms to be seen by men. It does not simply forbid the doing of alms "before men to be seen of them," as does Jesus Christ in his well-known Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 6:1), but speaks of this as being the work of those who do "not believe in Allah and the last day," thus making it utterly hateful in the sight of true believers.

354 The concluding words of the parable show that the Holy Qur-án is speaking of the efforts of the unbelievers to deal a death-blow to Islam. They were spending their money to retard the advancement of the cause of Islam, but their efforts, they are told, would be fruitless. Compare 8:36: "Surely those who disbelieve spend their wealth to hinder (people) from the way of Allah: so they shall spend it, then it shall be to them an intense regret, then they shall be overcome." The parable conveys exactly the same significance, and being followed by the statement they shall not be able to gain anything of what they have earned, leaves no doubt as to its purport.

355 This is the parable of the believers who will reap the fruits of the sacrifices they make. They are spoken of as spending to seek the pleasure of Allah, because all their efforts were for the upholding of truth, and for the certainty of their souls, every act of self-sacrifice being due to their certainty of the ultimate triumph of the truth, which in its turn made them more certain of it.

267. Good things should be given in charity. 268, 269. Charity brings abundance, not poverty. 270, 271. Public and private acts of charity. 272. Public charity needed for self-defence. 273. Persons fit to receive private charity.

267 O you who believe! spend (benevolently) of the good things that you earn and of what We have brought forth for you out of the earth, and do not aim at what is bad that you may spend (in alms) of it, while you would not take it yourselves unless you have its price lowered, and know that Allah is Self-sufficient, Praiseworthy.

356 This parable shows the evil effect which reproaching and annoyance may bring to a gift which would otherwise have yielded fruit. The gifts of those who give simply to be seen and praised by others are like seed cast upon hard stones, which takes no root (v. 264), but there may be gifts which would have yielded fruit were it not that the whirlwind of reproach or annoyance had blasted them just when about to ripen.

357 Faḥshá here signifies niggardliness or tenaciousness, being equivalent to bukhl (Rz, LL).

271 If you give alms openly, it is well, and if you hide it and give it to the poor, it is better for you;[358] and this will do away with some of your evil deeds; and Allah is aware of what you do.

272 To make them walk in the right way is not incumbent on you, but Allah guides aright whom He pleases; and whatever good thing you spend, it is to your own good; and you do not spend but to seek Allah's pleasure; and whatever good thing you spend shall be paid back to you in full, and you shall not be wronged.[359]

Ar. thee.

273 (Alms are) for the poor who are confined in the way of Allah[360]—they cannot go about[361] in the land; the ignorant man thinks them to be rich on account of (their) abstaining (from begging); you can recognize them by their mark; they do not beg from men importunately;[362] and whatever good thing you spend, surely Allah knows it.

358 The manifesting of charity or giving alms openly is a thing quite different from giving them "to be seen of men," for which see verse 264. By the giving of alms openly is meant the giving of subscriptions for works of public utility or for national defence, or for the advancement of the national or public welfare. The teaching of the Gospels (Matt. 6 : 1–4) is really defective, because it lays all the stress upon private acts of charity and makes no mention at all of subscriptions for works of public utility and for organized efforts for dealing with the poor, without which national growth is impossible. The Quranic teaching is perfect, as it takes into consideration the varying circumstances of human society and enjoins public as well as private acts of charity, mentioning public charity first, as that is of greater importance.

359 The reference in this verse seems to point to the occasions of public acts of charity. The opening words of the verse call attention to the special difficulties of Muslim society, which was required to repel its enemies in the interests of its existence. It shows that the Muslims did not fight to bring the unbelievers into the fold of Islam, for that, the Prophet is told in plain words, was not his business, but it was for the good of their people, the defence of the Muslim community, that the Muslims were required to raise subscriptions in order to be prepared to meet their enemies. And hence what they spent was for Allah's pleasure, because it was in the cause of truth. In the concluding words they are assured that for these deeds of sacrifice they will be fully rewarded. Thus public charity must be directed to the national welfare or the amelioration of mankind in general. Reports mentioned under this verse by the commentators show that Muslim charity was exercised not only for the welfare of their own co-religionists but also for that of the polytheists, and that Islam did not allow the difference of religion to be a hindrance to the bestowal of charity upon a deserving person. 360, 361, 362, see next page.

الْبَيْعُ مِثْلُ الرِّبٰوا وَاَحَلَّ اللّٰهُ الْبَيْعَ

360 Verse 271 speaks of two kinds of charity, viz. public charity, the occasions for which are mentioned in the last verse, and private charity, which is for the poor. This verse shows who are the poor who deserve assistance by private acts of charity. Their first qualification is that they are confined in the way of Allah. Among these are included: (1) Those who had to fight in defence of Islam, but had no means of livelihood; (2) those who could not go forth to trade because of the insecurity of the roads and the constant raids of the enemy; (3) those who were wounded in the fighting (Rz).

361 In translating ضربا في الارض as "knocking about in the land," Palmer has has made a serious mistake. The unhappy similarity which he discovered between the colloquial English phrase "knock about," which means "to wander here and there in a rough, careless, and aimless way," and one of the significances of the Arabic word ḍarb, viz. beating, striking, or smiting, makes him draw the preposterous conclusion that the "language of the Qur-án is really rude and rugged." Now, to beat, is not the only significance of the word ḍarb; nor are beating and knocking about necessarily synonymous terms. On the other hand, the word ḍarb does convey a very large number of significances. Palmer would have been nearer the mark if he had said beating the land. But as a matter of fact the phrase here used by the Qur-án means he journeyed in the land, seeking sustenance and for the purpose of traffic (LL), and not wandering aimlessly, an idea quite foreign to the Arabic phrase.

362 Here we have another qualification of those who deserve to be assisted by private acts of charity; these are the men who abstain from begging. This would show that the Holy Qur-án does not countenance the practice of begging from door to door.

363 It is a prophetic assurance to the Muslims that if they made sacrifices for the national welfare, the fear of annihilation under which the Muslim community then lived would be dispelled, and they would not grieve for what they spent, as it would yield abundant fruit. This is, in fact, a prophecy of their final triumph over their enemies, for the party that is victorious in a struggle does not grieve for the sacrifices that it makes, while the vanquished party does.

364 Ribá (literally, an excess or addition) means an addition over and above the principal sum that is lent (Rgh, TA-LL), and includes usury as well as interest. The subject is introduced here very appropriately, for as charity is the broad basis of human trading and forbidden usury.[365] To whomsoever then the admonition has come from his Lord, then he desists, he shall have what has already passed,[366] and his affair is in the hands of Allah; and whoever returns (to it)—these are the inmates of the fire: they shall abide in it.

276 Allah does not bless usury, and He causes charitable deeds to prosper, and Allah does not love any ungrateful sinner.[367] sympathy, usury annihilates all sympathetic affection and leads to the extreme of miserliness. Thus from one point of view the subject of usury stands in contrast with that of charity, while from another point of view the connection between these two subjects is, as pointed out in the two preceding sections and the verse with which this section opens, that while the Muslims were promised great wealth and prosperity, they were warned against an inordinate desire for amassing wealth, to which usury would certainly have led them. Hence, those who devour usury are compared to those prostrated by the touch of the devil, which in this case stands for Mammon. The prohibition of usury in Islam is a very wide subject, and cannot be discussed within the limits of a foot-note. But it may be noted in passing that Islam adopts the golden mean in all cases. It does not go to the extreme of the socialistic idea which aims at the annihilation of all distinctions of property rights, but it establishes institutions which give the poor a certain proportion of the riches of the wealthier members of society. Such is the institution of Zakát, according to which one-fortieth portion of the amassed wealth of every member of society is taken yearly to be distributed among the poor. In perfect accordance with that institution, Islam refuses to allow the rich to grow richer by reducing the poor to still greater poverty, which is the real aim of usury. Usury, moreover, promotes habits of idleness; but its worst effect is on morals, as it causes man to be obsessed by selfishness, and this is, in fact, what is meant by the devil prostrating a devourer of usury. Facilities for borrowing money on interest, moreover, make men profligate, as similar facilities have made States and nations profligate in these days.

365 The Qur-án draws a distinction between trading and usury. In trade the capitalist takes the risk of loss along with the hope of profit, but in lending money on usury the whole of the loss is suffered by the man who uses his labour, while the capitalist may count upon his profit even in the case of loss in the actual concern. Hence trading stands on quite a different footing from usury.

366 Here is a prohibition to receive any interest on money lent, but if any one had actually received any interest before the prohibition he was not required to pay it back, because such a procedure would have hopelessly upset business.

367 Maḥaqa signifies, according to Rgh, he took away the blessing thereof or he diminished it. It also signifies the blotting out or annihilating of a thing. Usury is here condemned, while charitable deeds are commended as being the real source of the

280 And if (the debtor) is in straitness, then let there be postponement until (he is in) ease; and that you remit (it) as alms is better for you, if you knew.[371]

281 And guard yourselves against a day in which you shall be returned to Allah; then every soul shall be paid back in full what it has earned, and they shall not be dealt with unjustly.

Contracts and Evidence prosperity of a nation or of humanity in general. There may also be observed a prophetic reference to the general tendency in the growth of civilization to lessening rates of interest, so much so that usurious dealings, in the proper sense of the word, are almost becoming extinct, while the tendency for public charity or personal sacrifice in the interests of a community, or even humanity in general, is daily gaining ground.

368 The balance of interest which may be due at the time when the prohibition was made known must be given up.

369 Going directly against the commandments of Allah is herein described as a war with Allah and His Apostle; and from this we may draw the conclusion that interest received on deposits in banks may be given away for the propagation of Islam, for this is really a war against the enemies of Islam.

370 The meaning is that the debtor shall not be made to pay more than the sum lent.

371 This indicates the kind of sympathy Islam demands a man shall show to other men. The poor man is not to be prosecuted and thrown into prison, but payment must be postponed till the debtor is able to pay, or, better still, the whole may be remitted.

372 The subject of usury, which is connected with the lending and borrowing of money and trading in general, brings us to the subject of contracts. If Islam enjoins charitableness and prohibits usury, it requires at the same time that the greatest precautions must be taken for safeguarding property rights. A noteworthy thing about this is that the Arabs were quite an ignorant people, among whom writing was very rare, so much so that they took a pride in being called ummi, or unlearned people. Yet these very Arabs are now required to put down all their transactions, great or small, in writing, except in hand-to-hand dealings. Strange to say, this injunction was given at a time when Muslim society was itself in danger of being swept away. This shows that the Qur-án was not the word of the Prophet, but of the Almighty Being who knew that the Muslims must soon become a great nation, and that therefore they would need all those instructions of which a well-developed civilized society stands in need.

373 These words form the basis of the guardian and ward law, as they point out when a guardian may be appointed for one who is not able to manage his own property. The word which I have translated as weak really signifies one too young (i.e. a minor) or too old (Bd.) Thus a guardian may be appointed not only when the owner is a minor, but also when his understanding is not sound enough to be entrusted with the management of his property.

374 The home is the proper sphere of the woman; as, owing to her domestic responsibilities, she appears less in public, she should not be much dragged into courts of justice.

375 The personal pronoun humá may refer either to the testimony of the two witnesses or the two women.

The Holy Qur-án does not say that no case should be decided except on the testimony of two witnesses, but requires ordinarily the calling in of two witnesses at the time of the transaction, so that the deficiency of one may be rectified by the other. The same reason holds good for calling in two women in the place of a male witness, because ordinarily the sphere of the woman's transactions being the home, she takes very little part in the transaction of outside affairs, and is also more likely to lose her mental balance under the severe test of cross-examination than a man, hence, the deficiency in her evidence is required to be made up by the evidence of another woman.

376 They must not be made to suffer loss in their own business. In other words, their convenience must be kept in view, and they should be paid.

377 This does not mean that a security cannot be taken in any other case. On the other hand, the words that follow show that security may be taken when the lender does not trust the debtor.

It further shows that advantage can be derived by the lender from the movable or immovable property which has been given into his possession as a security for the debt. Thus land mortgaged for a debt may be cultivated, or house-property may be rented or used.

378 This verse has generally been misunderstood, insomuch that some commentators think it to have been abrogated by the opening words of v. 286, but this assertion is rejected by more learned commentators (Rz). يحاسبكم به الله does not signify "Allah will call you to account for it," but that "He will call you to account according to it," so that he who hides (i.e. keeps under control) his evil inclinations and he who manifests (i.e. gives vent to them) shall not be dealt with in the same manner, but according to their deserts. Almost the same statement is contained in 3 : 28, where it is said: "Say, whether you hide what is in your breasts or manifest it, Allah knows it." Evil thoughts are not unpunishable; but evil inclinations which a man keeps suppressed, and which therefore gradually disappear, cannot be included in the category of evil thoughts; it is these that are meant here.

It may be added that the Arabic phrase for he called him to account for it is حاسبه عليه (TA), whereas the form adopted here is حاسبه به

The significance conveyed by the verse is that since kingdom or sovereignty belongs to Allah, He will grant it to a people whom He considers fit for the trust, and thus there is a prophetic allusion to the conquests of Islam.

فَانْصُرْنَا عَلَى الْقَوْمِ الْكَافِرِينَ

379 The breadth of the Muslim faith, which has been dealt with in several portions of this chapter, is again mentioned in reference to the triumph of the Muslims, for even if the Muslims were triumphant their religion could not triumph over other religions unless established on very broad principles which should commend themselves to all reasonable persons. The triumph of the Muslim religion, it is hinted, would not be due to political supremacy, but to the excellence and breadth of its principles. Hence, even in these days of Muslim political decadence, Islam is making a rapid conquest among their very rulers. This is no doubt due to the breadth of its principles.

380 What a spirit of humility does the Holy Word breathe even in the hour of triumph! The aspiration of the soul to be led to the promised victory is still subjected to the holier yearnings.

The end of the chapter shows that the triumph of Islam is its real object, and this is plainly outlined in the opening and closing sections of the chapter.

CHAPTER III

THE FAMILY OF AMRAN

(Ál-i-'Imrán)

REVEALED AT MEDINA

(20 sections and 199 verses)

Abstract:

Title and subject-matter.

THE name of this chapter is taken from the mention of 'Imrán's family in verse 32. The 'Imrán to whom reference is made is the same as Amran, the father of Moses and Aaron, and as this chapter deals with the departure of prophethood from the Mosaic dispensation, the title is most suitable.

The chapter opens with a statement relating to the Divine origin of the Holy Qur-án as well as the Torah and the Gospel, thus affording an illustration of what is said in 2 : 4 of "that which was revealed before you." It then gives a rule of interpretation, neglect of which has led to numerous errors in religious beliefs. This rule of interpretation, which must be borne in mind in interpreting all Divine books, is that every allegorical statement must be interpreted in such a manner that it may not contradict any of the clear principles laid down by Divine revelation. As the Christian religion is based really on the wrong interpretation of certain allegorical statements, the rule is appropriately laid down as a preliminary to a discussion of the Christian religion.

The preliminary remarks of the first section are followed in the second by an assertion of the Unity of Allah, which is laid down as the clear basis of all religions, and its ultimate triumph is predicted. The third section refers to the departure of the spiritual kingdom from the house of Israel, and the last members of that chosen race are mentioned in the fourth. Among these is Jesus, various misconceptions regarding whom necessitate rather a lengthy discussion in the two sections that follow. The seventh section continues the controversy with the Jews and Christians, while the eighth deals with their machinations to discredit Islam. The ninth speaks of the testimony of previous books and prophets to the truth of Islam, while the tenth mentions the ever-living testimony afforded by the Ka'ba, the centre of Islam. This is followed by an exhortation in the following section to the Muslims to remain united if they would achieve triumph, and in view of the coming conflicts they are told in the next to have guarded relations with the Jews, who, while outwardly friendly, were inwardly hostile to the Muslims. The incidents of the battle of Uhud, the causes of the misfortune experienced in it, and how triumph can be obtained are the points discussed from the thirteenth section to the end, with only a reference in the last section but one to the Jewish carpings.

Connection.

The importance of the connection of this with the preceding chapter may be judged from the fact that taken together they are termed zahráwán (meaning the two bright and shining ones). The two, in fact, may be treated as a single chapter, as each supplements and explains the other. The 2nd chapter opens with a controversy with the Jews, while the latter portion deals with the necessity of, and general injunctions relating to, fighting in the cause of truth and justice and in self-defence. The 3rd chapter opens with a controversy with the Christians, while its latter portion deals with the incidents relating to the battle of Uhud. A more apparent connection in the conclusion of the one and the beginning of the other is, however, to be found in the fact that whereas the 2nd chapter ends with a statement as to the cosmopolitan nature of the religion of Islam, requiring belief in all the prophets, this one opens with a statement quoting the Torah and the Gospel as an instance of the truth of previous revelation.

As the previous chapter deals at length with the Jews and their contentions, referring only briefly to the Christians, this deals mainly with the Christians, referring only briefly to the Jews.

In the same light may be taken the fact that that chapter deals particularly with the necessity to fight against an enemy who was bent upon the extirpation of Islam, while this deals with the events of one of the battles which the enemy waged with a view to injure Islam and in which he was considered to have obtained a certain measure of success.

Date of revelation.

The whole of this chapter was revealed at Medina, and it is generally supposed to be the second or the third in order in the Medinian revelation (Itq). The latter portion, from sec. 13 almost to the end, distinctly relates the incidents of the battle of Uḥud, and therefore the third year of Hejira may be fixed as very probably the date of its revelation. But the first portion, especially that dealing with the birth and ministry of Jesus, is said to have been revealed on the occasion of the visit of a deputation of the Najran Christians which took place in the tenth year of the Hejira. The commentators generally consider the first sixty-two or the first eighty-three verses to have been revealed on that occasion, but probably only verse 60, which speaks of the Mubáhilah, an incident specially relating to the Najran deputation, was revealed so late, and the arguments dealing with the Christian religion in general were revealed at an earlier date, very probably in the third year of the Hejira. A consideration of the subject-matter of the chapter leads to the same conclusion. It may further be added here that to ascribe verses 26 and 27 to the Meccan revelation, as some Christian critics have done, shows an entire lack of knowledge of Islamic history.

بِاٰيٰتِ اللّٰهِ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ شَدِيْدٌ
وَاللّٰهُ عَزِيْزٌ ذُو انْتِقَامٍ ۝

381 In consonance with its character as controverting Christian doctrines, this controversy being carried on to the 83rd verse, the chapter fitly opens with two attributes of the Divine Being, the Ever-living and the Self-subsisting by whom all things subsist, which deal a death-blow to the doctrine of the divinity of Jesus Christ, because birth and death did not entitle him to claim these attributes. The statement (there is) no god but He contains an ideal expression of the religion of Islam in four words. Thus, while the doctrine of the Unity of the Divine Being is dealt with at great length in the previous chapter, that doctrine finds a clear expression here. The whole of the religion of Islam is really contained in these four words, lá iláha ill Alláh.

382 For the sake of simplicity I render bil-ḥaqq as meaning with truth, but ḥaqq primarily signifies suitableness to the requirements of wisdom, justice, right, truth, or fact; or to the exigencies of the case (Rgh, TA-LL). Hence the true sense of the phrase is that the Qur-án was revealed suitably to the requirements of wisdom and justice, and to the exigencies of the case; in other words, it was revealed at a time when revelation was sorely needed by humanity. This argument of its truth is one which even the most hostile critic is unable to refute. To say nothing of earlier religions, Christianity, which was then the latest phase of monotheism, was corrupt to the core. "The Christianity of the seventh century," says Muir, "was itself decrepit and corrupt. It was disabled by contending schisms, and had substituted the puerilities of superstition for the pure expansive faith of early ages" ("Life of Muhammad," intr., p. lxxxiii).

The commentators explain bil-ḥaqq as signifying the pointing out of the right way in the differences which existed before it, or as giving a correct account of the past histories of the prophets, or as being true with respect to the promises and threats relating to the future, and thus making believers stick to the right path (Rz). Some commentators explain it as meaning with arguments and proofs (AH).

383 In the whole of the previous chapter the Taurát and the Injíl, i.e. the Torah and the Gospel, are not mentioned by name, though frequently referred to, specially the former, as that which is with you. Taurát is the name given to the books of Moses, or the Pentateuch, and hence its correct rendering is the Hebrew word Torah. The Taurát does not signify the Old Testament, because the latter is the name of the whole collection of the books of the Israelite prophets, and includes the Taurát, the Zabúr, and other books. Torah in the Hebrew literature signifies the revealed will of God. Some commentators trace the word Taurát to the root wary, as in ورى الزند meaning lighting, and thus consider its literal meaning to be light. The word kitáb conveys, however, a more general significance, and signifies sometimes the Old Testament and sometimes the Bible.

The word Injíl does not signify, as supposed by Muir and others, the New Testament. According to the Holy Qur-án no prophet to whom any book should have been revealed appeared among the Israelites (or among the followers of Christ) after the death of Jesus Christ, who, being the last of the Israelite prophets, was granted a revelation called the Injíl, which stands for the Evangel or the Gospel, and signifies literally good tidings. The reason why Jesus' revelation was called Gospel, or good tidings, is that it gave the glad news of the advent of the last of the prophets, which is variously described in Jesus' metaphorical language as the advent of the kingdom of God (Mark 1 : 15), the coming of the Lord (Matt. 21 : 40), the appearance of the Comforter (John 14 : 16), or the spirit of Truth (John 14 : 17), etc. Not only are the Acts, the Epistles, and the Book of Revelation not recognized by the Qur-án as parts of Injíl, or the Gospel, but it does not even recognize the Gospels according to Matthew, etc., as the Injíl which was revealed to Jesus Christ, though the current Gospels might contain fragments of the original teaching. This view of the Gospel as taken by the Qur-án is now admitted to be the correct one, as all criticism points to some original of the synoptics which is now entirely lost. The Qur-án nowhere suggests that the original Injíl, the revelation of Jesus Christ, existed at the time of the Holy Prophet.

384 The Torah and the Gospel, even as they now exist, contain numerous prophecies fulfilled in the advent of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, and therefore they are spoken of as being a guidance for men. But the whole sentence "And He revealed the Torah and the Gospel aforetime" may be parenthetical, and thus the words a guidance for the people may only qualify the Book revealed to the Holy Prophet.

385 For an explanation of the word furqán see foot-note 84. The Furqán is really a proof of the truth of the revelation, and the Jews and the Christians are warned that they should not be hasty in rejecting the truth. As the Furqán or Distinction in the case of the Holy Prophet was afforded by the battle of Badr, this event is referred to in verse 12 in a prelude to the actual controversy. Some commentators think that Furqán is another name for the Holy Qur-án, for the Holy Qur-án is spoken of as having been revealed to distinguish truth from falsehood (Rz).

386 Intiqám is derived from niqmat, which, according to all authorities, means the retribution of one who is guilty (Rgh, TA). It conveys the idea of avenging but not of revenging, انتقمت منه signifying I inflicted penal retribution on him for that which he had done, or I punished him (LL). Rz interprets it similarly. Hence, ذو انتقام as an attribute of the Divine Being, signifies the inflicter of retribution.

6 He it is who has revealed the Book to you: some of its verses are decisive, they are the basis of the Book, and others are allegorical;[387] then as for those in whose hearts there is perversity, they follow the part of it which is allegorical, seeking to mislead, and seeking to give it (their own) interpretation;[388] but none knows its interpretation except Allah, and those who are firmly rooted in knowledge say: We believe in it, it is all from our Lord;[389] and none do mind except those having understanding.

387 The verses of the Holy Book are here stated to be partly muḥkam (decisive) and partly mutashábih (allegorical), whereas in 11 : 1 the Holy Qur-án is spoken of as a Book whose verses are made decisive, and in 39 : 23 it is called kitában mutashábihan. A little consideration will show that not only is there no discrepancy in the three statements, but they actually explain each other. Literally, muḥkam (from ḥakama, meaning he prevented, whence aḥkama, i.e. he made a thing firm or stable), is that of which the meaning is secured from change and alteration, and mutashábih (from shib-h, meaning likeness or resemblance) is that which is consimilar or conformable in its various parts, and mutashábihát are therefore things like or resembling one another, hence susceptible of different interpretations (LL). Therefore when it is stated that the whole of the Book is muḥkam, the meaning is that all its verses are decisive, and when the Qur-án is called mutashábih (39 : 23), the meaning is that the whole of it is conformable in its various parts; while in the verse under discussion is laid down the important principle how verses susceptible of different interpretations may be interpreted so that a decisive significance may be attached to them. The Qur-án, we are here told, establishes certain principles in clear words which are to be taken as the basis, while there are statements made in allegorical words or susceptible of different meanings, the interpretation of which must be in consonance with the other parts and the spirit of the Book. In fact, this is true of every writing. When a certain law is laid down in a book in unmistakable words, any statement carrying a doubtful significance or one which is apparently opposed to the law so laid down must be interpreted subject to the principle enunciated. The subject is very appropriately dealt with here as a prelude to a controversy with the Christians, who attribute divinity to Jesus and uphold the doctrine of atonement by blood on the basis of certain ambiguous words or allegorical statements, without heeding the fundamental principles established by the earlier prophets. This attitude, which seeks to give to ambiguous and allegorical words a significance opposed to the general principles of the book it is meant to interpret, is the chief reason of most of the erroneous beliefs prevailing in the world. The same error lies at the root of some miraculous feats attributed to Jesus Christ by the Muslims themselves.

388 The fitnah is the misleading of the people (TA-LL), or the sowing of dissension, or difference of opinion (Q-LL), by giving to one part an interpretation which is falsified by another. Ta'wíl (from aul, meaning to return) is the final sequel or the end of a thing, or the interpretation of what is ambiguous or allegorical, such as the interpretation of dreams, etc. Kf explains ta'wíl-hú here as meaning the interpretation which they desire, and this, according to AH, is the significance; hence the addition of their own within brackets; they do not care to seek the real interpretation, which can only be found by referring to the principles laid down elsewhere. But the words may also signify their giving an interpretation to an ambiguous verse alone, i.e. without considering it in conjunction with other consimilar verses or the principles laid down elsewhere.

389 These words afford a clue to the right mode of interpretation. The words it is all from our Lord signify that there is no disagreement between the various portions of the Holy Book, because the word of the all-knowing Lord cannot be self-contradictory. Hence, the rule of interpretation which they follow is that they refer passages which are susceptible of various interpretations to those whose meaning is obvious or to consimilar passages, and subject particular statements to general principles, and thus reading various passages in the light of each other, discover the true significance of ambiguous passages.

390 There seems to be a reference here to the gathering of the hostile forces in the battles and to Allah's promise to grant victory to the faithful. The verses that follow leave no doubt; see particularly verse 11.

391 Verses 9–11 contain a clear prophecy of the vanquishment of the opponents of the Holy Prophet. This prophecy is no doubt mentioned here to serve as a proof of the truth of the Holy Prophet. Though the Quraish had suffered a crushing defeat in the battle of Badr, they could yet muster heavy forces against the Muslims, who were yet small in numbers, and they had sworn to take their revenge upon them. It should be borne in mind that the Muslims were still too weak for an attack on their opponents, and a clear prediction of the vanquishment of their opponents was therefore quite opposed to any inference that could be drawn from the comparative strength of the two parties.

11 Say to those who disbelieve: You shall be vanquished, and driven together to hell; and evil is the resting-place.[394]

392 Da'b signifies striving hard or labouring (from da'aba, meaning he strove or exerted himself) (T, S, LL). Zj and Asamm consider this to be the significance here (Rz) instead of manner or wont, which interpretation is adopted by other commentators. The former interpretation not only agrees with the original significance of the word, but also suits the context. The unbelievers are told that their striving against the Holy Prophet with their wealth and their men will end in their own destruction, as the striving of the people of Pharaoh against Moses brought about their destruction.

393 The word ẕanb is derived from ẕanaba, meaning he followed his tail. Rgh says: Ẕanb is originally the taking the tail of a thing, and it is applied to every act of which the consequence is disagreeable or unwholesome. According to LL, ẕanb means a sin, a crime, a fault, a transgression, or an act of disobedience. It is said to differ from iṯm in being either intentional or committed through inadvertence, whereas iṯm is particularly intentional (Kull-LL). It will thus be seen that ẕanb is a word which carries a wide significance, and is applicable to all shortcomings resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity, and even to defects or imperfections of which the result may be disagreeable. The use of this word in the Holy Qur-án, where it is applied to all shades of shortcomings, from the grossest transgressions of the wicked to those defects and imperfections of which even the most perfect mortal cannot be free, is quite in accordance with the lexicons. I have therefore adopted the word fault as its equivalent, for it somewhat approaches the word ẕanb in the breadth of its significance.

394 This is one of the passages in which the punishment of this life, which is vanquishment, is spoken of in the same breath with the punishment of the hereafter, which is hell. It is noteworthy that the vanquishment of the opponents of the Holy Prophet, though hinted at frequently in the foregoing chapter, was not mentioned in such clear and definite words as in this verse.

395 The reference here is to the battle of Badr. The meaning is that the Muslims saw the unbelievers to be twice as many as themselves. The statement does not contradict that made in 8 : 44 : "And when He showed them to you, when you met, s few in your eyes, and He made you to appear little in their eyes." The actual strength of the two parties was: unbelievers about 1,000, Muslims 313. The statement made in this verse is that the Muslims saw the unbelievers to be twice as many as themselves, i.e. about 600. Therefore they were still fewer in the eyes of the Muslims as compared with their actual strength, and this is what is alleged in 8 : 44. As to why they were shown to the Muslims to be twice as many as themselves, 8 : 66 helps us to understand: "If there are a hundred patient ones of you, they shall overcome two hundred, and if there are a thousand, they shall overcome two thousand." And as the Divine purpose was to bring about an encounter, the actual strength of the hostile force was not made known to the Muslims, lest the great disparity in numbers should make them lose heart. The part of the enemy not seen by the Muslims was behind a hillock. The battle of Badr was a sign of the truth of the Prophet, not only because of the prophecies of victory contained in the Qur-án, which were fulfilled notwithstanding the great strength, efficiency, and equipment of the enemy as compared with the weakness, inexperience, and utter want of armour and equipment of the Muslims, but also because of the clear prophecy in Isaiah, where, after speaking of a future scene in the land of Arabia (Isa. 21 : 13), the prophet goes on to say: "The inhabitants of the land of Tema brought water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled. For they fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail. And the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished" (Isa. 21 : 14–17). Kedar was the son of Ishmael (Gen. 25 : 13), and the word is used freely in the Bible for the Arab tribe that sprang from him (Ps. 120 : 5; Song 1 : 5; Isa. 42 : 11, 60 : 7, etc.). There is only one person in history whose flight has become a memorable fact as the Era of Flight (the Hejira). It was Muhammad (on whom be peace), who, attended by but one faithful companion, fled from the drawn swords of the guard that surrounded his house, and it was after one year from his Flight that the glory of Kedar departed in the battle of Badr, which took place in the second year of Hejira. The Jews and the Christians are therefore particularly enjoined to witness this sight, which could help them in understanding the Prophet rightly because of the fulfilment of prophecies in the Qur-án and the Bible. The second year after the Flight, from which counts the Muslim era, had not yet come to a close when the power of Kedar was broken at Badr. The battle of Badr was also a sign to the Jews and the Christians, because it indicated that their fate would be the same as that of the idolaters if they joined them, for "whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder" (Matt. 21 : 44).

396 The word desire here stands for the object of longing, as the original shahawát stands for the things desired (Rz). These desired things are then enumerated.

397 This verse and the one that follows contrast the yearnings of the ungodly with those of the faithful. We are here told that though the enjoyments of this life have their attractions, yet the desire to be with Allah is the goal which the true believer sets before himself.

15 Those who say: Our Lord! surely we believe, therefore forgive us our faults and keep us from the chastisement of the fire;

16 The patient, and the truthful, and the obedient, and those who spend (benevolently) and those who ask forgiveness in the morning times.

17 Allah bears witness that there is no god but He, and (so do) the angels and those possessed of knowledge,[398] being maintainer of justice;[399] there is no god but He, the Mighty, the Wise.

18 Surely the (true) religion with Allah is Islam,[400] and those to whom the Book had been given did not show opposition but after knowledge had come to them, out of envy among themselves; and whoever disbelieves in the communications of Allah—then surely Allah is quick in reckoning.

398 Nature, which is the handiwork of Allah, bears witness to His Unity, and the angels bear witness by the prophecies of which they are the bearers to the prophets, or by their working within man, whose nature bears testimony to Divine Unity; and those who have a true knowledge of the holy scriptures of any religion bear undoubted testimony to the great truth of the Unity of Allah. The Unity of Allah is, in fact, the common principle which is recognized by all religions. Thus the whole creation, the nature of man, and the broad and common principles of all religions are all at one in declaring the Divine Unity, whereas the Trinity of the Christian faith is but a solitary doctrine which does not find any support either in physical nature, the nature of man, or in the religion of humanity.

399 The words being maintainer of justice may qualify Allah as being the true maintainer of justice. But the other meaning of the Arabic phrase is maintaining justice, and considering what is said in the next verse as to the injustice of those to whom knowledge had been given, it is more likely that the words qualify only those possessed of knowledge, the meaning being that the possessors of knowledge, to whatever religion they may belong, bear witness to the grand truth of Divine Unity if they maintain justice in bearing witness. The truth of these words shines the more clearly when we find the advanced Christian thinkers of to-day bearing witness to the truth of Divine Unity.

400 Al-Islám (lit., submission), as the name of the religion preached by the Prophet, does not occur in the last chapter, although derivatives of it are frequently used, as in 2:112, etc.; an explanation of the word has, however, been already given in footnote 156. It should also be borne in mind that according to the Holy Qur-án, Islám was the religion of all the prophets: it is particularly mentioned as the religion of Abraham several times, and on one occasion the Israelite prophets who followed Moses are spoken of as the prophets who were Muslims (lit., submitted). Not only is Islam the religion of every prophet, but, according to the Holy Qur-án, it is also the natural religion of man, as in 20–24. The opponents of Islam shall find themselves helpless. 25, 26. A dead nation shall be raised to life and granted honour and kingdom. 27. Muslims not to look for help from their enemies. 28, 29. Good and evil must be followed by their respective consequences.

30 : 30 it is described as being "the nature made by Allah in which He has made men." This is corroborated by a saying of the Holy Prophet: "Every child is born in Islam: it is his parents that make him a Jew or a Christian."

The word Islám does not only signify submission, it also signifies entering into peace, from aslama, meaning he entered into peace (Rz). In fact, the idea of peace is the dominant idea in Islam, and the goal to which Islam leads is called the abode of peace (10 : 25).

401 By unlearned people are meant the Arabs (see foot-note 117). The Arabs, as well as the Jews and the Christians, are specially addressed here, and invited to accept the religion of Islam, because it is shown to be based on the broad principles of Abraham's religion, and Abraham was accepted as a prophet as well by the Jews and the Christians as the Arabs. Hence the words aslamtum and aslamú are used here, being the very words used to signify the religion of Abraham. See 2 : 128, 131. Since all parties were agreed as to the righteousness of Abraham, the broad principles of his religion alone could serve as the basis of an understanding among the four parties, the Jews, the Christians, the idolatrous Arabs, and the followers of the Holy Prophet. Sec. 7 deals with this subject at length.

402 Bashshara-hú signifies originally he announced to him an event which produced a change in the complexion (Rz); consequently it is more often used to signify the announcement of good news, but, as here, it is used in its original sense several times in the Holy Qur-án, in 9 : 34 and 84 : 24. The Jews are specially mentioned as a people who were guilty of slaying prophets (2 : 61), but this reference seems to point to their plans for killing the Holy Prophet, which were, however, all frustrated.

403 The meaning is that all their attempts against the Prophet shall be fruitless, and they themselves shall be reduced to a condition of helplessness. And thus it was.

404 The Jews are spoken of as being given only a portion of the Book, because much of it was lost long before this period; they then had but a portion with them.

405 Some commentators think that this decision was given in a case of adultery; but there is nothing in the Qur-án warranting such a limitation. It is, of course, remarkable, as Sale has noticed, that while the law of Moses as now preserved in Lev. 20 : 10 mentions simply putting to death as the punishment for adultery, John 8 : 5 gives us to understand that stoning to death was the real punishment, and the Holy Prophet is also said to have stated stoning to be the punishment prescribed for adultery by the Jewish law, though the rabbis refused to accept the judgment of their own law. It seems to be a clear instance of the corruption of the Book.

What is meant here has no reference to a particular criminal case, but to the broad principles of religion regarding which the Jews, or the Jews and the Christians, differed. The Book of Allah is the Holy Qur-án, which had given the true judgment, and the truth of which was even then manifest from the scattered prophecies met with in the pages of the Bible.

26 Thou makest the night to pass into the day and Thou makest the day to pass into the night, and Thou bringest forth the living from the dead and Thou bringest forth the dead from the living, and Thou givest sustenance to whom Thou pleasest without measure.[406]

27 Let not the believers take the unbelievers for friends rather than believers;[407] and whoever does this, he shall have nothing of (the guardianship of) Allah, but you should guard yourselves against them, guarding carefully;[408] and Allah makes you cautious of (retribution from) Himself[408A]; and to Allah is the eventual coming.

406 This and the previous verse apparently refer to the fact that kingdom and honour shall be given now to another nation, whose night shall be made to pass into a day of triumph. It is on account of having failed to grasp their real significance that Rodwell thinks that these verses are misplaced here, "interrupting as they do the connection of the preceding and subsequent verses." The connection is clear. The Jews had already been warned by Jesus that "the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43). A living nation of Muslims was brought forth from among the dead Arabs, and the living nation of Israelites was represented now by a people who were spiritually dead. Compare 4:54, where the Holy Qur-án says: "But surely We have given to Abraham's children the Book and the wisdom, and We have given them a grand kingdom." A reference to that very kingdom is contained in verse 25. The word mulk (kingdom) in Arabic is not limited to temporal rule (Rz).

407 The Muslims, being in a state of war with the unbelievers, were forbidden to look to their enemies to guard their interests or for help of any kind. The clear statement made in 60:8, 9 settles the point beyond all doubt: "Allah does not forbid you respecting those who have not made war against you on account of your religion and have not driven you forth from your homes, that you show them kindness and deal with them justly. Allah only forbids you respecting those who made war upon you on account of your religion and drove you forth from your homes and backed up (others) in your expulsion, that you make friends with them." Auliyá, which I translate as friends here, is the plural of walí, which is derived from a root meaning he held command or had charge of or superintended a thing, and it accordingly means the manager of a thing or of the affairs of another, and the guardian or maintainer of an orphan, and the guardian of a woman who gives her away in marriage. It also means the executor or heir of a deceased person (LL). According to Rgh, it indicates nearness in respect of place, relation, and religion, and in respect of friendship and help and belief, etc. The word therefore includes all relations of nearness. A man may also be said to be walí-Ullah, as meaning one near to Allah or a friend of Allah. The significance of the word therefore seems to be the close and intimate relationship in which one's interests are entrusted to another.

408 This is a new sentence. For this meaning of illá, when it is used as marking the beginning of a statement cut off from the first, see foot-note 59. It is as if it were said: Do not look to them for guarding your interests, rather guard yourselves against them.

408A TA explains nafs here as meaning 'uqúbah, i.e. retribution. In fact, retribution of evil is a requirement of Divine nature. Or the meaning is that Allah warns you against disobedience to Himself.

Ar. breasts.

409 The love of Allah is the great goal of life to which Islam leads. Compare John 4:15, 16: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever"; and John 15:10: "If you keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love." This Comforter appeared in the person of the Holy Prophet, whom the Jews and the Christians should therefore have followed. Elsewhere (5:18) the Jews and the Christians are mentioned as calling themselves "the children of Allah and His beloved ones"; and so they are here told that they could only become the beloved ones of Allah by following the Holy Prophet.

410 The 'Imrán of the Holy Qur-án is the same as the Amran of the Bible. The descendants of Amran are Moses and Aaron. Moses became the founder of the Israelite law and Aaron the head of the Israelite priesthood. The last of this race were John and Jesus, and their parents are first spoken of here, viz. Zacharias and Mary.

411 Noah was a descendant of Adam, Abraham a descendant of Noah, and Amran and his descendants were the offspring of the descendants of Abraham, not a separate race. The reason for mentioning them separately is twofold: (1) the immediate descendants of Amran became the founders of a great law in Israel, and the Israelite nation had, in fact, received a new birth with them, and (2) it was with the descendants of Amran, viz. John and Jesus, that the Mosaic dispensation came to an end.

412 Imra'at means a woman and also a wife. I take امرأة عمران as meaning a woman of the family of Amran. It should be borne in mind that the name of a great ancestor is frequently used to indicate the nation which has sprung from him. Thus Kedar stands for the Ishmaelites and Israel for the Israelites. The interpretation of the words as a woman of the tribe of Amran is in perfect accord with what is said in the previous verse as to the election of the descendants of Amran. The general statement is followed by a particular instance relating to one of the descendants of Amran: the second instance of choice related here also relates to one of the descendants of Amran, viz. John the Baptist, who was also of "priestly descent through both parents" (Bib. Dic., Cambridge University Press). Though we know very little regarding the parentage of Mary, yet the fact that she was, according to the only tradition that we have about her, devoted to the Temple from three to twelve years of age, shows clearly that she belonged to the priestly class. It is for this reason that she is elsewhere called the sister of Aaron and not a sister of Moses, for priesthood was an exclusive prerogative of the descendants of Aaron. In the Semitic languages the words ab (father), umm (mother), akh (brother), and ukht (sister) are used broadly, and do not necessarily imply the very close relations of real mother, father, brother, and sister. Thus we have a saying of the Holy Prophet in which he speaks of himself as the prayer of my father Abraham. Jesus was also addressed as "son of David." There is further a very strong indication in the use of اخت هارون or the sister of Aaron, in 19:28, that the reference in both places is to the old ancestors. See further foot-note 1543. The only other possible conclusion for the use of ancestral names is that the Holy Qur-án is guilty of anachronism, that it considers Mary the sister of Moses to be the same woman as Mary the mother of Jesus, and therefore calls her the sister of Aaron, and calls her father Amran, a conclusion so absurd on the face of it that no one not blinded by prejudice could bring this charge against the Qur-án. A number of passages may be cited showing that the Holy Qur-án speaks of Moses and Jesus as two prophets who were separated from each other by many generations.

36 So her Lord accepted her with a good acceptance and made her grow up a good growing, and gave her into the charge of Zacharias; whenever Zacharias entered the sanctuary to (see) her, he found with her food. He said: O Mary! whence comes this to you? She said: It is from Allah; surely Allah gives to whom He pleases without measure.[415]

413 The words and Allah knew best what she brought forth are parenthetical. She had vowed the child to be devoted to the service of the Temple, but a female could not do the priestly work.

414 Rajīm is derived from the root rajm, meaning the throwing or casting of stones, and also reviling, cursing, driving away, expelling, cutting off from friendly intercourse. It therefore signifies accursed or driven away from the Divine presence. This is what is implied here, and this is apparent from 38:78, where Satan is thus accosted: "And surely My curse is on you till the day of judgment." The other significance of rajīm, i.e. one pelted with stones, is not applicable here.

It is noteworthy that Mary's mother while praying for Mary prays also for her offspring, which shows that when she dedicated her daughter to the Temple she had never an idea that she would remain a virgin all her life. On the other hand, she entertained the hope that Mary would become a wife and a mother.

415 Mary's reply to Zacharias' question, as to whence she got the things which she had, has been made the basis of a legend which does not find the least support from the words of the Holy Qur-án or any authentic saying of the Holy Prophet. The reply that she got sustenance from Allah is the reply of every devout person who believes that Allah is the sustainer of all, and that therefore all provision or sustenance comes from Him. The Holy Qur-án itself says: "And there is not a thing but with Us are the treasures of it, and We do not send it down but in a known measure" (15:21), where not only is it affirmed that the treasures of all things are with Allah, the same word 'inda being used here, but it is further asserted that those things are sent down by Allah. Hence there is nothing extraordinary in the statement. She being attached to the Temple, the worshippers would naturally bring gifts to her, and as it was through Divine grace that she received these gifts, she said that it was Allah who gave her these things. At least one commentator holds the same opinion (Rz).

39 He said: My Lord! when[419] shall there be a son (born) to me, and old age has already come upon me, and my wife is barren? He said: Even thus does Allah what He pleases.

قَالَ رَبِّ أَنّٰى يَكُوْنُ لِيْ غُلٰمٌ وَّقَدْ
بَلَغَنِيَ الْكِبَرُ وَامْرَاَتِيْ عَاقِرٌ ۭ قَالَ
كَذٰلِكَ اللّٰهُ يَفْعَلُ مَا يَشَاۗءُ ۝

416 The devoutness of Mary, notwithstanding the tenderness of her age, raised in Zacharias a yearning for such virtuous offspring.

417 The Arabic word is Yaḥyá (being from the root ḥayát, meaning life), meaning he shall live. The Qur-án elsewhere states that Zacharias prayed to God, saying, I fear my cousins after me, the fear being no doubt due to their leading unrighteous lives. Hence the significance underlying the name Yaḥyá was that he would not die in sin like his other relations. Rgh gives the same explanation: He gave him this name (Yaḥyá), because sin was not to bring about his death.

418 The promise given to Zacharias was a word from Allah, and John was the verifier of that word, because his birth brought about the fulfilment of the prophecy. A word from Allah, therefore, stands for a Divine prophecy. Somewhat similar to this explanation is the one given by Abú 'Ubaida, who interprets كلمة من الله as meaning a book from Allah, because "one says انشد فلان كلمة (literally, such a one recited a word), when you mean a lengthy poem" (Rz). The Qur-án itself never uses the word kalimah in the very restricted sense in which the grammarians take it, viz. a word assigned to convey a simple significance. On the other hand, its use in the Qur-án as meaning a prophecy is of frequent occurrence, as "there is no changing the words of Allah" (10 : 64), or in "there is none to change the words of Allah" (6 : 34), or again "And the word of your Lord has been accomplished truly and justly; there is none who can change His words" (6 : 116), in all of which places, as the context clearly shows, Divine prophecies are meant. Similar instances are contained in 18 : 27 and elsewhere.

One other significance of the word kalimah as used in the Holy Qur-án is the creation of God. Thus in 18 : 109 we have, "If the sea were ink for the words of my Lord, the sea would surely be consumed before the words of my Lord are exhausted, though We were to bring the like of that (sea) to add thereto." A similar statement is made in 31 : 27, and in both places it is clear that the words of the Lord signify His creation.

However, a comparison with 66 : 12 makes it quite clear that kalimah in this verse as well as in verse 44 and in 4 : 171 signifies prophecy, for in 66 : 12, speaking of Mary, the Holy Qur-án says: "And she accepted the truth of the words of her Lord and His books, and she was of the obedient ones." Just as John is the verifier of a word from Allah, Mary is the verifier of the words of her Lord. As "the words of her Lord" do not mean Christ in the latter case, neither in the former do they mean Christ, and the opinion of the commentators that they do so must be rejected in the face of the clear evidence from the Holy Qur-án itself. The only meaning that can be given to kalimát in 66 : 12 is the prophetic words of her Lord, i.e. the Divine inspiration which Mary received relating to the birth of a Messiah.

Rgh gives prominence to two significances, viz. either kalimah here signifies the expression of Divine Unity or the Book of Allah, the latter agreeing with Abú 'Ubaida's explanation as given above.

419 There is no disbelief on the part of Zacharias; his question is simply an expression of wonder as to when a son shall be born to him, for he had already reached a very old age and had no offspring.

420 The Qur-án does not say that Zacharias became dumb. According to it he was only commanded not to talk with men for three days. But he was commanded to remember Allah much during those three days, which he could not do if he had been struck mute. Rz accepts this as the correct explanation of the Quranic words. The Bible makes Zacharias mute during the whole period, from the time of the announcement of the birth of a son to its actual delivery, and that only for a question which, if it implied unbelief at all, was much milder than that of Mary; compare Luke 1:20 and 1:34.

421 By the "unseen" is not meant the past history of the prophets, which cannot properly be called unseen. It is something which is yet to happen that is really "unseen," and the reference is to the election of the Holy Prophet above all others, which is undoubtedly hinted at in the story of the election of Mary.

422 The commentators think the reference here is to the priests, who, it is supposed, contended with each other regarding Mary's charge and at last cast lots, and Zacharias thus had the charge. But compare 38:69: "I had no knowledge of the exalted chiefs when they contended together," where the angels are spoken of as having contended at the election of the Holy Prophet; also the mention of the election of Adam as narrated in 2:30, where the angels are spoken of as contending on that occasion. Of course, it is an allegorical contention, but the two references clearly show that the contention spoken of in this verse at the birth of a prophet is of the same nature. It should be noted that both in the previous and the subsequent verses there is no mention at all

44 When the angels said: O Mary! surely Allah gives you good news with a word from Him[423] (of one) whose name is the Messiah, Jesus, son of Mary,[424] worthy of regard in this world and the hereafter, and of those who are made near (to Allah):[425]

اذ قالت الملئكة يمريم ان الله

ابن مريم وجيها في الدنيا و

of Zacharias or of the priests, but angels are spoken of in both verses as addressing Mary; therefore the personal pronoun in the middle verse may more probably refer to angels and not to the priests, who are nowhere mentioned. The pen is associated with the fate of men, because fate is represented as being written down. See a quotation in the TA: سبق القضاء و جفت الا قلام i.e. the decree has already gone forth, and the pens have dried. The use of the word in the Qur-án, says Ibn-i-Sayyidah, is peculiar and "I do not know the nature of it" (TA).

423 The phrase ان الله يبشرك بكلمة منه might mean either that Allah give you good news with a word from Him or that Allah gives you good news of a word from Him, but as kalimah means word or prophecy, and as the personal pronoun in ismu-hú stands for the masculine gender, while kalimah is in the feminine gender and requires the personal pronoun há, the former meaning is adopted. The good news was given by means of a prophetic word from the Divine Being. Compare 15: 54, 55, where Abraham's question فبم تبشرون i.e. "What is it of which you give me good news?" is answered thus: قالوا بشرناك بالحق i.e. "They said, We give you good news with truth," where the object is understood, as in the words under discussion, the significance being we give you good news (of a son) with truth. The two statements are parallel, and if the latter does not admit of any significance other than we give you good news (of a son) with truth, the former may also signify Allah gives you good news (of a son) with a word from Him. For further explanation of what is meant by kalimah, see foot-notes 418 and 2525. One of the explanations given by Rz, although he takes it for granted that by kalimah is meant Jesus Christ, amounts substantially to what I have stated above, because it holds kalimah as an equivalent of bashárat, i.e. good news. Commenting on verse 38, Rz observes: "The announcement (of Jesus' advent) had been made in the books of the prophets before him, so when he came it was said, This is that prophetic word, and so he was called a word, according to this explanation." In support of this he cites instances of such phrases as جاء قولى and جاء كلامى i.e. "my word came" or "my speech came," which are spoken when an event foretold by a person happens, the real significance of the phrases being that which I said or that of which I spoke has come about. This explanation shows that kalimah really applies to the prophecy, a fulfilment of which has come about, and hence the word is rightly rendered here as meaning a prophetic word.

One of the explanations given by Rgh is that Jesus is here called a kalimah in the same sense as the Holy Prophet is called zikr (lit., a reminder) in 65: 10.

424 Three names are given for the child—Al-Masíḥ, 'Ísá, and Ibn-i-Maryam. The first of these is more a title than a name, being preceded by al. The literal significance of Masíḥ is either one who travels much or one wiped over with some such thing as oil (LL, Rgh, Rz, etc.). It is the same word as the Aramaic Messiah, which is said to mean the anointed. Jesus Christ is said to have been so called because he used to travel much (Rz, Rgh), or because he was anointed with a pure blessed ointment with which the prophets are anointed (Rz). Various other explanations are given. The former of these

45 And he shall speak to the people when in the cradle and when of old age, and (he shall be) one of the good ones.[426]

46 She said: My Lord! when shall there be a son (born) to me, and man has not touched me?[427] He said: Even so, Allah creates what He pleases; when He has decreed a matter, He only says to it, Be, and it is.

Or, how.

explanations, however, cannot be true if Jesus' mission was limited to a few Syrian towns, but it is the explanation which finds the foremost acceptance with the commentators as well as the lexicologists, and lends support to the evidence recently discovered which shows that Jesus travelled in the East after his unfortunate experience at the hands of the Syrian Jews and preached to the lost ten tribes of the Israelites who had settled in the East, in Afghanistan and Cashmere. In giving the title Messiah there is a reference to the prophecies of the advent of a deliverer, which became definite at the close of the exile. Earlier prophecies, as those contained in Deut. 18 : 18, were never looked upon by the Jews as relating to the Messiah, and hence we have the plain admission that such prophecies "did not have so much effect on Jewish belief about the Messiah as we might expect" (Bib. Dic., Cam. Press, Art. "Messiah").

'Isá is the Arabic form of the Hebrew Yoshua, Jesus being the Greek form of the same name; and Ibn-i-Maryam, or son of Mary, is a surname, known in Arabic as kunyat. It is remarkable that the Qur-án makes no mention at all of Mary's husband, and in this respect the circumstances bear a strong resemblance to those connected with Moses' birth, for there too no mention at all is made of Moses' father. The mere fact, therefore, that there is no mention of Jesus' father is not sufficient to show that Jesus had no father.

425 Those made near are not necessarily the angels, as some have thought. Compare 56 : 7-11, where people are divided into three classes, one of these being those drawn nigh, the same word (muqarrabin) being used in both cases. Hence Jesus is here placed among the foremost line of the righteous servants of the companions of the Holy Prophet.

426 It should be remembered that Jesus throughout the Holy Qur-án is spoken of as "one of those made near," "one of the righteous," thus showing that he is regarded only as one of the prophets. As to speaking in the cradle and when of old age, neither of them can be considered a miracle. Every healthy child which is not dumb begins to talk when in the cradle, and speaking when of old age also shows that this speaking is the ordinary experience of every human being who is healthy and lives to an old age. The good news consists in the fact that the child announced will be a healthy child and shall not die in childhood. According to Rz, the reason for mentioning Jesus speaking in childhood and old age is to show the change of condition of Jesus from childhood to old age, while change in the Divine Being is impossible.

Kaḥl is, according to Rgh, he in whose hair hoariness or greyness has become intermixed. LL has, on the authority of Msb, TA, and Mgh, that a man is kaḥl after he has attained the limit of being a shább, which is variously fixed at 32, 40, and 51 years. The same authority gives the meaning of kaḥl as of middle age, or between that age and the period when his hair has become intermixed with hoariness. It would thus appear that, according to the Holy Qur-án, Jesus did not die at thirty-three years of age, but lived to a sufficiently old age.

It is absurd to say that Jesus will attain to old age in his second advent, for this is equivalent to saying that he will not undergo any change during several thousand years, as all mortals must.

427 The announcement of the birth of a son to any unmarried girl would draw from her the words which are here put into the mouth of Mary. But the words do not show that she would conceive out of the ordinary course of nature, for there is no doubt that Mary had other children, which no one supposes to have been conceived out of the ordinary course of nature. Nor do the words that follow prove anything beyond the simple fact that Mary must give birth to a son in accordance with the prophecy.

428 To understand the full significance of this passage it is necessary to bear in mind that the chief characteristic of Jesus' speeches is that he spoke in parables and preferred to clothe his ideas in allegorical language. If this is kept in mind, there is no difficulty in interpreting this passage. The first of the statements in this passage speaks of the making of birds and breathing into them. It is perfectly intelligible if taken as a parable, but quite incomprehensible as a statement of fact. If on the one hand a prophet's dignity is much above such actions as the making of toy birds, on the other the act of creation is not attributable to any but the Divine Being. To understand this parable, however, the several words used may be explained first. In the passage the four words required to be explained are khalq, ṭín, nafkh, and ṭair. The primary significance of khalq is measuring, proportioning, synonym taqdir (LL); hence khalq comes to signify the mere act of the determining of a thing. Zuheir says, ولانت تفری ما خلقت و بعض القوم یخلق ثم لا یفری i.e. And you cut (i.e. execute) what you have determined and some of the people determine, then do not cut. It is in this sense and not in the sense of creation that the word is used here (Bd, Kf, Rz, etc.), for the act of khalq in the sense of creation cannot be attributed to any being except Allah. The Qur-án has laid the greatest stress upon this point. It again and again speaks of the Divine Being as the Creator of every thing, so that there is nothing of which any one else may be said to be a creator. And of those who are taken as gods by any people it says in particular that they do not create any thing, while they are themselves created (16 : 19 and 25 : 3). This is not affirmed only of idols, but also of men taken for gods, as the use of allazína in 16 : 19 clearly shows. The attribute of Allah as being the sole Creator of all things is specially affirmed in connection with the doctrine of sonship in 6 : 102 : "How could He have a son when He has no consort and He Himself created every thing?" It is therefore certain that the "creation" of birds by Jesus is opposed to the principle laid down in clear words by the Holy Qur-án.

Then there are the two words ṭín and nafkh. Man is spoken of as being created from ṭín or dust, which stands for his humble origin, but the nafkh or breathing into him makes him deserving of respect by the angels. This, while hinted at on various occasions, is clearly stated in 38 : 71, 72 : "When your Lord said to the angels, I am going to create a mortal from dust. And when I have made him complete and breathed into him of My inspiration, then fall down, making obeisance to him." Thus it is by the breathing of the Divine Spirit into man that he is made perfect.

I heal the blind[429] and the leprous, and bring the dead to life[430] with Allah's permission, and I inform you of what you should eat and what you should store in your houses;[431] most surely there is a sign in this for you, if you are believers.

أُبْرِئُ الْأَكْمَهَ وَالْأَبْرَصَ وَأُحْيِ الْمَوْتَىٰ
بِإِذْنِ اللَّهِ وَأُنَبِّئُكُمْ بِمَا تَأْكُلُونَ
وَمَا تَدَّخِرُونَ فِي بُيُوتِكُمْ إِنَّ فِي
ذَٰلِكَ لَآيَةً لَكُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُؤْمِنِينَ

The word ṭair or ṭáir means a bird, but just as the word asad (lit., a lion) is metaphorically used for a brave man, in a parable it is quite unobjectionable to take the word ṭair as signifying one who soars into the higher spiritual regions and is not bent down upon earth or earthly things. In 6:38 it is said: "And there is no animal that walks upon the earth nor a bird that flies with its two wings but (they are) genera like yourselves," the meaning apparently being that among men there are those who only walk upon the earth and do not rise above their earthly concerns, while others soar into the higher spiritual regions. Elsewhere (in 7:179 and 25:44) those who having hearts do not understand, and having ears do not hear, are likened to cattle. So what is meant here is that Jesus, by breathing a spirit into mortals, will make them rise above those who are bent low upon the earth, and the apostles of Jesus, who were all men of humble origin (which is referred to in the word dust in the parable), whose thoughts had never risen higher than their own humble cares, left every thing for the master's sake and went into the world by the command of the master preaching the truth. Here was, no doubt, mere dust having the form of a bird, which the messenger of God converted into high-soaring birds by breathing the truth into them. The fact that a story of Jesus making birds is related in a Gospel of Infancy is in no way a bar to this explanation, for it is very likely that a parable was misunderstood by the writer of that Gospel and the Qur-án has only referred to it to cast light upon the truth.

429 The miracle of Jesus healing the sick has been rationally explained in the Enc. Bib. by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, who has shown that all the stories of healing of the sick have arisen from the spiritual healing of the sick, as in Matt. 9:12: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick"; and as in Jesus' message to John the Baptist: "The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them" (Matt. 11:5), the concluding words of which clearly show that the sick and the lame and the blind belong to the same category as the poor to whom the Gospel is preached, being the poor in heart. Compare also Matt. 13:15: "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears and should understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them." Here the healing cannot refer but to healing of the spiritual diseases. The Holy Qur-án gives a similar explanation of the healing of the sick when, speaking of itself, it says that it is "a healing for what is in the breasts" (10:57), i.e. for the spiritual diseases, and it is called a guidance and a healing elsewhere (41:44). The healing by the prophet is a spiritual one, not a healing of the physical diseases. The Qur-án speaks of the blind and the deaf frequently, but it never means those who had lost the senses of seeing and hearing.

430 Last come those who are dead. The Qur-án says plainly that those who die are not sent back to this world: "Allah takes the souls at the time of their death, and those that die not during their sleep; then He withholds those on whom He has passed the decree of death, and sends the others back till an appointed term" (39:42). And again, speaking of the dead: "And before them is a barrier until the day they are raised" (23:100). But the use of the word mautá, i.e. the dead, and of their raising to life, is frequent in the Holy Qur-án in a spiritual sense: "Is he who was dead then We raised him to life . . . like him whose likeness is that of one in utter darkness" (6:123). And again: "O you who believe! answer the call of Allah and His Apostle when he calls you to that which gives you life" (8 : 24). Similarly we have: "Neither are the living and the dead alike; surely Allah makes whom He pleases hear, and you cannot make those hear who are in the graves" (35 : 22). The prophets are raised only for quickening to life those who are spiritually dead, and it is to this quickening through Jesus Christ that the Holy Qur-án refers here. It should be noted that three classes of men are spoken of as being regenerated, viz.: (1) those who were found in the natural state of dust, and who, like dust, humbly submitted themselves to the prophets' handling, and who were made to soar high into the spiritual regions, not caring for their worldly concerns: (2) those who were spiritually diseased, and they were healed and made whole, i.e. able to work; and (3) those who were quite dead and were spiritually quickened. Hence the three different descriptions.

431 Jesus' preaching laid special stress upon not having any care "for the morrow," and his advice to rich men when they came to him was to sell all that they had. He would have them lay up their treasures in heaven. It is to this aspect of his teaching that the verse refers, the plain meaning of the words being that he told them of what they had lawfully earned, and what they should store in their houses (meaning that they should not amass riches but should spend them in Allah's way, and thus lay up for themselves treasures in heaven). It is remarkable that there is not a single aspect of Jesus' teaching that his followers have not gone against directly.

432 The law given by Moses was upheld by all the Israelite prophets, but its deficiencies were removed and other changes introduced from time to time to make it suit the needs of new times. These changes are particularly marked out in Jesus' teaching, as any one who reads any of the Gospels, and especially the Sermon on the Mount, can easily see.

433 The Arabic word is plural of ḥawárí, which is thus explained by LL: "One who whitens clothes by washing and beating them (S, M, Msb, Q). Hence its plural, ḥawáriyyún, is applied to the companions of Jesus, because their trade was to do washing (M, S, Msb)." That seems to be the best explanation, and it is traceable to Sa'íd bin Jubair (Rz). Some commentators, however, suggest that they may have been so called because of the purity of their hearts (Rz).

434 Makr is explained by Rgh as the turning of another with ingenuity or skill from that which he aims at, and he considers makr as of two sorts, a good one and an evil one. Therefore the best interpretation of the word makara (including both sorts) is that adopted by TA, viz. he exercised craft, cunning, art, or skill in the management or ordering of affairs with excellent consideration or deliberation, and ability to manage according to his own free will (LL). The idea of the plan being contrived for an evil purpose or clandestinely, which is included in the significance of the word, has led many to take that idea as its exclusive significance, which is not the case. Makr-ullah may also signify Allah's recompensing or requiting for makr (Msb, TA-LL). According to some, its original significance is the gathering of an affair and its strengthening (Rz). All these explanations show that it is the equivalent of the word plan, the good or evil nature of the plan being dependent on the object or doer's intention. Allah is called here Khair-ul-mákirín or the best of planners, the qualifying word khair being inapplicable to an evil object.

435 The Jews planned to put Jesus to death by crucifixion, and Allah made a plan to frustrate their plans; and Allah's plan was successful, i.e. he was saved from death on the cross, for which see 436 and 645.

436 Bkh has from IAb متوفيك مميتك i.e. the significance of mutawaffí-ka is I will cause you to die. And توفاه الله does not convey any significance other than Allah took his soul or caused him to die. The Qur-án itself makes this significance clear in 39: 42. LA says "You say توفي فلان وتوفاه الله when you mean قبض نفسه or, according to S, قبض روحه i.e. He (Allah) took his soul or caused him to die. And توفاه الله according to LL, signifies "God took his soul (S, Q) (either at death or in sleep, see the Qur-án, 6: 60); or caused him to die (Msb)." No other significance can be attached to the words when thus used. Hence some commentators say that Jesus remained dead for three hours; others say for seven hours,

56 And as to those who believe and do good deeds, He will pay them fully their rewards; and Allah does not love the unjust.[442] and so on (Rz). But the word is used here really to show that the Jewish plans to cause Jesus' death on the cross would be frustrated and that he would afterwards die a natural death (see 645).

437 Raf' signifies raising or elevating, and also exalting or making honourable (Rgh, TA-LL). But where the raf' of a man to Allah is spoken of in the Holy Qur-án, or in the religious literature of Islam, it is without a single exception in the latter sense, for raising a man in his body to Himself implies that the Divine Being is limited to a place. This is made plain by the prayer which every Muslim repeats several times daily, و ارفعني meaning "and exalt me, O Lord!" Of course no one supposes this prayer to be for the raising of the body to the heavens. Hence even those commentators who are predisposed, having, no doubt, been misled by Christian traditions, to accept Jesus Christ as having been raised alive to heaven, have been compelled to admit that the word raf' is here used not for raising aloft but for exalting and honouring. And commenting on the words و جاعل الذين اتبعوك فوق الذين كفروا which follow this statement, Rz says This verse shows that raf' here is the exalting in degree and in praise, not in place and direction. The exaltation of Jesus is mentioned here as a reply to the Jews, whose object was to make him die an accursed and ignominious death on the cross.

438 Clearing of those who disbelieve signifies clearing Jesus of the false charges relating to the alleged illegitimacy of his birth, and so on, charges of which Jesus was cleared by the Holy Qur-án (see 644).

439 This verse contains four promises relating to Jesus' triumph over his enemies as against their plans, three of which have already been noticed, viz.: (1) his being saved from death on the cross and being made to die a natural death; (2) his being made honourable in the Divine presence, whereas the object of the Jews was to show that he was an accursed person: (3) his being cleared of all false charges. And the fourth promise is that those who follow Jesus shall be made dominant over his rejecters till the day of judgment. The truth of this fourth prophecy is witnessed to this day in the dominance of the Muslims and the Christians over the Jews. It is a sufficient proof of the incompleteness of the current Gospels that these promises are not mentioned in them.

440 The differences referred to are the differences that exist between those who accept Jesus—the broad differences of the Muslims and the Christians.

441 The condition of the Jews bears testimony to the fulfilment of this threat.

442 By the unjust are meant the Christians, because they have exceeded the limits of justice and deified Jesus.

58 Surely the likeness of Jesus is with Allah as the likeness of Adam; He created him from dust, then said to him, Be, and he was.[443]

443 Adam may stand for man generally, because all men are created from dust. Thus in 18 : 37 the believer says to his non-believing companion : " Do you disbelieve in Him who created you from dust ? " And in 22 : 5, 30 : 20, and elsewhere, all men are spoken of as having been created from dust. All that is meant, therefore, is that Jesus is no more than a mortal, and that it is an error to take him for a god, as the Christians do.

If Adam be taken as a proper name, the chosen one of God mentioned in v. 32, the meaning would still be only this, that just as Adam was created from dust and then chosen or purified by Allah, so was Jesus created from dust, and his election was similar to the election of Adam, the command contained in kun in this case referring to the election of a righteous servant of Allah. In either case there is no reference to Jesus being brought into existence without the agency of a male parent. The controversy is here carried on with the Christians, and it is their false belief in the divinity of Jesus that is here condemned.

444 Ibtahala means he humbled or abased himself or addressed himself with earnest or energetic supplication (S, Msb, Q-LL). That is the real significance, but some explain it as meaning natabâhil, in which case the meaning would be let us call down a curse upon such of us as is the liar.

445 This chapter starts with a discussion of the Christian doctrines in particular. The persons addressed in particular here are the members of the Christian deputation from Najran that came in 10 A.H. This deputation, consisting of sixty men, was headed by Abdul Masih, the chief of the Najran Christians (Rz, AH), and the members of the deputation were lodged in the mosque. Thus did the Holy Prophet set an example of freedom of religious thought which remains without a parallel to this day. The Holy Prophet related to them arguments showing that Jesus Christ was not God, but a man and a prophet. After having argued the question fully, and finding them still insisting in their false belief in the deity of Jesus, they were invited as a last resort to pray earnestly that the curse of Allah might overtake the party that insisted upon falsehood. They wanted respite for a day to consider the matter, and the next day Abdul Masih and two others came to the Holy Prophet and told him that they had decided not to pray against him as suggested. Thereupon they were given a pledge by which they were free to practise their religion : " their authority and rights shall not be interfered with, nor anything that is customary amongst them, so long as they conducted themselves peaceably and uprightly " (Muir).

It is strange to find Christian writers referring to this as " a strange mode of settling the dispute." But evidently their Arabian co-religionists did not think so over 1,300 years ago. They believed in the efficacy of prayer, for such was the teaching of Jesus. They saw the righteousness of the Prophet, and they were convinced of their own false beliefs and dared not invoke curses upon themselves with their own tongues, while they knew that the Holy Prophet was too generous to curse them. Therefore they adopted the wise course of not calling with their own mouths for destruction to overtake them. Had they considered the Holy Prophet as an impostor and Antichrist, as their descendants do to-day, they would not have had the least fear in accepting the challenge.

As regards the reasonableness of the mode here suggested, a community that called, and still insists upon calling, the law of the Holy Prophet "a curse" to humanity cannot well dispute it. If indeed Jesus was God, and the most righteous of men is condemned so long as he does not believe in his atonement, and any and every law which aims at making men righteous, while rejecting the doctrine of atonement as utterly false, is, according to the teaching of the apostle Paul, a curse to humanity, why should a Christian hesitate to curse the founder of such a law? As regards the alleged love for enemies, enough of it is seen in the abuses that are heaped upon the Holy Prophet to this day.

446 It was exactly in these words that the Prophet wrote a letter to Heracleus in the year 6 A.H. (Bkh), discovery of a copy of which has furnished proof of the reliability of the reports relating to the Holy Prophet in general, for the manuscript letter contains the very words given by Bkh. This circumstance further shows that this part was not revealed so late as the year of the Najran deputation. In this verse the Jews and the Christians are called upon to accept the broad principles of the faith of Abraham, which were also the basic principles of the faith of Islam, but which the Jews had given up in practice for doctrines of later growth and the Christians for the doctrines of the divinity of a man and his atonement for sins. The reference in the sentence some of us shall not take others for lords is not only to the Christian doctrine of the divinity of Jesus Christ, but also to the doctrine of the Jews, who revered their priests with the reverence due to Allah, as is said elsewhere: "They have taken their doctors of law and their monks for lords besides Allah" (9 : 31). The same charge holds good against the Muslims of to-day, who pay undue reverence to their pîrs (spiritual guides), which is the real cause of their degeneration.

447 The Christians held a controversy with the Holy Prophet regarding Jesus Christ, of whom they had some knowledge, but about Abraham they had no detailed knowledge.

SECTION 8

Machinations to discredit Islam

71–73. A show of false belief followed by relapse. 74–76. Their dishonest dealings with other people. 77. Their alteration of scriptures. 78, 79. Claim to divinity not attributable to any prophet.

71 And a party of the followers of the Book say: Avow belief in that which has been revealed to those who believe, in the first part of the day, and disbelieve at the end of it, perhaps they may go back:[448]

Or, the latter part.

72 And do not believe but in him who follows your religion.[449] Say: Surely the (true) guidance is the guidance of Allah—that one may be given (by Him) the like of what you were given; or they would contend with you by an argument before your Lord.[450] Say: Surely grace is in the hand of Allah, He gives it to whom He pleases; and Allah is Ample-giving, Knowing,[451]

448 The words would bear two different significances according to what the personal pronoun in ākhira-hū refers to, for it may either refer to that which has been revealed or to the day. The meaning in the first case is that the Jews planned to express a false belief in the earlier part of the revelation and to deny the latter portion, with the object of creating doubts in the minds of the believers as to the sincerity of the Prophet. They would say, for instance, that the earlier revelation was no doubt true, but that the Prophet aimed at personal aggrandizement in later revelation, a position which is to this day adopted by most of the Christian writers who make a show of being fair to the claims of Islam. Some understand by that which has been revealed in the first part of the day the Prophet's adherence to Jerusalem as his Qiblah and by the latter portion the change to the Ka'ba (Rz).

If we adopt the other significance, the meaning would be that they should avow a belief in the truth of Islam in the morning and deny it in the evening, and thus perturb the minds of those who had gone over to Islam, creating the impression that the religion of Islam was a false religion, otherwise the Jews, who possessed the scriptures, could not have apostatized after they had embraced Islam (Rz). The adoption of this plan is a clear proof that apostates were not put to death.

449 The meaning is that the Jews should not believe in any prophet who did not follow their law, i.e. the Mosaic law.

450 The contention of the Jews in the beginning of this verse is met with the reply that a revelation should be given to another prophet like the revelation that had been given to Moses, for the Divine promise to Moses was: "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put My words in his mouth" (Deut. 18: 18). This promise must be fulfilled, and the Prophet who was thus raised, being "like unto" Moses, would be the real guide. This is the meaning of "one should be

74 And among the followers of the Book there are some
Ar. thou. such that if you entrust one (of them) with a heap of wealth,
Ar. thee. he shall pay it back to you; and among them there are
Ar. thou. some such that if you entrust one (of them) with a dinar[453]
Ar. thee. he shall not pay it back to you
Ar. thou. except so long as you remain firm in demanding it; this is because they say: There is not upon us in the matter of the unlearned people any way (to reproach); and they tell a lie against Allah while they know.[454]

75 Yea, whoever fulfils his promise and guards (against evil)—then surely Allah loves those who guard (against evil).

given by Him the like of what you were given." But if the argument of the Jews and the Christians were correct, that prophethood was to be confined to the line of Israel and no prophet was to be raised among the children of Ishmael, who were also the "seed" of Abraham, then that would give rise to a contention at the hands of the Ishmaelites as to the non-fulfilment of the promise given to Abraham. The significance thus is: or they (i.e. the Ishmaelites or Arabs) would contend with you (i.e. the Israelites) by an argument (relating to the non-fulfilment of the promise) with your Lord (i.e. their contention would then be right). For the fulfilment of the prophecy of Deut. 18 : 18 in the person of the Holy Prophet compare 46 : 10: "And a witness from among the children of Israel has borne witness of one like himself," and 73 : 15 : "Surely We have sent to you an apostle, a witness against you, as We sent an apostle to Pharaoh."

There can be another interpretation of the verse, as yuḥājjūkum means "they may be triumphant over you"; the significance of this interpretation is that it fully conveys the sense that Allah is so bountiful and powerful that He can in His grace not only give to others (the Ishmaelites) "the like" of what was given to the Israelites, but He can make those others even triumphant over them, as Islam has undoubtedly triumphed.

451 Grace here indicates prophethood. Compare the use of good in 2 : 105 and footnote 151.

452 Allah's choosing for His mercy stands here for His choice of a prophet, as in 2 : 105.

453 Dīnār is an Arab gold coin of the value of about 10s.

454 They considered themselves free from all responsibility towards the unlearned Arabs, notwithstanding any engagement they might have made with them. Hence it was that instead of bearing true witness to the claims of Islam, prophecies of which were abundantly outlined in their books, they thought it lawful to play all sorts of tricks to discredit it. If this was true of the Jews in the time of the Holy Prophet, it is true of the Christians now, whose missionaries are ever ready to make use of every falsehood against Islam, and whose politicians do not generally regard Muslim kingdoms as entitled to the benefit of the international laws of Europe.

76 (As for) those who take a small price for the covenant of Allah and their own oaths—surely they shall have no portion in the hereafter, and Allah will not speak to them, nor will He look upon them on the day of resurrection, nor will He purify them, and they shall have a painful chastisement.

77 And most surely there is a party of them who lie about the Book,[455] that you may consider it to be (a part) of the Book while it is not (a part) of the Book, and they say, It is from Allah, while it is not from Allah; and they tell a lie against Allah whilst they know.

يَقُولُونَ عَلَى اللّٰهِ الْكَذِبَ وَهُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ ۝

455 There has been much misconception as to the true significance of يلوٗن السنتهم بالكتب because primarily one says لويت الحبل i.e. I twisted the rope, and much learning has been spent in explaining the meaning of twisting their tongues with the Book, which significance is adopted from the analogy of the rope. Rgh makes the point clear in very few words when he says, لوى لسانه بكذا i.e. the twisting of the tongue with such a thing implies the lying about and forging of a narration. He cites as instances of this use of the word the phrase occurring in this verse as cited above and ليا بالسنتهم occurring in 4:46. Both the LA and the TA give a variety of uses of the word which makes the point further clear. Thus both agree that laww and layy mean the falsehood and ḥaww and ḥayy mean the truth, and cite the proverb فلان لا يعرف الحو من اللو i.e. such a one does not recognize truth from falsehood. Again, both explain الوى بالكلام as meaning he turned it (i.e. a speech or saying) away from its drift or altered or changed it altogether. And again لويت عنه الخبر is, according to LA, equivalent to I informed him of it otherwise than it was, and لوى فلان خبره means he concealed the information, according to the same authority. Rz quotes the following comment on the words of this verse from I'Ab: What is implied is the reading of the false book. And he says that in Arabic you use different words for an action according as the good or evil of it is to be expressed, and then cites 2:79, which shows that the book which they read is not the book revealed by Allah, but one which they had written with their own hands. The concluding words of this verse also point to the same conclusion: "They tell a lie against Allah." This shows clearly that the Qur-án considered the Bible to have been already altered.

78 It is not meet for a mortal that Allah should give him the Book and the judgment and prophethood, then he should say to men: Be my servants rather than Allah's; but rather (he would say): Be worshippers of the Lord because of your teaching the Book and your reading (it).[456]

456 Rabbáni, which is the same as ribbi (from rabb, or Lord), means one who possesses a knowledge of the Lord, or one who is a worshipper of the Lord. According to a saying of the Holy Prophet, a ribbi is a learned man, a teacher of others, who nourishes people with the small matters of knowledge before the great (LL).

457 This and the previous verse show that according to the Holy Qur-án no prophet—Jesus included—ever taught his followers to take him for a god; in other words, any one who actually taught so could not be a prophet of Allah. The angels are mentioned because the pagan Arabs worshipped the angels.

458 Several explanations have been given of the words ميثاق النبيين which literally signify the covenant of the prophets, and may therefore mean either the covenant of the prophets with Allah or the covenant of the prophets with their people. As the words that follow are plainly addressed to the people, the Jews and the Christians being particularly addressed in the last two verses, I adopt the latter interpretation, and therefore translate the words as meaning a covenant through the prophets. It is very like what Kf accepts: When Allah made the covenant which the prophets confirmed with their peoples. As the Jews and the Christians are specially addressed here as well as in the foregoing verses, it is sufficient to note that both Moses and Jesus specially laid an obligation on their people to accept the prophet about whom they prophesied. Thus, through Moses, Almighty God had warned the Israelites, after promising them "a prophet from among their brethren like unto thee," that "whosoever will not hearken unto My words which he shall speak in My name, I will require it of him" (Deut. 18 : 19). And Jesus was equally emphatic when, prophesying the advent of the Comforter, he added: "He will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak" (John 16 : 13). The prophet, however, of whom Moses speaks in Deut. 18 : 15–19, and which description cannot apply to any prophet except the Holy Prophet Muhammad, had his advent foretold by all the prophets, and we read in Acts 3 : 21–22: "Whom the heaven must receive until the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me: him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you." The covenant referred to was made through each prophet separately as he appeared in the world. And just as all the prophets foretold the advent of the Holy Prophet and laid an obligation upon their people to accept him, so the Holy Prophet also taught his followers to believe in all the prophets that had appeared among different people in different ages, and this is plainly taught in what follows. See v. 83.

459 It is very amusing to find a Christian annotator of the Qur-án seeing in these words "a threat against unbelieving Arabs." This curious suggestion is too absurd to need any comment. Compare 13 : 15, 22 : 18, etc., where it is said that all those who are in the heavens and the earth make obeisance to Allah. The verse, in fact, shows that Islam, or the rule of submission to law, is a law which is seen working throughout nature, and this is an argument of the truth of the religion of Islam.

460 The cosmopolitan nature of the religion of Islam having been clearly set out in the previous verse, it is now stated that any one who refused to accept such a religion would unfailingly lose in the end.

461 The persons meant are those who believed in the former prophets and disbelieved in the Holy Prophet Muhammad. Having clear signs of the Prophet's truth with them, and professing a belief in the prophets who had foretold the advent of the last of the prophets, they still disbelieved in the Holy Prophet. How should Allah guide a people who thus rejected guidance?

462 Instead of hell here it is the curse in which the guilty shall abide, and thus a light is thrown upon the nature of hell.

463 Their repentance consisted in their accepting the Holy Prophet, as indicated by v. 88, but when they turned away again to disbelief, increasing in that disbelief, their previous repentance became quite useless, because it bore no fruit, and hence it was not accepted by the Divine Being (I'Ab-Rz).

SECTION 10

An Ever-living Testimony to the Truth of Islam

91. Necessity of sacrifice. 92–94. Islam possesses main features of Abraham's religion. 95, 96. Mecca and its security. 97–100. Exhortation and warning.

PART IV

91 By no means shall you attain to righteousness until you spend (benevolently) out of what you love; and whatever thing you spend, Allah surely knows it.[464]

92 All food was lawful to the children of Israel[465] except that which Israel had forbidden to himself before the Torah was revealed. Say: Bring then the Torah and read it, if you are truthful.[466]

93 Then whoever fabricates a lie against Allah after this, these it is that are the unjust.

94 Say: Allah has spoken the truth, therefore follow the religion of Abraham, the upright one; and he was not one of the polytheists.

95 Most surely the first house appointed for men is the one at Bekka,[467] blessed and a guidance for the nations.[468]

464 The connection with the last verse is clear. No wealth will buy redemption for a man if he has wasted his opportunity here, and to make the best of that opportunity a man must spend here what he loves most. Attention is thus called to the sacrifices which it was necessary for the Muslims to make.

465 The Jews objected to the Muslims making use of certain foods which the law of Moses did not allow. An answer is given here that such foods were lawful for Abraham and his descendants, and Islam agreed in principle with the religion of Abraham. By all food is thus meant all food which is lawful for the Muslims.

466 What was that which Israel had forbidden to himself before the revelation of the Torah? The commentators say it was camel's flesh. Camel's flesh was, no doubt, forbidden to the Israelites, as were several other things which were lawful for the Muslims, and the objection of the Jews was, as shown in the last note, to this departure from the Israelite law. This has been stated earlier in 6:147, where, after mentioning the foods prohibited to the Israelites in particular, it is added: "This was a punishment We gave them on account of their rebellion." These words explain what is stated here: that which Israel had forbidden to himself was, in fact, what was made unlawful for the Israelite nation on account of their rebellious attitude towards the Divine laws. Israel thus stands here for the Israelite nation.

467 Bekka is the same as Mecca, from tabák, meaning the crowding together of men (Rz). Others say it is from a root meaning the breaking of the neck, and the name is given to it

96 In it are clear signs: the standing-place of Abraham, and whoever enters it shall be secure, and pilgrimage to the House is incumbent upon men for the sake of Allah,[469] (upon) every one who is able to undertake the journey to it; and whoever disbelieves, then surely Allah is Self-sufficient, above any need of the worlds.

97 Say: O followers of the Book! why do you disbelieve in the communications of Allah, and Allah is a witness of what you do.

98 Say: O followers of the Book! why do you hinder him who believes from the way of Allah? you seek (to make) it crooked, while you are witnesses, and Allah is not heedless of what you do.

because whenever a tyrant has forced his way to it, his neck has been broken (Rz). Some think that Bekka is the name of the mosque or the House itself that is in Mecca. This is also an answer to the Jews, who objected to the Muslims making the Ka'ba and not the Temple at Jerusalem their Qiblah. They are told that the Temple at Jerusalem was erected long after Abraham, while the Holy House at Mecca was there even before Abraham, and was, in fact, the first House on earth for the worship of the Divine Being. The subject has been fully discussed in foot-note 170.

468 If, on the one hand, Mecca is declared to be the first House raised on earth for the worship of the Divine Being, it is, on the other, announced to be mubárak, which word, though ordinarily rendered as blessed, signifies the continuance for ever of the blessings which a thing possesses (Rz), and thus it is the first as well as the last House in which the nations of the world have found and will find their true inspiration and guidance.

469 The clear signs in Mecca, as enumerated here, are three, and these, in fact, are three prophecies with regard to the future of Mecca. The first sign is that it is the standing-place of Abraham, which has already been declared to be the Muslim centre (see 169). Hence the first prophecy is that the doctrine of the Unity of the Divine Being shall be proclaimed to the whole world from this centre. The second sign is that Mecca shall always be secure, i.e. it shall not fall into the hands of an enemy who should destroy it, because, we are told, it affords security to those who enter it, which it could not do if it were not itself secure. There is a saying of the Holy Prophet to the effect that the Antichrist (and the plague) shall never have access to Mecca. Thus its security is assured both physically and spiritually. And the third prophecy is that a pilgrimage to the Sacred House shall continue to be made for ever, and no power in the world shall ever be able to put a stop to it. The most striking fact about these prophecies is that they were all announced at a time when the Holy Prophet and his followers had apparently been driven away for ever from the sacred place, when that place was in the exclusive possession of an enemy who did not allow the Muslims to visit the place even during the sacred months, and when the small Muslim community was in danger of being utterly destroyed by the powerful enemy at any moment. To make such grand and majestic announcements about the place under such circumstances was undoubtedly a thing quite beyond the scope of human knowledge.

99 O you who believe! if you obey a party from among those who have been given the Book, they will turn you back as unbelievers after you have believed.[470]

Ar. your believing.

100 But how can you disbelieve while it is you to whom the communications of Allah are recited, and among you is His Apostle? And whoever holds fast to Allah, he indeed is guided to the right path.

SECTION 11

Muslims are exhorted to remain united 101, 102. The believers should be firm in union. 103. The necessity of a missionary propaganda. 104–108. Evil consequences of divisions and disagreements.

101 O you who believe! be careful of (your duty to) Allah with the care which is due to Him, and do not die unless you are Muslims.

102 And hold fast by the covenant of Allah[471] all together and be not disunited, and remember the favour of Allah on you when you were enemies, then He united your hearts so by His favour you became brethren; and you were on the brink of a pit of fire,[472] then He saved you from it; thus does Allah make clear to you His communications that you may follow the right way.

يٰاَيُّهَا الَّذِيْنَ اٰمَنُوا اتَّقُوا اللّٰهَ حَقَّ تُقٰتِهٖ

It may be added here that the pilgrimage to the Sacred House is not an unconditional obligation; it is incumbent only on those who are able to do it.

470 By obeying is here meant accepting what the followers of the Book said, or walking in the way in which they walked.

471 The original word is ḥabl, which means primarily a rope or a cord, and hence a bond, a cause of union, a bond of love or friendship, a covenant or a compact by which one becomes responsible for the safety of a person or a thing. One says كانت بينهم حبال فقطعوها i.e. there were covenants between them and they broke them (TA-LL). By ḥabl-illáh, or the covenant of Allah, is meant the Qur-án, a significance supported by two sayings of the Holy Prophet, according to one of which he is reported to have said that the

104 And be not like those who became divided and disagreed after clear arguments had come to them, and these it is that shall have a grievous chastisement,

105 On the day when (some) faces shall turn white and (some) faces shall turn black; then as to those whose faces turn black: Did you disbelieve after your believing? taste therefore the chastisement because you disbelieved.[474]

106 And as to those whose faces turn white, they shall be in Allah's mercy; in it they shall abide.

107 These are the communications of Allah which We recite to you with truth, and Allah does not desire any injustice to the creatures.

Book of Allah is the covenant (or rope) of Allah, and according to the other that the Qur-án is the firm covenant (or rope) of Allah (AH). The other explanations all tend to support this.

472 Before the advent of the Holy Prophet the Arabs were in a state of continual and mutual warfare which threatened to devastate the whole country. It should be noted that in Arabic literature and in the Qur-án, nár, or fire, is often a symbol of war. The Arabs used to kindle a fire as a sign that war was contemplated, so that the tribes should assemble. Hence the use of the word as implying war. In the Qur-án itself we read, "Whenever they kindle a fire for war Allah puts it out" (5 : 64).

473 The heated imagination of a Christian annotator sees a flash of "the sword" in these words. Compare 9 : 122 : "And it does not beseem the believers that they should go forth all together; why should not then a company from every party from among them go forth, that they may apply themselves to obtain understanding in religion and that they may warn their people when they come back to them that they may be cautious?" Both verses, in fact, direct the Muslims to have always among them a missionary party, whose only object should be the propagation of Islam and rightly directing their own people.

474 By the faces turning white is meant their being expressive of joy, and by their turning black, their being expressive of sorrow (Rgh-LL). Az says you say a man is abyaḍ (white) when you mean that he is free from dross and defects (TA).

Relations of the Jews with the Muslims

109. The Muslims raised for the welfare of others. 110, 111. They should not fear any harm from the Jews. 112–114. The good among them are an exception. 115, 116. Their strength against the Muslims shall be a failure. 117–119. Muslims not to take them for intimate friends.

109 You are the best of the nations raised up for (the benefit of) men: you enjoin what is right and forbid the wrong and believe in Allah;[475] and if the followers of the Book had believed it would have been better for them; of them (some) are believers and most of them are transgressors.

110 They shall by no means harm you but with a slight evil; and if they fight with you they shall turn (their) backs to you, then shall they not be helped.[476]

111 Abasement is made to cleave to them wherever they are found, except under a covenant with Allah and a covenant with men, and they have become deserving of wrath from Allah, and humiliation is made to cleave to them; this is because they disbelieved in the communications of Allah and slew the prophets unjustly; this is because they disobeyed and exceeded the limits.[477]

475 Not only are the Muslims the chosen people of God, who are now called upon to be the standard-bearers of truth in the world, but they are at the same time declared to be the best of the people that had ever been chosen for this purpose. This was no doubt due to the excellence of that Great Teacher who thoroughly purified them of the worst vices of humanity and made perfect the light within them. No prophet ever found a people in a worse condition, and none ever raised his people to such pre-eminence.

476 The Jews in Arabia sided with the enemies of Islam in their endeavour to extirpate the new religion, and this notwithstanding their agreement with the Muslims, but they were not successful in inflicting any serious harm upon the Muslims, and whenever they openly faced the Muslims they fled. The polytheists, who gave them secret promises of help, never came to their aid when they were in distress.

477 Almost the same words (excluding the exception) occur in 2:65. The Jews had already been subjected to the greatest humiliation and disgrace before the appearance of the Holy Prophet. But with the advent of Islam they could better their condition either by accepting the covenant of Allah, by which is meant the acceptance of Islam, or by making a compact of security with such men as could give them protection, thus showing that they would no more be rulers in the world, but would remain subject to others.

112 They are not all alike; of the followers of the Book there is an upright party: they recite Allah's communications in the night-time and they adore (Him):

113 They believe in Allah and the last day, and they enjoin what is right and forbid the wrong, and they strive with one another in hastening to good deeds, and those are among the good.

114 And whatever good they do, they shall not be denied it, and Allah knows those who guard (against evil).[478]

115 (As for) those who disbelieve, surely neither their wealth nor their children shall avail them in the least against Allah; and these are the inmates of the fire; therein they shall abide.

116 The likeness of what they spend in the life of this world is as the likeness of wind in which is intense cold (that) smites the seed-produce of a people who have done injustice to their souls and destroys it; and Allah is not unjust to them, but they are unjust to themselves.[479]

478 The opinion has been held, very plausibly indeed, that from v. 112 to this point the Holy Qur-án speaks of the good among the Jews and the Christians, and not of those who had become converts to Islam, because the Muslims could not be said to be a party of the followers of the Book. It is a fact that the Qur-án does not deny that there is good in others, its own eminence over others lying in the fact that it makes man attain the highest degree of perfection in goodness. It is for this reason that the description of the upright party among the followers of the Book concludes with the words, And whatever good they do, they shall not be denied it. If on the one hand there were very few who could be said to be upright among the followers of the Book, as compared with the vast majority who were transgressors (v. 109), they could not, on the other, attain perfect uprightness.

It is noteworthy that this praise of the good among the Jews belongs to a period when the Jews had secretly joined the enemies of the Muslims, openly venting their feelings of animosity. This shows how fair was Islam even to its greatest enemies. Generally, however, the commentators are of opinion that the description given here refers to those Jews and Christians who became converts to Islam (Rz).

479 The failure which is throughout the Holy Qur-án prophesied for the enemies of Islam is referred to here. The parable is similar to the one given in 68 : 17–33.

117 O you who believe! do not take for intimate friends from among others than your own people:[480] they do not fall short of inflicting loss upon you; they love what distresses you; vehement hatred has already appeared from out of their mouths, and what their breasts conceal is greater still; indeed, We have made the communications clear to you, if you will understand.

480 This injunction against contracting intimate friendship with others than Muslims should be read along with what is said in 60 : 8, 9: "Allah does not forbid you respecting those who have not made war against you on account of your religion and have not driven you forth from your homes, that you show them kindness and deal with them justly: surely Allah loves the doers of justice. Allah only forbids you respecting those who made war upon you on account of your religion and drove you forth from your homes and backed others in your expulsion, that you make friends with them." These two verses lay down a principle which explains the relations that may exist between Muslims and non-Muslims. As the preceding verses have shown and as what follows shows, the Jews assisted the enemies of Islam to make war upon the Muslims, so the Muslims were warned against close and intimate relations with them.

481 This verse clearly indicates the difficulties which the Muslims had in establishing friendly and loving relations with non-Muslims. The Muslims would fain proffer friendship, but the other party was always on the look-out for some opportunity to inflict loss on them, and the candour of the Muslims was repaid with insincerity and treachery.

482 It is to the events of the battle of Uhud that this and the following sections are devoted. In the third year of the Hejira, Abu Sufyan marched against Medina at the head of an army of three thousand and encamped at Uhud, a mountain about four miles from Medina. The Prophet at first intended to stay within the town, but afterwards marched into the open field with a thousand men, one-third of whom, under the leadership of Abdulla bin Ubayy, the great hypocrite leader, left him and returned to Medina. The enemy were first completely routed, but fifty Muslim archers, who were placed in a strong position to cut off the retreat of the enemy, made a mistake, and in order to join in the pursuit left their position. The enemy fell back upon the Muslims, who were now in disorder and had lost their naturally fortified position, and after inflicting some loss upon them, left the field secure from the pursuit of the Muslim force. It was neither a victory for the Quraish, who thought it safe to go back when they found the Muslims involved in their own troubles, nor for the Muslims, who were unable to continue their pursuit, though it was resumed next day when it was too late. Had the Quraish been victorious, they would have at least taken some prisoners from among the Muslims, but they had not a single prisoner of war, nor had they the courage to attack Medina, their real object in this expedition, and for which they gathered a strong force of ten thousand men exactly two years later.

483 The two tribes of Banu Salmá and Banu Ḥáris̱a are meant (Bkh).

484 This shows that they did not actually show cowardice. The desertion of the Muslim force by Abdulla bin Ubayy with his three hundred men made some of the Muslims also entertain the idea of deserting the army on account of superior enemy forces, but they did not after all desert it, as the words of the Qur-án clearly show.

485 The enemy numbered only one thousand where one thousand angels are stated to have been sent (8 : 9). The fulfilment of this promise is referred to in v. 151. What was the object of the coming of the angels? The matter is fully explained in the 8th chapter in connection with the promise of the coming of angels in the battle of Badr. As here, it is first stated there that the promise was given only "as a good news, and that your hearts might be at ease thereby, and victory is only from Allah" (8:10), and then the verse that follows makes the object clearer: "When He caused calm to fall on you as a security from Him, and sent down upon you water from the clouds that He might thereby purify you and take away from you the uncleanness of the devil, and that He might fortify your hearts and steady your footsteps thereby." Hence the object was to strengthen the Muslims by improving their position in the field of battle and by strengthening their hearts, and this is given expression to still more clearly further on: "When your Lord revealed to the angels: I am with you, therefore make firm those who believe; I will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve" (8:12), and the believers being thus strengthened while terror was cast into the enemy's heart, the object of sending the angels was achieved, and the small Muslim force was able to "strike off" the necks and "strike off every finger-tip" (8:12) of a powerful enemy that outnumbered them by three to one.

124 Yea! if you remain patient and are on your guard, and they come upon you in a headlong manner, your Lord will assist you with five thousand of the havoc-making angels.[486]

486 The word used in the original is musawwim and not musswwam, and it is from سوم على القوم meaning he urged his horse against the people and made havoc among them. Hence musawwim is one who makes havoc. The assistance of the angels stated in this verse refers to a third occasion, when the enemy came "in a headlong manner," all the tribes uniting with the Quraish to crush the Muslims. This happened in the battle of Aḥzáb, or the Confederates, when ten thousand men suddenly attacked Medina, and the dispersal of such a large army when the Muslims were only about a thousand strong was no doubt due to Divine intervention.

487 Notwithstanding that the object of the unbelievers in their war on the Muslims was their extirpation, the Muslims are here told that the Divine object in punishing the unbelievers by war was not to extirpate them, but to cut off a part of them, or their ringleaders and chiefs. The word taraf signifies a part or a portion of a thing (Rgh), and hence it is applied to a company of men, and also the leading men. LL translates اطراف الارض as meaning the exalted or the noble and the learned men of the earth. When the leaders of mischief were cut off, the rest would be disappointed of attaining the object of extirpating Islam, and the persecution would cease. The verses that follow corroborate this conclusion. The enemy's description as having returned disappointed of attaining what they desired in this battle shows clearly that they were not successful or victorious in the battle. Their great general Khalid became a convert to Islam on his way back to Mecca.

How Success can be achieved

129–138. Refraining from usurious bargains, obedience to the Apostle, spending liberally in the cause of religion and mutual forbearance, seeking Divine protection, studying the causes of the rise and fall of nations, must ultimately lead to triumph. 139. Loss already inflicted on the enemy. 140–142. Misfortune at Uhud brought about a distinction.

Or, doubling and redoubling.

129 O you who believe! do not devour usury, making additions again and again,[490] and be careful of (your duty to) Allah, that you may be successful.

130 And guard yourselves against the fire which has been prepared for the unbelievers.

488 Note how mercy has the upper hand throughout the Holy Qur-án. As a mortal the Holy Prophet might have sometimes entertained the idea that the serious crimes of his enemies would bring upon them a severe punishment which might extirpate them; but he is told in plain and simple words that he had no concern in the affair, for Allah might as well forgive them, for surely they are unjust. The reason given for showing mercy is really one which calls for punishment, yet so great is the Divine love and mercy for man that no reason for not showing mercy is too great for Divine mercy to overcome it. The all-comprehensiveness of the Divine mercy expressed in this verse is unapproached in sacred literature.

489 Allah's attribute of mercy is brought in to indicate that though their crimes were many and serious, deserving punishment, yet Allah was Merciful, and He would forgive them.

490 The original words are اضعافا مضعفة which, if rendered literally, would mean likes or doubles multiplied or doubled. The idea underlying taḍ'íf is adding to a thing until it becomes twofold or manyfold (LL). Aḍ'áf, being a plural of paucity, is followed by muḍá'afah to make the idea more intensive (AH). The Arab practice was that of compounding the interest, i.e. the interest was, at the end of the term for which the loan was given, added to the capital, and thus within a few years the original sum became several-fold. It may be added here that borrowing money on interest is as much against the tenets of Islam as lending it on interest; and perhaps the Muslim kingdoms would not have been ruined if they had not borrowed money on interest from other peoples, which gave foreigners the first opportunity to interfere in their affairs. This would to some extent show the relation of the subject of usury to that of wars. But there is also another reason for mentioning it in connection with wars, which is that, notwithstanding the strained relations between the Muslims and the non-Muslims, the former still entered into usurious bargains with the latter, which, in addition to being a large drain upon the finances of the Muslim society, created difficulties in the political relations in the state of warfare on which the two communities had now entered, the great money-lending race of the Jews being also among the opponents of Islam. Moreover, as the chapter deals in particular with the Jews, the Muslims are warned against all those evils, of which usury was one, which had dealt a deathblow to the noble qualities of the Jewish race.

491 The loss suffered at Uhud was due to disobedience in relation to a certain position, which having been forsaken against the orders of the Prophet, the retreating Meccan army turned upon the pursuers, among whom disorder had ensued, and several Muslims were slain, the Prophet himself being wounded.

492 Restraining of anger, pardoning, and doing good to each other strengthen the bond of union which is so necessary for success. The verse has on many occasions inspired the noblest thoughts of toleration and charitableness. Hasan's servant having on one occasion thrown a boiling hot dish on his master, obtained his liberty along with monetary help by reciting this verse. Thinking that he would be punished for his fault, he repeated the words: "Those who restrain their anger." Ḥasan said he was not angry: "And pardon men," added the servant. Ḥasan said: "I pardon you." "And Allah loves the doers of good," concluded the offending slave. "I give you liberty and four hundred pieces of silver," was the response. "A noble instance of moderation and generosity," is Sale's comment upon this incident.

136 Indeed there have been examples[493] before you; therefore travel in the earth and see what was the end of the rejecters.

493 Sunan is plural of sunnat, meaning a way or rule or manner of acting or conduct or life or the like (LL). Hence the significance here is ways or examples of Allah's dealing with the righteous and the wicked (Bd).

494 That Allah knows all that is seen or unseen and all that is manifest or concealed is asserted in numerous places in the Holy Qur-án. The knowing here and the not knowing in v. 141 refer to a knowledge of the event. Allah knew who would prove themselves true believers, who would strive hard in His way, and who would be patient under trials; but who did prove themselves true believers, who did strive hard, and who were patient in suffering could only be said to be known when these things had happened.

495 This refers to the desire of those who insisted that they should meet the enemy in the open field, while the Holy Prophet's own desire was that the Muslims should defend themselves within Medina. Their desire for fighting the enemy or for being slain in the cause of truth is called a desire for death, because it was a cause of death.

Sufferings should be met with Perseverance

144 And a soul will not die but with the permission of Allah; the term is fixed;[498] and whoever desires the reward of this world, We will give him of it, and whoever desires the reward of the hereafter, We will give him of it; and We will reward the grateful.

145 And how many a prophet has fought with whom were many worshippers of the Lord;[499] so they did not become weak-hearted on account of what befell them in Allah's way, nor did they weaken, nor did they abase themselves; and Allah loves the patient.

496 The Holy Prophet received severe wounds in the battle of Uhud, insomuch that it was thought that he was killed. It is to this that the verse refers. Even if the Prophet were killed, Islam was so far superior to all forms of faith that the Muslims could not go back to their former religions. Truth was truth, though its advocate might be killed in a battle, and truth was not to be forsaken; nor could falsehood and superstition be accepted, though their advocates might prevail for a time.

While this verse lays stress on the essential truth of Islam, it served another important purpose at the death of the Holy Prophet. Some of the companions thought that the Prophet was not dead. Abu Bakr went in, and seeing that life had departed, ascended the pulpit and read this verse, which had a magical effect upon his hearers, all of them being convinced that the Holy Prophet had passed away, as all prophets had passed away before him. The prophets were but mortals, and their span of mortal life must no doubt terminate like that of other mortals. This verse affords a conclusive proof that Jesus Christ was also dead, otherwise Abu Bakr's arguments could not have silenced the doubters of the Holy Prophet's death.

497 The doing of harm to Allah stands for the doing of harm to the Divine cause, i.e. the truth as represented by Islam.

146 And their saying was no other than that they said: Our Lord! forgive us our faults and our extravagance in our affair, and make firm our feet and help us against the unbelieving people.

Causes of the Misfortune in the Battle of Uhud

148–150. Dread will be cast into the hearts of the opponents. 151. Delinquency of a part of Muslim troops after victory in fulfilment of Divine promise. 152. The enemy took advantage of disorder. 153. Tranquility after the loss and murmurings of a certain class. 154. Delinquents pardoned.

148 O you who believe! if you obey those who disbelieve, they will turn you back upon your heels, so you will turn back losers.[500]

150 We will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve, because they set up with Allah that for which He has sent down no authority, and their abode is the fire; and evil is the abode of the unjust.[501]

498 These words seem to refer to the death of the Holy Prophet, giving an assurance to the Muslims that the time of his death had not yet come. They also point to the special Divine protection of the Holy Prophet, for were it not for Divine protection he could not have escaped from death under such critical circumstances (Rz).

499 For the meaning of ribbi see foot-note 456. It is a curious coincidence that Sale, Rodwell, and Palmer have all given a wrong translation of this verse: "How many prophets have encountered those who had many myriads of troops." This is Sale's rendering, and the others are similar. I find no commentator lending any support to this significance, nor can the words bear this interpretation.

500 The war was carried on only with the object of making the Muslims renounce their religion, and hence they could not think of accepting the unbelievers as their rulers, for obedience on their part was sure to lead to persecution, which the enemy would not have stopped until they had made the Muslims renounce their faith.

501 Notwithstanding the great preponderance of their numbers, the Muslims being less than one-fourth of their opponents, and not so well equipped as their foes, and in spite of the disorder into which the Muslim forces had fallen, the enemy had to flee, leaving the Muslims in the field, not even making a show of attacking Medina, which was quite 151 And certainly Allah made good to you His promise,[502] when you slew them by His permission, until when you became weak-hearted and disputed about the affair and disobeyed after He had shown you that which you loved;[503] of you were some who desired this world, and of you were some who desired the hereafter;[504] then He turned you away from them that He might try you;[505] and He has certainly pardoned you, and Allah is Gracious to the believers.

defenceless. This clearly shows that they were terror-stricken even after they had inflicted some loss upon the Muslims, considering it safer to retreat to Mecca while the Muslims were yet occupied with their own troubles and were unable to pursue them.

502 The promise is contained in v. 123.

503 It clearly shows that the Muslims had obtained a victory at Uhud, later incidents depriving them of the fruits of that victory.

504 Two parties are here spoken of, those who desired this world and those who desired the hereafter. It should be remembered that these were the two parties of the body of archers (fifty in number) who were placed in an important position to cut off the enemy's retreat. When the enemy was apparently routed, some of these archers were led by the love of plunder to leave their position, while their chief, Abdulla bin Jubair, and only some ten men stuck to their post (Rz). Thus the words refer to the two parties of the small body of archers.

505 The enemy, who was being pursued, turned against the pursuers on seeing the important position of the archers vacated.

506 It refers to the Prophet's call, at whom the Muslims now saw the attack of the enemy was directed. So they did not grieve for losing an opportunity of pursuing the enemy, but for the dangerous position in which they saw their Prophet. This is, in fact, plainly stated in what follows: "So that you might not grieve at what had escaped you," i.e. the booty which they would have had by pursuing the flying enemy, "nor at what befell you," i.e. the slight loss which they themselves suffered. Aṣába-hú ordinarily means he recompensed him, but sometimes it conveys the idea of giving one thing instead of another, as in اثابه من هبته which means he gave him a substitute, something instead or in exchange or a compensation for his gift (LL).

Or, sleep.

They conceal within their souls what they would not reveal to you. They say: Had we any hand in the affair, we would not have been slain here.[510] Say: Had you remained in your houses, those for whom slaughter was ordained would certainly have gone forth to the places where they would be slain,[511] and that Allah might test what was in your breasts and that He might purge what 507 Nu'ás, according to Rgh, means slight sleep, but after giving this significance he adds: It is said that nu'ás here implies calm and quiet. I adopt this significance, because the idea is more in consonance with the field of battle. But if we adopt the first significance, it must have happened when the enemy departed. The slumber was a sign of security, for no army could have gone to rest while yet in the field of battle if it had the least anxiety as to its security. Whichever significance may be adopted, it shows clearly that the enemy had not inflicted a defeat upon the Muslims, for if the Muslims had been defeated an army of three thousand ought to have succeeded in utterly destroying a small force of seven hundred which was now quite disordered. What happened was really this: seeing the Muslims pursuing them in disorder, and finding the archers' position vacated, a party of the enemy directed a severe attack against the Holy Prophet to cover the retreat of the rest, and when the Muslims became aware of the danger and rallied round the Prophet, the enemy retreated secure from pursuit.

508 The persons spoken of here are the disaffected who had taken no part in the fighting, but some of them might have remained with the Muslims. They now gave vent to their hidden rancour against the Muslims. The evil thoughts which they entertained about Allah, were, that Allah had not helped them as the Prophet had said. ظن الجا هلية means either thoughts of the party of ignorance or of the days of ignorance.

509 Their murmurings were due to the fact that their counsel as to remaining in Medina and defending themselves within the town was not accepted, for the opinion of the majority was in favour of meeting the enemy in the open field.

510 Their contention was that the disaster would not have befallen the Muslims if their advice as to remaining within the town had been accepted.

511 By those for whom slaughter was ordained are meant the Muslims, slaughter here meaning the slaughter of, or fighting with, the enemy. The weak-hearted who murmured are told that even if they had not marched forth to meet the enemy the true believers would surely have come out, and the desertion of the weak-hearted would not have deterred the true believers (Rz). Or, the meaning may be that the disaster was the result of disobedience, and even if they had remained within Medina, disobedience would have brought about a similar result.

155–157. Cause of the trouble. 158, 159. Necessity of consultation. 160–163. The Prophet would not have deprived the archers of their share, for he was not only pure but a purifier of others. 164–167. The hypocrites separated. 168–170. The martyrs.

155 O you who believe! be not like those who disbelieve and say of their brethren when they travel in the earth or engage in fighting: Had they been with us, they would not have died and they would not have been slain;[513] so Allah makes this to be an intense regret in their hearts; and Allah gives life and causes death; and Allah sees what you do.

156 And if you are slain in the way of Allah or you die, certainly forgiveness from Allah and mercy is better than what they amass.

157 And if indeed you die or you are slain, certainly to Allah shall you be gathered together.

158 Thus it is due to mercy from Allah that you deal with them gently, and had you been rough, hard-hearted, they 512 This explains what is meant by Allah's testing what is in the hearts. He knows it, and His testing it means making it manifest to others.

513 By "their brethren" are meant their relatives who had accepted Islam, and who were not therefore now safe when they travelled in the land, or who had to lay down their lives in defence of their faith. Yet ultimately they themselves had to regret not having accepted Islam.

514 It is remarkable that the Holy Qur-án calls attention to the Prophet's gentle dealing with those around him when speaking of his experience in the field of battle as a general leading his men against overwhelming forces, a capacity which required him to be very strict in punishing any delinquency, especially when disobedience to express orders had brought about such a heavy disaster. But no, he was not a mere general. His ability in leading his men, in occupying positions of advantage in the field of battle, and in directing a handful of men to face three, four, and sometimes ten times their own number, marks him out as the ablest general the world has ever seen, yet his gentle manners and his practical forbearance in dealing with his friends as well as foes stand in remarkable contrast with his capacity as a commander in the field of battle. It is related that after the Uhud trouble the Prophet did not speak even a harsh word to those who were guilty of disobeying his orders (Rz).

The Qur-án is full of references to the Holy Prophet's gentleness and kind dealing with his fellow-men. The following verse gives us an insight into this trait of his character: "Certainly an apostle has come to you from among yourselves; grievous to him is your falling into distress, excessively solicitous respecting you, to the believers he is compassionate, merciful" (9 : 128).

515 The Prophet had gone out to meet the enemy as the result of a council, and against his own inclination, for he sided with the minority in the opinion that they should not meet the enemy in the open field. Apparently that council had brought about the present trouble, yet so firm was he in adhering to sound principles that at such a critical time he did not waver for a minute from the course of taking counsel in important matters, and just at this juncture we find Divine revelation clearly laying down the principle of adhering to counsel.

516 It should be noted that trusting in Allah, in the language of the Qur-án, does not imply inaction. Everything necessary is to be done, a course of action must be deter-

161 Is then he who follows the pleasure of Allah like him who has made himself deserving of displeasure from Allah, and his abode is hell; and it is an evil destination.

162 There are (varying) grades with Allah, and Allah sees what they do.

163 Certainly Allah conferred a benefit upon the believers when He raised among them an Apostle from among themselves, reciting to them His communications and purifying them, and teaching them the Book and the wisdom, although before that they were surely in manifest error.

164 What! when a misfortune befell you, and you had certainly afflicted (the unbelievers) with twice as much, you began to say: Whence is this? Say: It is from yourselves; surely Allah has power over all things.[518] mined in the proper manner, and then in pursuing that course trust must be placed in Allah, which clearly implies that a man should do his utmost and then leave the consequences in Allah's hand; that is, he must be resigned to what follows, taking the consequences with a cool mind.

517 The disaster at Uhud was due to the fact that some of the archers thought they would be deprived of their share in the booty. They are told that an ordinary commander might have been guilty of such unfaithfulness towards his men, but not a prophet, who was raised for the purification of others (see v. 163).

518 The unbelievers had already suffered twice at the hands of the Muslims, once in the field of Badr and again in the early stages of the battle of Uhud.

519 If they could not realize what was meant by fighting in Allah's way they could easily see that they stood in need of defending themselves. In fact, the alternative phrase is introduced to explain the necessity of fighting to such as were unable to grasp the real significance of fighting in Allah's way, or in the cause of truth, for self-defence required the community to fight for its life.

Or, that it was a fight.

520 Or the meaning may be, if we knew that it was a fight, it being implied that the Muslims were going, not to fight, but to sure destruction with such a disparity in numbers.

521 The Meccan army was pursued the next day to a place known as Ḥamrá-ul-asad, under which name the expedition is known; but they dare not encounter the Muslims, notwithstanding their superior numbers. The verses that follow (172–174) refer to the expedition known as Badr-uṣ-Ṣughrá (the smaller Badr) undertaken next year because Abu Sufyan, commander of the Meccan army, announced, when leaving the field of Uhud, that he would meet the Muslims the following year at Badr, but notwithstanding its threats the Meccan army never marched forth.

522 An emissary hired by the Meccans to spread terror among the Muslims, said to be Nu'aim, is the devil spoken of here (Rz). At any rate it was the devil in human form.

523 The same idea, though in more general terms, as to the effect of deeds being bound to the neck, is expressed in 17 : 13 : "And We have made every man's actions to cling to his neck ; and We will bring forth to him on the resurrection day a book which he will find wide open." Thus every man carries the effect of his deeds with him in this life, but on the day of resurrection that effect will become clearly visible. Thus is the effect of niggardliness made to cling to the necks of the niggardly. The verse no doubt gives us a picture of the holy mind, which hated niggardliness, of one of whom it is said in trustworthy reports that he never rejected a petitioner and that he was the most charitable of men.

524 These were certain Jews who ridiculed the poverty of the Muslims and their borrowings from the Jewish money-lenders. They also ridiculed the raising of funds for the defence of the faith by subscriptions. See 716 and 5 : 64.

525 The reference is to the burnt-offerings of the Mosaic law, for which see Lev. 1 : 9 : "And the priest shall burn all on the altar, to be a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire," and Deut. 33 : 10 where, blessing Israel, Moses says: "They shall put incense before thee, and whole burnt-sacrifice upon thine altar." Compare also Lev. 8 : 18. The demand of the Jews that the Holy Prophet should bring to them an offering which the fire should consume is only a demand for the burnt-offering of the Israelite law, so that what they persisted in was that the promised prophet should be an Israelite and should revive the Israelite law, forgetting the promise of Deut. 18 : 18, which only promised a prophet from among their brethren, i.e. the Ishmaelites, and a prophet like Moses, who could not therefore be a follower of the Mosaic law.

526 The carpers are here told that they even killed those prophets who followed the Mosaic law, who came "with that which you demand," hence their rejection was due to the stubbornness of their hearts and not to want of proof.

527 The prophets are said to have come with three things—with arguments and with the zubur and the illuminating book, and I have translated zubur as meaning the scriptures. Zubur is the plural of zubrah, which means a big piece of iron, and of zabúr, which signifies a written thing. According to Rgh every book which is hard in writing is called a zabúr. According to LL zabúr signifies a divine book which it is difficult to become acquainted with. Zj says every book full of wisdom is a zabúr (Rz). The commentators generally understand by the zubur the sacred scriptures of the prophets and by the illuminating book the book containing the Mosaic law, though some would add in the latter category the Psalms of David and the Gospel of Jesus (Rz). I am of opinion that by the zubur are here meant the prophecies or the merely prophetic writings, and by the illuminating book the book containing the guidance which every prophet brought to his people, so that they should follow those directions.

528 This was never so true as at the present time. During the past century Muslims have constantly been turned out of their homes, and Muslim States have been swept out of and guard (against evil), surely this is one of the affairs (which should be) determined upon.

186 And when Allah made a covenant with those who were given the Book: You shall certainly make it known to men and you shall not hide it; but they cast it behind their backs and took a small price for it; so evil is that which they buy.

187 Do not think those who rejoice for what they have done and love that they should be praised for what they have not done—so do by no means think them to be safe from the chastisement, and they shall have a painful chastisement.

188 And Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth, and Allah has power over all things.

Title and connection.

THIS chapter is named the women because it deals chiefly with the rights of women.

Though the concluding words of the last chapter and the opening words of this are almost identical, yet the real connection of the two lies in the fact that the latter portion of the third chapter deals with the battle of Uhud, while this opens with a discussion of the circumstances to which that battle had given rise. For the decimation of the Muslim force had left a large number of orphans and widows to be looked after, and it is with duties towards these two classes that the chapter opens.

Subject-matter.

As already stated, this chapter deals chiefly with the circumstances arising out of the battle of Uhud, and this fact must be borne in mind in considering the question of the continuity and uniformity of its subject-matter. The chief features of the battle of Uhud were the large number of the Muslims killed and the desertion of the hypocrites; while following it were circumstances which brought about a final rupture with the Jews. The first of these circumstances necessitated a discussion of the rights of orphans and women, and the first six sections are accordingly taken up with that subject. The opening section lays down injunctions relating to the duties of guardians towards their orphan wards. The second section brings woman to a status of equality with man, and lays down a new law of inheritance, for among the Arabs a woman had no right to inherit the property of a deceased relative. The third section deals with the treatment of women in general and denounces the practice of claiming women as a part of inheritance. The fourth section discusses what women may not be taken in marriage, and the fifth gives them the right of disposing of their earnings as they please; while the sixth first points out the remedy when there is a disagreement between the husband and the wife and then inculcates the principle of charity in general, introducing the subject of hypocrisy towards its close.

After having laid stress, in the seventh and the eighth sections, upon external as well as internal purity, showing how the Jews had neglected the latter of these and how, for no other reason than envy of the Muslims, they had sided with the polytheists, and after having enjoined upon the Muslims to be strictly firm in justice, we are led on in the ninth section to the dealings of the hypocrites who had refused to accept the Prophet's judgment in going out to meet the enemy, and then told in the tenth that the question of war was a question of life and death for the Muslims. The eleventh section deals with the attitude of the hypocrites, and the twelfth shows how waverers are to be dealt with. The thirteenth states when and to what extent a murderer of a Muslim is excusable, because it was very often by treachery or hypocrisy that the Muslims were killed; while the fourteenth shows that those Muslims who were compelled to remain with the enemy against their own wishes were excusable. The fifteenth warns the Muslims against being surprised in battle when saying their prayers. The sixteenth and the seventeenth refer to the secret counsels of the hypocrites. The eighteenth condemns idolatry, because it is the idolatrous hypocrites that are spoken of throughout the previous sections, and the subject is thus brought to a close.

Previous to the introduction of the third chief subject of this chapter there is a reversion in the nineteenth section to equitable dealings with orphans and women, and the subject is generalized in the twentieth; while in the same section the hypocrites from among the Jews are dealt with. The next predicts their end, at the same time showing that belief in previous prophets could do them no good if they rejected the Holy Prophet. The twenty-second speaks of their transgressions and of their false allegations regarding the death of Jesus on the cross. The twenty-third section tells them that the whole of the previous prophecy pointed to the appearance of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, while the last one, after referring briefly to Christian error in deifying Jesus, closes with a reversion to the subject of inheritance, hinting at the passing of the inheritance of prophethood from the house of Israel to the house of Ishmael.

Date of revelation.

As this chapter treats of many of the questions arising out of the battle of Uhud, there seems to be little doubt that it was revealed immediately after that battle. And thus, as in arrangement so in the order of revelation, it follows the last chapter. The main portion of it thus belongs to the fourth year of Hejira, while there is no reason to deny that some portions may have been revealed towards the close of the third or the beginning of the fifth year. Noeldeke's suggestion, however, that vv. 115–125 and 130–132 belong to Meccan revelation, based as it is on the mere fact that the Jews are there "referred to in a friendly spirit," is quite wrong, because, as shown in 488 and elsewhere, the Holy Prophet was fair to the Jews even when they were most inimical to him, and the verses referred to may therefore belong to the fourth or the fifth year of the Hejira.

Duties of Guardians towards their Orphan Wards

1. Respect for ties of relationship. 2. Property of orphans not to be wasted. 3, 4. Polygamous marriages permitted for the care of orphans. 5, 6. Guardianship of orphans. 7. Inheritance to devolve on males as well as females. 8, 9. Distant but poor relatives to be treated charitably. 10. Warning against embezzlement of property of orphans.

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

1 O people! be careful of (your duty to) your Lord, who created you from a single being and created its mate of the same (kind)[531] and spread from these two many men and women;[532] and be careful of (your duty to) Allah, by whom you demand one of another (your rights), and (to) the ties of relationship;[533] surely Allah ever watches over you.

531 The word nafs has two significances. Abu Ishaq says: "The word nafs is used in the language of the Arabs in two ways, one of which is your saying خرجت نفسه where by nafs is implied rúh or soul, and according to the other use the significance of nafs is the whole of a thing, and its essence" (TA). It is in this latter sense that the creation of mates is spoken of in the Holy Qur-án, and hence the correct rendering of nafs on such occasions is kind, which implies the essence. This is made clear in 16:72: "And Allah has made wives for you from among yourselves," i.e. of the same kind and essence as you are. The original words which are rendered in the verse quoted above as meaning from among yourselves are min anfusi-kum, which may mean either from your souls or from your kind, and it will be seen that the latter significance is the only one that can be accepted. Some commentators have taken this to be the significance here, among them Ibn-i-Bahr and Abu Muslim, who give the significance as being خلق من جنسها زوجها i.e. He created its mate of the same kind (AH, Rz). Hasan also explains the words as meaning من جنسها i.e. of the same kind (AH on 7:189).

Thus the words declare the unity of the human race and the equality of the male and the female.

532 "Many men and women" spring from married pairs. I do not think that the verse necessarily refers to any parent pair of the whole of mankind. The underlying significance seems to be to remind men of the strength of the ties of relationship, an idea finding clear expression in what follows.

533 The original word is arḥám, plural of raḥim, which means womb or the place of origin of the young; hence relationship (by some restricted to relationship by the female side only) or ties of relationship (TA-LL). Hence وصل الرحم indicates kindness to kindred, and قطع الرحم unkind behaviour to kindred.

534 The care of the orphan was one of the very first injunctions which Islam laid down, and the Holy Prophet had always shown a deep anxiety for the welfare of the poor and the orphans, whom he required to be treated in no way beneath other members of society. See 282 and 283, and also 90 : 15, 16, which describe the care of "the orphan and the poor man lying in dust" as an up-hill task, but one which must be accomplished. The subject is here introduced in detail on account of the number of orphans having been greatly increased by the war.

535 This passage permits polygamy under certain circumstances: it does not enjoin it nor even permit it unconditionally. It may be noted here that the explanation of this passage as generally understood is based on a report contained in the Muslim, according to which 'Áyesha understood this verse as meaning that if the guardians of orphan girls feared that by marrying them they would not be able to do justice to them, they should marry other women. This explanation, even if the report be taken to be authentic, requires the insertion into the passage of a number of words which the original does not contain, and as the meaning is much more clear, and more in consonance with the context, without the addition of these words, the interpretation given below is preferable. It is admitted that this chapter was revealed to guide the Muslims under the conditions which followed the battle of Uhud, and the last portion of the last chapter deals with that battle. Now in that battle 70 men out of 700 Muslims had been slain, and this decimation had largely decreased the number of males, who, being the breadwinners, were the natural guardians and supporters of the females. The number was likely to suffer a still greater diminution in the battles which had yet to be fought, while the number of women would be increased by the addition of prisoners of war. Thus many orphans would be left in the charge of widows, who would find it difficult to procure the necessary means of support. Hence in the first verse of this chapter the Muslims are enjoined to respect the ties of relationship, and as they all came from a single ancestor, a breadth is introduced into the idea of relationship, inasmuch as they are told that they are all in fact related to each other. In the second verse the care of orphans is particularly enjoined. In the third verse we are told that if they could not do justice to the orphans, they might marry the widows, whose children would thus become their own children, and as the number of women was now much greater than the number of men, they were permitted to marry even two or three or four women. It would thus be clear that the permission to have more than one wife was given under the peculiar circumstances of the Muslim society then existing, and the Prophet's action in marrying widows, as well as the example of many of his companions, corroborates this statement. Marriage with orphan girls is also sanctioned in this passage, for there were the same difficulties in the case of orphan girls as in the case of widows, and the words are general. See also 631.

It may be added here that polygamy in Islam is both in theory and in practice an exception, not a rule, and as an exception it is a remedy for many of the evils especially prevalent in European society. It is not only the preponderance of females over males that necessitates polygamy in certain cases, but there is a variety of other circumstances which require polygamy to be adopted under exceptional circumstances, not only for the moral but also for the physical welfare of society. Prostitution, the great evil of civilization, which is a real canker, with its concomitant increase of bastardy, is practically unknown to countries where polygamy is allowed as a remedial measure.

536 By what your right hands possess are meant the females who were taken prisoners in war. The Qur-án sanctions marriage with them in this verse. As for the conditions of that marriage, see 561. I do not find any verse in the Holy Qur-án, or any instance in the Prophet's life, sanctioning so-called concubinage.

537 It is necessary that a "dowry" should be given to every woman taken in marriage, whether she is a free woman, an orphan girl, or a prisoner of war. So every woman begins her married life as the owner of some property, and thus marriage is the means of raising her status, in many respects elevating her to a plane of equality with her husband.

538 By your property is meant the property of the orphans which is under your control as guardians. The verse lays down the principle of the Court of Wards. It requires guardianship in the case of all who are weak of understanding, whether minors or others.

539 Qiyám is an infinitive noun, and means a sustenance or that which maintains or supports. As property is the means of support or sustenance, it is called a support or sustenance. While on the one hand the Qur-án lays stress on the transitoriness of this life, on the other it teaches that wealth is not a thing to be despised or wasted, because it is the chief means of support.

540 According to AH the meaning of وارزقوهم فيها is: "Make it a means of sustaining them so that you trade with it and make it profitable, and so that you may be able to defray their expenses from the profit and not from the capital." Rz gives a similar explanation. There is also a saying of the Holy Prophet in this connection: "Trading should be resorted to with respect to the property of the orphans so that the poor-rate may not consume it" (AH).

541 According to Abú Ḥanífah puberty is attained at eighteen years, which is therefore the limit of minority, but if at that age maturity of intellect is not attained, the limit may be extended (Bd, Rz).

542 The meaning is: do not hasten to spend the property of minors with a view to wasting it before they attain their majority.

543 These words allow payment of reasonable wages to the manager of a ward's estate out of a ward's property if the manager is not a rich man. The amount charged must be reasonable, taking into consideration the value of the property and the work of management.

544 Among the Arabs women and children had no share in inheritance, for they used to say: "None shall inherit but he who smites with the spear" (Rz). The reason is to be found in the fact that the normal condition in Arabia before Islam was a continual state of war, and only those who could go out to fight were taken into account. This great reform, by which the status of women was raised from the lowest condition to that of equality with man, clearly indicated that peace would be established in the peninsula.

The principle laid down in this verse is the basis of the Muslim law of inheritance. Children and near relatives, or failing these, distant relatives, whether males or females, are the lawful heirs, and the whole of the property does not go to the eldest son. Whatever objection there may be to this principle on the ground of division of property into parcels, there is not the least doubt that the rule is in accordance with the broad principle of the brotherhood of man which Islam seeks to establish.

545 By these are meant those distant relatives who for any reason are not entitled to inherit (Rz).

11. Case of children and of parents with or without children. 12. Share of husband or wife with or without children and share of sisters and brothers when there are no children. 13, 14. Punishment for breaking the law.

11 Allah enjoins you concerning your children: the male shall have the equal of the portion of two females; then if they are more than two females,[546] they shall have two-thirds of what the deceased has left, and if there is one, she shall have the half; and as for his parents, each of them shall have the sixth of what he has left if he has a child, but if he has no child and (only) his two parents inherit him, then his mother shall have the third; but if he has brothers, then his mother shall have the sixth after (the payment of) a bequest he may have bequeathed or a debt;[547] your parents and your children, you know not which of them is the nearer to you in usefulness; this is an ordinance from Allah: surely Allah is Knowing, Wise.

546 By females are here meant the female children. When the daughters are the sole heirs they are entitled to a share of two-thirds. The share of two-thirds to which "more than two" daughters are entitled remains the same even when the daughters are two only; and so in practice they have always been judged to be entitled to two-thirds of the property. This is further evident from the analogy of two sisters, who are entitled to two-thirds of the property when they are the sole heirs (see v. 177). As to those different cases in which there are others who inherit along with them, they are also considered in this verse and in that which follows.

547 This is the second case, and it deals with the question of inheritance when the deceased is survived by parents. In this case the parents first take their respective shares, and the residue goes to the children, if there are any, failing which, the share of the parents is increased. But in case the deceased has brothers the mother receives the same share as she would have received if the deceased had children.

It may be noted that in all cases the payment of bequests and debts take precedence of the shares of the heirs.

اللَّهُ عَلِيمٌ حَلِيمٌ ۝

548 This is the third case, and it deals with the question when the deceased leaves a husband or a wife with or without children. The husband or the wife takes his or her share first, as in the case of parents, and the residue goes to the children.

If there are parents as well as husband or wife and children, the first two would take their shares first, and the residue would go to the children, whether males alone or females alone or males and females mixed. The two-thirds share for two or more daughters can only be given when there are neither parents, nor husband or wife; otherwise they take the residue, as in the case of sons or sons and daughters.

I know that practice is against this, and it is due to this that what is technically known as 'aul is rendered necessary. The 'aul, as reports show, was first legalized by 'Ali, the fourth Caliph, who, being questioned about the share of a wife, the other heirs being the two parents and two daughters, gave the answer "without premeditation" that the wife's one-eighth had become one-ninth, for the two parents should take one-third, the two daughters two-thirds, and the wife one-eighth, which being added up would give nine-eighths, and hence 'Ali decided that each of the heirs should take less than was due, so that the proportion might remain the same (TA). The difficulty would not have arisen if there had been sons instead of daughters or sons along with daughters. If 'Ali had decided to give the residue to the two daughters after taking away the wife's one-eighth and the parents' one-third, as he would have done in the case of two sons or a son and a daughter, the question of 'aul would not have arisen in this case. Later jurists have only followed 'Ali.

549 By a brother or a sister is meant a brother or a sister on the mother's side (Bd). A similar case when the deceased has neither parents nor offspring, and has brothers or sisters or both (where real brothers and sisters, or brothers and sisters on the father's side are meant), is dealt with in the concluding verse of this chapter.

550 Both these cases deal with the question of inheritance when the deceased is a kalálah, i.e. he leaves neither parents nor children. The brothers and the sisters take the place of children in such a case. As in the case of those who have no children there is much likelihood of their burdening the estate with unnecessary debts, or even admitting debts that have not really been contracted, and of making bequests that would leave nothing for legal heirs, the words without harming others are added to make it clear that debts and bequests in such a case shall not prejudice the rights of the legal heirs.

551 Al-fāḥishah signifies anything exceeding the bounds of rectitude (gross, immodest, lewd, obscene) (Mgh-LL); and fāḥishah, or exceeding the bounds of rectitude, in women may mean their going out without permission (Msb, Mgh-LL) or their using foul language (Ashshafa'i-LL). Though the word is no doubt used sometimes as meaning fornication, the context shows that here it is used to signify any immoral conduct short of fornication, for the punishment of fornication is given elsewhere, and the words of the verse that follows, referring as they do to the same immoral act as is mentioned here, with the indefinite nature of punishment, which in the case of an act short of fornication could not be made definite and ought to be varied with the nature of the crime, strengthens this position. The punishment in the case of women is the curtailing of their liberty, so that they should not be free to go out of their houses. If they then mend their ways, a way is opened for them by Allah, and they regain their liberty; if they do not, the curtailment should be extended till they die. There is no proof for Palmer's assertion that "women taken in adultery or fornication were, at the beginning of Islam, literally immured." See also 556.

552 The crime spoken of in this verse is the same as that in the previous verse. The committers are two, and though the masculine gender is used, it does not imply that they are both necessarily males. In fact, it may imply a male and a female, and reading it along with the previous verse, it is clear that a male and a female are implied. The punishment is indicated in ázá, which means annoying, and might indicate slight punishment or only reproving with the tongue, according to Qatada and others (AH). That the punishment for woman is contained in the previous verse does not prevent this verse from referring to her. The previous verse deals with the case in which woman alone is guilty; this one deals with the case in which the husband as well as the wife may be guilty.

553 The reference to repentance in connection with the mention of fáḥishah in vv. 15 and 16 is further proof that fáḥishah does not here mean fornication, but some immorality short of that, for fornication is punishable criminally, and penitence on the part of those guilty of it cannot avert the punishment.

Verses 17 and 18 show that repentance, according to the Holy Qur-án, implies an actual change in the course of one's life, not the mere utterance of words. In fact, the law stated here shows how repentance does away with sins. When the very course of a man's life is changed in respect of a particular sin, the tendency to that sin is uprooted. But those who continue their evil courses until death overtakes them cannot obtain the benefit of repentance, because there is no time left for them to improve themselves.

554 Among the pre-Islamite Arabs, when a man died his elder son or other relations had a right to possess his widow or widows, marrying them themselves if they pleased without settling a dowry upon them, or marrying them to others, or prohibiting them from marriage altogether (Bkh, Rz). The best authorities agree that the verse remedies this evil. But some commentators adopt the alternative meaning given in the margin, according to which they were prohibited from restraining such women from marrying so that they might become heirs to the property which they possessed (Rz), for in the case of marriage the new husband would become the heir.

555 This passage remedies another evil. Those husbands who were dissatisfied with their wives were wont to give them trouble in order that they should be forced to claim a divorce and remit the dowry (Rz). This is disallowed. So that if the judge finds that the fault lies actually with the husband, he will not allow the dowry to be remitted in favour of the husband.

556 The exception is in reference to taking part of the dowry, the meaning being that part of the dowry can only be taken back if the woman is guilty of indecency. The best received opinion is that فاحشة مبينة or the manifest indecency spoken of here, is hatred and desertion of the husband, refractoriness, and doing harm to the husband and his family (Rz). In such cases, as the fault is on the part of the woman, she may be required to return her dowry wholly or in part. This meaning of fāḥishah, where the significance is intensified by the addition of the qualifying word mubayyinah (i.e. manifest), corroborates the meaning of fāḥishah adopted in v. 15.

557 Another evil of the time of ignorance is thus described by Rz: "It is narrated that when a (married) man among them had a desire to marry another wife in place of the first, he used to accuse the latter of adultery or other gross immorality, thus compelling her to obtain a divorce by paying a large sum of money." The evil is remedied by this verse. As the previous verse mentions a case in which the divorce may be claimed when the wife is dissatisfied with the husband, this mentions a case in which the husband is dissatisfied and desires a divorce. Having one wife in place of another simply signifies the divorcing of the first wife and marrying another.

558 As already pointed out, when a man died his widows were the property of the eldest son, and he could marry any of them that he liked. This immoral practice was abolished by this verse.

What Women may be taken in Marriage

23. Blood and foster relations whom it is not lawful to marry. 24. Other free women. 25. When slave girls could be taken in marriage.

23 Forbidden to you are your mothers and your daughters and your sisters and your paternal aunts and your maternal aunts and brothers' daughters and sisters' daughters and your mothers that have suckled you and your foster-sisters and mothers of your wives and your stepdaughters who are in your guardianship, (born) of your wives to whom you have gone in; but if you have not gone in to them, there is no blame on you (in marrying them), and the wives of your sons who are of your own loins, and that you should have two sisters together, except what has already passed; surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful:[559]

560 Al-Muḥṣanát signifies both free women and married women, and as the previous verse speaks of women whom it is unlawful to take in marriage, the second significance is the one generally adopted here, though, according to 'Umar, free women is the correct rendering (Rz). According to the rendering adopted generally, the meaning is that even as it is unlawful for a man to marry a woman within certain degrees of relationship, it is also unlawful for him to take in marriage one who is already married to another person. An exception is made, however, regarding those whom your right hands possess, by which expression are generally meant in the Holy Qur-án those who are taken prisoners in a war. In the Islamic law prisoners of war were generally set free either on payment of ransom or simply as an act of kindness, as plainly stated in 47 : 4 : "So when you meet in battle those who disbelieve, then smite the necks until you have overcome them, then make them prisoners, and afterwards either set them free as a favour or let them ransom themselves."

But it sometimes happened that those taken prisoners became converts to Islam and marriage, not committing fornication. Then as to those whom you profit by (by marrying), give them their dowries as appointed; and there is no blame on you about what you mutually agree after what is appointed (of dowry); surely Allah is Knowing, Wise.

25 And whoever among you has not within his power ampleness of means to marry free believing women, then (he may marry) of those whom your right hands possess from among your believing maidens; and Allah knows best your faith; you are (sprung) the one from the other; so marry them with the permission of their masters, and give them their dowries justly, they being chaste, not fornicating, nor receiving paramours; and when they are taken in marriage, then if they are guilty of indecency, they shall suffer half the punishment which is (inflicted) upon free women. This is for him among you who fears falling into evil; and that you abstain is better for you, and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[561]

therefore they could not be sent back. Such women it was lawful to take in marriage, even though they might not have been divorced formally by their former husbands. That their conversion to Islam was a necessary condition is clear from the fact that wars of this nature were only carried on with polytheists, and Muslims were not allowed to take a polytheistic woman in marriage, for which see 2:221. As for the conditions under which such women could be taken in marriage, see the verse that follows.

The words má malakat aimán-u-kum may, however, bear a different significance. Aimán is plural of yamín, which bears a number of different significances, viz. the right hand, a good position, power and strength, and a covenant confirmed by an oath. The phrase má malakat aimán-u-kum is taken generally as signifying prisoners of war, because they are taken by superior power. But it is used in a saying of the Holy Prophet as indicating property earned by lawful means, out of which poor-rate must be paid. Such is the explanation given by LA of the well-known saying of the Holy Prophet, الصلوة و ما ملكت ايمانكم Hence má malakat aimán-u-kum may also mean those whom you have lawfully taken in marriage, because lawful possession is clearly implied in the word aimán, which signifies covenant, marriage also being a covenant. The meaning of the passage may therefore be that all free women are prohibited to you except those whom you have lawfully married, and the sense is in this case clear. Adopting this significance, the three verses of this section speak of three classes of women, viz. v. 23 of blood and foster relations, v. 24 of free women in general, v. 25 of prisoners of war. In fact, while v. 23 deals with prohibited degrees, vv. 24 and 25 state respectively how free women and slave girls are made lawful. Or, the meaning is, all married women are prohibited to you except those whom you yourselves have lawfully married.

Women's Rights over their Earnings

28 Allah desires that He should make light your burdens,[562] and man is created weak.[563]

561 This verse lays down the conditions under which those taken prisoners in war may be taken in marriage. I do not find any verse in the Holy Qur-án sanctioning what is called concubinage. On more occasions than one, when the establishment of conjugal relations with slave girls is mentioned, their taking in marriage is clearly indicated, as in v. 3, v. 24, and this verse. Here marriage with those taken prisoners in war is allowed under certain circumstances, the first of these being that they should be believing women or Muslims. Even then it is when a person is unable to find a wife from among free women, and fears to fall into evil, that he is allowed to take a slave girl in marriage. If, then, even marriage with her is allowed under exceptional circumstances, it is quite unreasonable to suppose that her master is allowed to have conjugal relations with her without taking her for a wife. She was no doubt placed on a lower level in Arab society than a free woman, but that is all. Perhaps the strictness of the rules regarding marriage with a female slave is due to the consideration that he who seeks her in marriage may first have her freed from slavery.

But it may be said that this verse speaks of others than the masters of the slave girls, because it requires the permission of the masters. I do not think that limitation can reasonably be placed upon the meanings of the verse, the opening words clearly showing that it is meant for all. The only right the master can reasonably claim is that he does not require the permission of anybody else, and probably also that he need not pay the dowry, but he must still take her as a wife. He cannot, of course, cohabit with her without taking her lawfully as a wife, as otherwise it would be fornication, which is denounced in this very verse.

562 Not only is the rigour of the Jewish and other previous laws greatly modified in Islam, but all principles of right action are stated with such completeness, devoid of unnecessary details, that the real burden of man is actually much more lightened in Islam than in any other religion. It, moreover, points out the right way for man's freedom from the bondage of sin, and thus reduces his burden, not by false assurances, but by actually saving him from falling into evil ways.

563 It is preposterous to take this sentence, and man is created weak, as excusing man's immorality, as some Christian critics have done. The context clearly shows what is meant. These verses speak of Allah's great mercy in having shown man the way to truth and guidance, for man, being created weak, could not chalk out a way for himself which was free from error. That is all that man's weakness here signifies. If he had prepared a way for himself, surely he would have laid himself under a heavy burden, but Allah, who knows the nature of man because He is the Maker, by pointing out the right way, has lightened the burden.

564 The meaning of this verse is that all illegal methods are forbidden, but the seeking of gain one from another by trading, which implies mutual consent, is allowed, being a legal method. Tijárah signifies the seeking of gain by selling and buying (Rz-LL). Though the words are general, the passage is particularly directed to guard women's right to property, because it was women's property that was generally devoured aggressively and unjustly, and aggression and injustice are particularly referred to in the next verse as necessary to be guarded against.

565 Neither this passage nor any other in the Holy Qur-án supports the classification of sin into kabírah and ṣaghírah. The actual commission of any sin is a great evil. There is in man an inclination for evil, as there is an inclination for good, and when a man begins to shun evil, that inclination gradually dies away. Sayyiah or sú' signifies an evil deed as well as an evil affection (LL). The context requires the latter significance to be

Disagreement between Husband and Wife

34. The wife's desertion. 35. Reconcilement, how effected. 36. Faithfulness to one's duty to Allah and duty to men inculcated. 37–42. Niggardliness and hypocrisy condemned.

34 Men are the maintainers[568] of women, because Allah has made some of them to excel others and because they spend out of their property; the good women are therefore obedient,[569] guarding the unseen[570] as Allah has guarded;[571] and (as to) those on whose part you fear desertion, admonish them, and leave them alone in the sleeping-places and beat them; then if they obey you, adopted here. All that is meant is that if a man begins to avoid the commission of sins, the evil inclinations within him begin to die.

566 Mawālī is plural of maulā, which conveys a number of significances, such as lord or chief, a cousin, a freed man, a slave, an heir. The last of these significances is adopted here by the best authorities (AH), and only this suits the context.

567 In the pre-Islamic days, people were accustomed to enter into covenants one with another, by which they undertook to defend each other and to inherit one another; and when one of them died, the other was considered entitled to one-sixth of the property of the deceased (AH). When the Muslims fled to Medina the Holy Prophet made every Meccan emigrant enter into a close relationship of brotherhood with one of the Medina citizens, so that (under the old custom) one of them would have become an heir to the other on his decease (Bkh). But any such share was not allowed by the Holy Qur-án. This verse, however, recommends that something be given. The words give them their portion are taken as meaning the rendering of assistance in general, doing acts of kindness and the giving of good advice, while something may be settled by testament (Bkh).

568 The significance of qawwām is thus explained by TA : قام الرجل المرأة و قام عليها means he maintained her and managed her affair, having charge of her affair; hence he is said to be her qawwām, i.e. maintainer. Similarly, LL has, on the authority of Msb : قام باليتيم او الصّبي i.e. he maintained the orphan or the child. Hence by the men being qawwāmūn is only meant that they are the maintainers of women, and the reason given is that Allah has made some to excel others, i.e. the man excels the woman in constitution and physique, while the woman excels the man in beauty and delicacy of structure.

569 Obedience here signifies obedience to Allah. This significance of the word is made clear by a comparison with 33 : 31, 33 : 35, and 66 : 5.

570 The guarding the unseen is a euphemism for guarding the husband's rights. The two qualifications of a good wife as given here are her piety or obedience to Allah and chastity, i.e. she must be careful of her duty to Allah and to her husband (Rz).

571 The meaning is that their guarding the husband's rights is in reality a favour from Allah, as it is Allah that really guards them (Rz). Or the meaning may be, because Allah has enjoined it to be guarded.

do not seek a way against them; surely Allah is High, Great.[572]

35 And if you fear a breach between the two, then appoint a judge from his people and a judge from her people; if they both desire agreement, Allah will effect harmony between them; surely Allah is Knowing, Aware.[573]

36 And serve Allah and do not associate any thing with Him, and be good to the parents and to the near of kin and the orphans and the needy and the neighbour of (your) kin and the alien neighbour,[574] and the companion in a journey and the wayfarer and those whom your right hands possess;[575] surely Allah does not love him who is proud, boastful:

يُحِبُّ مَن كَانَ مُخْتَالًا فَخُورًا ○

572 After having spoken of the husband's obligation to maintain the wife, the holy Word states the wife's obligation not to desert her husband. The word nushúz, which I have translated as desertion, primarily means rising, and as spoken of a woman in connection with her husband it means her rising against her husband. This is explained in a number of ways; according to one of these explanations it means her leaving the husband's place and taking up an abode which he does not like (AH). And LL quotes various authorities explaining the phrase نشزت المرأة على زوجها which means the wife resisted her husband and hated him (S, Q) and deserted him (TA).

The remedy pointed out when the wife's desertion is feared is threefold. At first she is only to be admonished. If she desists, the evil is mended, but if she persists in the wrong course her bed is to be separated. If she still persists, chastisement is permitted as a last resort (Rz). Regarding this last remedy two things must, however, be borne in mind. Firstly, it is a mere permission, and sayings of the Holy Prophet make it clear that, though allowed, it was discouraged in practice. Thus the Prophet is reported to have said, on the complaint of certain women as to ill-treatment by their husbands: "You will not find these men as the best among you" (Rz). According to Shafa'í it is preferable not to resort to chastisement of the wife (Rz). In fact, as the injunctions of the Qur-án are wide in their scope, the example of the Holy Prophet and his constant exhortations for kind treatment towards women, so much so that he made a man's good treatment of his wife the gauge of his goodness in general—the best of you is he who is best to his wife—show clearly that this permission is meant only for that type of men and women who belong to a low grade of society. Secondly, even this permission cannot be adopted indiscriminately, for sayings of the Holy Prophet make it quite evident that chastisement, when resorted to in extreme cases, must be very slight. I'Ab says it may be with a tooth-brush or something like it (AH).

573 There is much food for reflection in this for those who think that Islam allows divorce on the slightest pretext. When a breach occurs the Qazi's first duty is to appoint judges on both sides with the object of effecting a reconciliation; it is only when judges fail to bring about a reconciliation that a divorce is allowed. The wife can obtain a divorce through the Qazi or the judge who is legally entitled to pronounce a divorce.

37 Those who are niggardly and bid people to be niggardly and hide what Allah has given them out of His grace; and We have prepared for the unbelievers a disgraceful chastisement:

38 And those who spend their property (in alms) to be seen of the people and do not believe in Allah nor in the last day; and as for him whose associate is the devil, an evil associate is he!

39 And what (harm) would it have done them if they had believed in Allah and the last day and spent (benevolently) of what Allah had given them? and Allah knows them.

40 Surely Allah does not do injustice to the weight of an atom, and if it is a good deed He multiplies it and gives from Himself a great reward.[576]

41 How will it be, then, when We bring from every
Ar. thee. people a witness and bring you as a witness against these?[576A]

42 On that day will those who disbelieve and disobey the Apostle desire that the earth were levelled with them, and they shall not hide any word from Allah.

Cases were decided in accordance with the directions contained in this verse in the early days of Islam. See an instance quoted by Rz regarding Ali's decision in a case of breach. The husband was told in plain words that he must abide by the judgment of the judges appointed under this verse.

574 By الجار ذى القربى some understand a neighbour who is a relative and others a Muslim neighbour, and similarly by الجار الجنب a neighbour not related or a neighbour of an alien religion (AH). The latter phrase (the qualifying word being derived from janb, meaning a side) signifies, according to lexicologists, the person who is one's neighbour but who belongs to another people (LL). Thus the charity of Islam is not limited to one's own people or one's own co-religionists, but is extended to aliens also.

575 By those whom your right hands possess are meant all those with whose care a man is entrusted, so that it includes even animals over which a man has control (AH, Rz).

576 Such is the ever-recurring description of the preponderance of mercy in Divine nature: good is always multiplied and evil nullified. The constant multiplication of good shows no doubt that good must ultimately preponderate in the universe, and thus the Divine laws working in nature point to the fact that the universe is moving towards the goal of absolute good.

(Ar. shahid) against them, because, if they reject the truth which he brings to them, he bears testimony to their rejection before Allah.

577 There is some difference of opinion as to what is meant by sukárá here. Literally the singular sakarán signifies one intoxicated, but while some consider the meaning here to be intoxicated with drink, others think it to be intoxicated with sleep (TA-LL, Dk-Rz). And sakr, no doubt, may be applied in the latter sense, for its literal significance is stopping up (LL, Rz). Hence we have in the Holy Qur-án سكرت ابصارنا meaning our eyes have been covered over or prevented from seeing (15 : 15). The word is also applied to confusion of judgment (LL).

If the verse be supposed to be a later revelation than the prohibition of drink, Dk's rendering would undoubtedly be the correct one; if not, the injunction would be the first step towards the total prohibition of drink, for the necessity of going to prayer five times a day would afford little opportunity for indulgence in drink.

578 The word which I render by this lengthy phrase is junub (from janb, meaning a side). To render it as meaning impure or polluted is incorrect, and no lexicologist supports it. It is a purely technical term, and means one who is under an obligation to perform a total ablution or bathing (LL). The connection with the root-meaning is that the person under such obligation is on a side or remote from prayer (Rgh). The idea of impurity in one who is under such obligation is not met with in the Holy Qur-án or any saying of the Holy Prophet. The necessity to perform a total ablution arises in case of sexual intercourse.

579 Or going near prayer in this case may signify going into mosques (I'Ab-Rz), and the meaning of الا عابرى سبيل in that case would be unless you pass (through the mosques) as by a way.

580 The touching of women is a euphemism for sexual intercourse. Many of the fine phrases used in the Holy Qur-án to express this delicate relation were unknown to the Arabs before the revelation of the Holy Qur-án, and while human necessities rendered reference to such relations necessary, words and forms were adopted which would not shock the most delicate ears.

581 Ṣa'íd (from ṣa'ad-a, i.e. he ascended or went up) means high or elevated ground, hence generally land or ground or surface of the earth, whether it be dust or earth or otherwise (Zj-LL). Tayammum, which has now become a technical term (from amma, meaning he repaired), meant originally only betaking oneself to a thing, and technically it now means striking both hands on pure earth, or any thing containing pure dust, and then passing the hands over the face and the backs of the hands. When water is not found, or is likely to do harm, tayammum suffices instead of wuḍú, or ablution before prayer.

582 The corruption of the previous books is constantly referred to in the Holy Qur-án, and, as the words clearly show, it implies a corruption of the text as well as a false rendering of it. It is unreasonable on the part of the apologists of the Bible to deny such corruption when clear instances of it have been pointed out. The subject of the perversion of "holy writ" is specially dealt with in the Holy Qur-án in 2:75–79, 5:13, 41, and here. The verification referred to here in v. 47 and elsewhere implies only a verification of the general principles and particularly of the prophecies contained in those books and bearing witness to the truth of the previous revelation, and does not in any way negative the corruption and alteration of the text, which is only too apparent to be seriously contested.

583 Two kinds of punishment are here described as awaiting the Jews. The first of these is expressed in the words نطمس وجوها which literally signify we obliterate or alter

48 Surely Allah does not forgive that any thing should be associated with Him, and forgives what is besides that to whomsoever He pleases ; and whoever associates any thing with Allah, he devises indeed a great sin.[584]

Every Leaning to Injustice and Evil to be shunned

51–53. Jews prefer idolaters to Muslims. 54. It is Abraham's seed that has been blessed. 55–57. Recompense of unbelief and faith. 58. Judges and judgment. 59. Obedience to the Apostle and other authority.

faces. But the phrase is evidently a metaphorical one, and the alteration of faces signifies depriving them of greatness and prosperity and bringing on them disgrace and adversity (Bd).

The same idea is intensified in turn them on their backs. The reference here is supposed to be to their ultimate banishment from Arabia. But the words may carry the significance given in the margin, for wujúh sometimes signifies the chiefs and the leaders (Rgh, art. ṭams; Rz, Bd).

The second form of punishment is their being overtaken by the curse which overtook the Sabbath-breakers, for which see 107.

584 The reference to polytheism, or the setting up of gods with Allah, which is called shirk in the language of the Holy Qur-án, as the gravest sin of which man can be guilty, is made more than once in the Holy Qur-án. And this is not because shirk in any way diminishes the grandeur of the Divine Being, but because it lowers the dignity of human nature. Man is made to rule nature itself and all creatures, but when he lowers himself before mortals like himself, or before creatures lower than himself whom he was really made to rule, he sets at naught the very purpose of his creation. It should be noted, however, that this only means that the polytheist, having degraded himself, cannot rise without suffering the consequences; not that his punishment would be everlasting.

585 The original word is jibt, which means an idol or idols (LL), or any thing worshipped to the exclusion of Allah, or enchanter, or diviner (Rgh), or enchantment (S̱'alabi-LL). Some consider it to be the same word as jibs, which means a worthless thing (Rz) or a thing in which there is no good. It is related that in making a compact with the Quraish the Jews

Ar. thou shalt.

52 Those are they whom Allah has cursed, and whomever Allah curses, you shall not find any helper for him.

53 Or have they a share in the kingdom? But then they would not give to people even the speck in the date-stone.[586]

54 Or do they envy the people for what Allah has given them of His grace? But indeed We have given to Abraham's children the Book and the wisdom, and We have given them a grand kingdom.[587]

55 So of them[588] is he who believes in him, and of them is he who turns away from him,[589] and hell is sufficient to burn.

56 (As for) those who disbelieve in Our communications, We shall make them enter fire; so oft as their skins are thoroughly burned We will change them for other skins,[590] that they may taste the chastisement; surely Allah is Mighty, Wise.

57 And (as for) those who believe and do good deeds, We will make them enter gardens beneath which rivers flow, to abide in them for ever; they shall have therein pure mates,[a] worshipped their idols (Rz), but the words seem to refer to the general debasement of the Jews, who believed in all kinds of enchantment, divination, and sorcery, and had long bidden farewell to the pure monotheism of Moses.

586 The meaning is that they have no share in granting a kingdom; if they had any such share they would not give even the most trifling thing in it to any one else. The reference is apparently to the temporal and spiritual kingdom which was promised to Abraham's seed, as clearly spoken of in the next verse, and which, the Jews alleged, could not be granted to any but their own people.

587 The kingdom of heaven, which is the grand kingdom, was still in Abraham's seed, but was now transferred from the descendants of Israel to those of Ishmael, in accordance with the covenant made with Abraham (see 168).

588 The children of Abraham, among whom were the Jews, are meant.

589 The personal pronoun is either for Abraham or for the Holy Prophet Muhammad. In the first case, it should be noted that turning away from the Holy Prophet was equivalent to turning away from Abraham, because he was the true exponent of Abraham's religion.

590 The form used signifies the continuance of the torment (Rz), in accordance with the metaphor of fire.

Ar. a dense shade.

and We shall make them enter (a state of) great happiness.[591]

58 Surely Allah commands you to make over trusts[592] to those worthy of them, and that when you judge between people, you judge with justice; surely Allah admonishes you with what is excellent; surely Allah is Seeing, Hearing.

59 O you who believe! obey Allah and obey the Apostle and those in authority from among you; then if you quarrel about any thing, refer it to Allah and the Apostle, if you believe in Allah and the last day;[593] this is (the) better (part) and very good in the end.[594]

واطيعوا الرسول واولي الامر منكم فان

591 The original words are ظلا ظليلا from ẓill, meaning shade. But according to Waḥidí, ẓill among the Arabs implied happiness (Rz); and, according to Rgh, ẓill implies mightiness and inaccessibility and also a state of ease; and according to the same authority the words are used here in allusion to happiness and pleasantness of life.

592 If the incident that after the conquest of Mecca the Holy Prophet gave back the key of the Ka'aba to Othman, its first holder, has any connection with the verse, then it should afford an illustration of the real significance of the verse. It not only includes the payment of the trusts of money to their owners, but also the entrusting of the affairs of government to those who are worthy of handling them properly. The words that follow, requiring judges to be just, corroborate this significance, the whole verse stating the reciprocal duties of the governed to the governors and of the governors to the governed. Even taking the more apparent significance, the words show the breadth of the Islamic doctrine, which requires its followers to be true to their trusts, irrespective of the religion or nationality of those on whose account they are held.

593 The passage lays down a most important rule for the guidance of Muslims. Above all authorities with a true Muslim is the authority of Allah and His Apostle, but those who are in authority are also to be obeyed. Among those in authority are included the rulers of a land, though they may belong to an alien religion, as the Holy Prophet's example in his relations with the Christian kingdom of Abyssinia shows. The words ulul-amr, or those in authority, have a wide significance, so that in different matters relating to the life of man different persons would be in authority. The term also includes the Muslim religious leaders, but, as the words if you quarrel about any thing, refer it to Allah and the Apostle show, if a religious leader goes against the teachings of the Holy Qur-án he should not be obeyed. A reference to Allah and the Apostle in case of a quarrel or dispute means a reference to the directions of the Holy Qur-án and the sayings and practice of the Holy Prophet.

594 Ta'wíl (from ála, i.e. he returned) is the infinitive noun of اوله اليه i.e. he returned it to him, hence its extensive use to signify interpretation, because the words are returned to that sense. But from the same original sense of returning follows its use in the sense of marja', i.e. final sequel, and 'áqibat, i.e. issue, end, result (Rz, Bd-LL), and this is the significance which suits the context here.

Hypocrites refuse to accept the Prophet's Judgment

60–64. Hypocrites' leaning to devil. 65. Prophet's judgment must be accepted. 66–70. Obedience to Allah and the Prophet shall bring great reward.

Ar. hast thou. Ar. thee. Ar. thee.

60 Have you not considered those who assert that they believe in what has been revealed to you and what was revealed before you? they desire to summon one another to the judgment of the devil,[595] though they were commanded to deny him, and the devil desires to lead them astray into a remote error.

Ar. thou wilt. Ar. thee.

61 And when it is said to them, Come to what Allah has revealed and to the Apostle, you will see the hypocrites turning away from you with (utter) aversion.

Ar. thee.

62 But how will it be when misfortune befalls them on account of what their hands have sent before? Then they will come to you swearing by Allah: We did not desire (any thing) but good and concord.

63 These are they of whom Allah knows what is in their hearts; therefore turn aside from them and admonish them, and speak to them effectual words concerning themselves.[596]

595 The reference here is said to be to Ka'b, son of Ashraf, a Jew; others think it is to Abu Barda, a diviner; others consider the tāghūt here to be a particular idol or idols generally to whom disputes were taken to be decided by divination (Rz). Really all these cases are included in the original words. The hypocrites in heart inclined to idols, or their diviners, who, being their leaders in devil-worship, are called devils.

596 A person is said to be baligh (from balagh-a, meaning he attained the utmost point to which he directed his course) who is chaste in speech or effective or penetrating in tongue. Applied to a saying, it also signifies an effectual speech or a speech producing an effect (Msb, Bd-LL). في انفسهم may bear a threefold significance here: (1) قولا مؤثرا في قلوبهم or words producing effect on their minds; (2) في شان انفسهم i.e. concerning themselves; (3) خاليا بهم i.e. when alone with them (Rz). Baligh also means severe, distressful (LL), and severe words to the hypocrites would no doubt be more effective than mild words.

64 And We did not send any apostle but that he should be obeyed by Allah's permission; and had they, when they were unjust to themselves, come to you and asked forgiveness of Allah and the Apostle had (also) asked forgiveness for them, they would have found Allah Oft-returning (to mercy), Merciful.

65 But no! by your Lord! they do not believe (in reality) until they make you a judge of that which has become a matter of disagreement among them, and then do not find any straitness in their hearts as to what you have decided and submit with entire submission.

66 And if We had prescribed for them: Lay down your lives[597] or go forth from your homes, they would not have done it except a few of them; and if they had done what they were admonished, it would have certainly been better for them and best in strengthening (them);

67 And then We would certainly have given them from Ourselves a great reward, 68 And We would certainly have guided them in the right path.

69 And whoever obeys Allah and the Apostle, these are with those upon whom Allah has bestowed favours from among the prophets and the truthful and the faithful and the good, and a goodly company are they![598]

597 The companions of the Prophet had to lay down their lives in defence of their faith, and had to leave their homes for the sake of their religion. But the hypocrites at Medina were too weak of heart to undergo such hardships.

598 Those upon whom Allah has bestowed favours are spoken of as belonging to four grades: (1) The prophets. (2) The truthful; the original word siddiq literally means one who is always truthful, and in the religious language one who is true in his saying and his belief,

SECTION 10

The Believers must defend Themselves

71. Believers must remain on their guard. 72, 73. Those who hold back. 74–76. The cause of Allah and the cause of the devil.

71 O you who believe! take your precaution, then go forth in detachments or go forth in a body.

72 And surely among you is he who would certainly hang back! If then a misfortune befalls you he says: Surely Allah conferred a benefit on me that I was not present with them.

73 And if grace from Allah come to you, he would certainly cry out, as if there had not been any friendship between you and him: Would that I had been with them, then I should have attained a mighty good fortune.

Ar. between him.

74 Therefore let those fight in the way of Allah who sell this world's life for the hereafter; and whoever fights in the way of Allah, then be he slain or be he victorious, We shall grant him a mighty reward.

75 And what reason have you that you should not fight in the way of Allah and of the weak among the men and the women and the children, (of) those who say: Our Lord!

and who confirms his truth by his deed or acting (TA-LL). (3) The faithful, the original word shahíd not meaning necessarily a martyr or one who is slain in fighting for his religion, but one who bears witness to the truth of the religion of Allah (Rz) both by his words and deeds, and one slain in defence of his religion is included because he too gives evidence of the truth of religion by laying down his life. (4) The good. Those who follow the Holy Prophet therefore receive the favours which were granted to the prophets, the truthful, the faithful, and the good before them, the highest favour among these being Divine inspiration. Hence the righteous among the followers of the Holy Prophet are the recipients of Divine revelation. It should, however, be borne in mind that no prophet will be raised after the Holy Prophet Muhammad, according to the plainest teaching of the Holy Qur-án, for perfect guidance is contained in the Holy Qur-án, and therefore no prophet is needed. The revelation granted to the righteous is called mubashsharát, according to a saying of the Holy Prophet, who is reported to have said: "There remains nothing of prophethood except the mubashsharát" (Bkh). The mubashsharát (lit., good news) are the prophecies granted to the faithful, corroborating the truth of the religion of Islam.

خَيْرٌ لِمَنِ اتَّقَىٰ وَلَا تُظْلَمُونَ فَتِيلًا

599 This verse explains what is meant by fighting in the way of Allah. While most of the believers who had the means had escaped from Mecca, which is here spoken of as the city whose people are oppressors, there remained those who were weak and unable to undertake a journey. These were still persecuted and oppressed by the Meccans, as is clearly shown by the words of the verse, and not only men, but even women and young children, were persecuted; fighting to deliver them from the persecution of the oppressors was really fighting in the way of Allah. The next verse shows that these very oppressors are spoken of as fighting in the way of the devil.

600 This is a prophecy that those who are siding with the devil and are fighting against the Holy Prophet shall be ultimately vanquished.

601 This verse also affords a clear proof that the injunction to fight was distasteful, and more particularly so to those who were weak in faith. Had there been any hope of plunder to animate the ranks of Muslims, those who loved this world most (who are here called the hypocrites) would have been foremost in fighting; but as they knew that they were fighting against odds, they considered the execution of this order as equivalent to courting death, and requested to be granted a respite so that they might meet death naturally.

78 Wherever you are, death will overtake you, though you are in towers, raised high. And if a benefit comes to them, they say: This is from Allah; and if a misfortune befalls them, they say: This is from you. Say: All is from Allah; but what is the matter with these people that they do not make approach to understanding what is told (them)?

79 Whatever benefit comes to you (O man!), it is from Allah, and whatever misfortune befalls you, it is from yourself;[602] and We have sent you (O Prophet!) to mankind as an apostle; and Allah is sufficient as a witness.

80 Whoever obeys the Apostle, he indeed obeys Allah; and whoever turns back, so We have not sent you as a keeper over them.

81 And they say: Obedience. But when they go out from your presence, a party of them decide by night upon doing otherwise than what you say;[603] and Allah writes down what they decide by night, therefore turn aside from them and trust in Allah, and Allah is sufficient as a protector.

82 Do they not then meditate on the Qur-án? And if it were from any other than Allah, they would have found in it many a discrepancy.[604]

602 Good and evil, or benefits and misfortunes, proceed from Allah; but while He sends benefits from Himself, i.e. out of His beneficence, no evil or misfortune afflicts a man unless his own hands have called for it. There is no discrepancy in the two statements, the one made at the end of the last verse—say, All is from Allah—and the other made here. The previous verse states that the hypocrites attributed their misfortunes to the Holy Prophet; they are told that misfortunes were sent by Allah. This verse tells them that though sent by Allah, yet the immediate cause of these misfortunes was to be found in their own doings.

603 The reference here is to the secret counsels of the hypocrites, who were always plotting against the Holy Prophet while they kept an appearance of obedience to him.

604 The Qur-án was not written out and given on one occasion, but it continued to be delivered in small portions during twenty-three years under the most varying circumstances. From the solitary recluse of the cave of Hira, the Prophet had to pass through such a variety of circumstances to be the sole monarch and legislator of the whole of Arabia, that the life of no other individual human being affords us such a varying study. It is an error to think that the Meccan and the Medinite suras show any difference, except such as must necessarily have resulted from dealing with the varying circumstances. It is quite true that the earlier revelation deals mostly with such problems as Divine Unity and Majesty and the responsibility of human actions in general, while the later revelation had to deal with a large number of questions relating to the social and moral well-being of society; but what strikes one throughout the entire revelation is that it keeps up one and the same strain—absolute submission to Allah, entire trust in Him, perfect confidence of future success, a liberal view of humanity, an attitude of charity towards all nations and religions, and goodness to all alike. The spirit of the revelations to the solitary, persecuted, and rejected preacher of Mecca does not differ in these and a hundred other particulars from the spirit of the revelations to the sole temporal and spiritual monarch of Arabia. There are no discrepancies even in the details of narratives—such, for instance, as are met with in the Gospels—and this is specially true of the numerous prophecies which were uttered by him when an absolutely helpless man. Had they not proceeded from the Omniscient Being, who knows the future as He knows the past, they could certainly not have been free from numerous discrepancies.

605 Divine grace and mercy were manifested by Allah raising a prophet who delivered them from the bondage of sin and from the slavery of the devil.

606 These words show how great was the confidence of the Holy Prophet in the ultimate triumph of the noble cause with which he was entrusted. The primary duty to defend Islam lay on him alone, as against all the hosts of Arabia; and this shows that he never put any trust in the prowess of his followers, but his confidence was based solely on Divine help; and with no material resources, worthy the name, he was sure not only that he would be able to

How to deal with the Hypocrites

88–91. Hypocrites to be treated as enemies unless they cease fighting.

88 What is the matter with you, then, that you have become two parties about the hypocrites, while Allah has made them return (to unbelief) for what they have earned? Do you wish to guide him whom Allah has caused to err? and whomsoever Allah causes to err, you shall by no means find a way for him.[609] restrain the fighting of his powerful opponents, but also that they would meet with condign punishment at his hands.

607 Rgh thus explains this passage: The meaning is that he who joins himself to another and assists him, and becomes to him as one of a pair or an intercessor in doing good or evil, and thus aids him and strengthens him, partakes with him the benefit or the harm of it. It is also held by some that shafá'ah here implies "that a certain man should institute for another a way of good or a way of evil, which the other imitates, and thus becomes to him as if he were one of a pair" (TA-LL). The connection is clear: the Prophet made himself an example of good for others to imitate or to aid him. For the meaning of shafá'ah see 79.

608 The words are general, but they may also contain a reference to the greeting from the opponents for the sake of peace, in which case the Muslims must make a peace, as in 8 : 61, "If they incline to peace, then incline to it"; or to a greeting from an unknown person, who, notwithstanding doubts as to his belonging to the enemy, is to be treated as a friend if he offers a greeting, as in v. 94, "And do not say to him who offers you peace, You are not a believer."

609 Clearly those waverers are implied here who went back to unbelief after they accepted Islam, and thus again joined the unbelievers. As to their identity, there are six different conjectures, and I need not puzzle the reader with these. The statement made in the concluding words of the verse must be read in conjunction with 2 : 26, "He does not cause to err by it any except the transgressors." Hence the words whom Allah has caused to err are really the equivalent of the transgressors, and thus the statement, "Do you wish to guide him whom Allah has caused to err?" is really the equivalent of, Do you wish to guide the transgressors? Those who continue to transgress the Divine commandments cannot be guided; when they cease to transgress, they find the way.

89 They desire that you should disbelieve as they have disbelieved, so that you might be (all) alike; therefore take not from among them friends until they fly (their homes) in Allah's way; but if they turn back, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them, and take not from among them a friend or a helper,

Ar. nor.

90 Except those who reach a people between whom and you there is an alliance, or who come to you, their hearts shrinking from fighting you or fighting their own people; and if Allah had pleased, He would have given them power over you, so that they should have certainly fought you; therefore if they withdraw from you and do not fight you and offer you peace, then Allah has not given you a way against them.[610]

Ar. breasts.

91 You will find others who desire that they should be safe from you and secure from their own people; as often as they are sent back to the mischief they get thrown into it headlong;[611] therefore if they do not withdraw from you, and (do not) offer you peace and restrain their hands, then seize them and kill them wherever you find them; and against these We have given you a clear authority.

610 This verse explains the previous one, showing clearly that even waverers were not to be killed or fought against if they refrained from fighting, though they may have gone over to unbelief after accepting Islam. The logic of deducing the punishment of death for apostates from this verse is as absurd as that which seeks to draw a similar conclusion from 2 : 217; see 279. The commentators agree that the persons referred to in this verse were unbelievers and not Muslims, and they are generally supposed to have been the Bani Mudlaj (Bd). Note also that we have here the clear injunction that if any people offered peace they were not to be fought against, and the revelation of this verse is clearly later than the revelation of the words occurring in 2 : 193, "And fight with them until there is no persecution and the religion should be only for Allah," thus showing that by religion being only for Allah was only meant the establishment of religious freedom and the ceasing of persecution, and not that the whole world should confess the religion of Islam.

611 By mischief, or fitnah, is meant war with the Muslims (Rz). Certain tribes, said to be Asad and Ghaṭfán, came to the Muslims and showed an inclination to remain at peace; but when they went back and their people invited them to join them in fighting with the Muslims, they hastily responded to the call (Rz). Such people could not be trusted. The importance of these directions in time of war, when the Muslims were hemmed in on all sides by enemies, can hardly be overestimated.

612 This verse and the one following it show that the man who killed a believer intentionally could not be a believer. In the state of warfare which then existed in Arabia, unbelievers often made use of ruses, professing a firm belief in Islam and thus tempting the Muslims to go over to them as religious teachers, and afterwards murdering them.

613 A person belonging to a tribe with whom the Muslims are on terms of peace is to be treated as if he were a Muslim.

614 The commentators are agreed that this verse speaks of an unbeliever who murders a believer (Rz). In fact, the word intentionally stands here for murdering a man because he is a believer, as this was what the unbelievers did so often.

SECTION 14

The Case of Muslims who remained with the Enemy

97-99. Those who were too weak to fly. 100. Those who can fly (their homes) should not fear straitness.

97 Surely (as for) those whom the angels cause to die while they are unjust to their souls, they shall say: In what state were you? They shall say: We were weak in the earth. They shall say:

اِنَّ الَّذِيْنَ تَوَفّٰىهُمُ الْمَلٰٓئِكَةُ ظَالِمِيْٓ
اَنْفُسِهِمْ قَالُوْا فِيْمَ كُنْتُمْ ۚ قَالُوْا
كُنَّا مُسْتَضْعَفِيْنَ فِي الْاَرْضِ ۚ قَالُوْٓا

615 This shows clearly that the Muslims were forbidden to kill a man merely because he was an unbeliever. It required the Muslims, who were surrounded by enemies on all sides, not to take a man for an enemy on mere suspicion. The concluding words of the verse are very clear: You too were such aforetime, then Allah conferred a benefit on you. Now the Muslims were unbelievers aforetime and Allah conferred a benefit on them by making them Muslims. Compare 49 : 17: "Rather Allah lays you under an obligation by guiding you to the faith." Hence the meaning is clear: Kill no one because he is an unbeliever, as you too were unbelievers a short time ago; but make investigation that the man is really your enemy. Salám and salam (the latter being the reading here according to some) mean peace or safety. The meaning is clear in this case and corroborates what is said above. But salám also means a salutation, and in that case the meaning would be that any one who offered a salutation must be dealt with as a friend and not as an enemy, though doubts may be entertained as to the sincerity of his profession. This would be quite a different case from that of the unbelievers who are not to be taken as enemies. But according to

Was not Allah's earth spacious, so that you should have migrated therein? So these it is whose abode is hell, and it is an evil resort;[616]

98 Except the weak from among the men and the women and the children who have not in their power the means nor can they find a way (to escape);

99 So those, it may be, Allah will pardon them, and Allah is Pardoning, Forgiving.

100 And whoever flies in Allah's way, he will find in the earth many a place of refuge[617] and abundant resources; and whoever goes forth from his house flying to Allah and His Apostle, and then death overtakes him, his reward is indeed with Allah, and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

SECTION 15

Prayer when fighting

101. Shortening of prayer when trouble is feared. 102, 103. Prayer when actually fighting. 104. Continued activity to be observed.

101 And when you journey in the earth, there is no blame on you if you shorten the prayer, if you fear that those who disbelieve will cause you distress; surely the unbelievers are your open enemies.

Ar. enemy.

وإذا ضربتم في الأرض فليس عليكم
جناح أن تقصروا من الصلوة ق
إن خفتم أن يفتنكم الذين كفروا ط
إن الكفرين كانوا لكم عدوا مبينا ۝

Rz salám has another meaning. He says that the meaning may be, do not say to him who withdraws from you and does not fight with you: You are not a believer, and this is from salámat (meaning security), for one who withdraws seeks security. Instead of Mu'min, which means a believer, Kf reads Mu'man, which means secure, and this further corroborates the first significance of salám.

616 By those who were unjust to their souls are meant either such persons as were convinced of the truth of Islam and avowed a belief in it, but chose to remain among the unbelievers, who did not allow them to give expression to their beliefs, notwithstanding that they had the means to join the Muslims and avow Islam openly, or the hypocrites who professed faith in Islam when they came to the Muslims and denied it when they returned to their own tribes (Rz).

The question "In what state were you?" signifies What was your state with respect to your religion?

617 Murágham is derived from رغم انفه meaning his nose clove to the earth, i.e. he was humbled, and is used to signify a road or a place of refuge to which resort

Ar. thou art. Ar. thee. Ar. thee. Ar. people.

102 And when you are among them and keep up the prayer for them, let a party of them stand up with you, and let them take their arms; then when they have prostrated themselves let them go to your rear, and let another party who have not prayed come forward and pray with you, and let them take their precautions and their arms; (for) those who disbelieve desire that you may be careless of your arms and your luggage, so that they may then turn upon you with a sudden united attack; and there is no blame on you, if you are annoyed with rain or if you are sick, that you lay down your arms, and take your precautions; surely Allah has prepared a disgraceful chastisement for the unbelievers.[618]

103 Then when you have finished the prayer, remember Allah standing and sitting and reclining; but when you are secure (from danger) keep up prayer; surely prayer is a timed ordinance for the believers.[619] may be had (Rgh), either because one does so when one is abased or because the enemy, who does not wish that one should depart and find a refuge, is abased thereby.

104 And be not weak-hearted in pursuit of the enemy; if you suffer pain, then surely they (too) suffer pain as you suffer pain, and you hope from Allah what they do not hope; and Allah is Knowing, Wise.

618 This verse and the previous one show the importance of prayer in Islam, which could not be neglected even when facing the enemy. The soldiers of Islam were not men with whom fighting was a primary occupation; the chief object of their lives, as these verses show, was to hold communion with the Divine Being, forgetting even their imminent danger when the time of holding such communion arrived.

619 By kitāban mauqūtā, or a timed ordinance, is meant an ordinance regulated as to time, or ordained to be performed at fixed times.

109 Behold! you are they who (may) plead for them in this world's life, but who will plead for them with Allah on the resurrection day, or who shall be their protector?

620 With a little difference in details, the commentators agree that the occasion of the revelation of these verses was a dispute between some men who professed Islam and the Jews, in which the judgment was given against the Muslims. Ta'ma bin Ubairaq had stolen a coat of mail, and having hidden it at a Jew's, afterwards accused the Jew of the theft, while his tribe supported him. The Holy Prophet, notwithstanding the open enmity of the Jews, cleared the Jew of the charge. Thus these verses lay down the broad principle that dishonesty must be punished, notwithstanding that one guilty of it may profess the religion of Islam and the party injured may be a non-Muslim or even an enemy of the Muslims. Every case must be decided on its merits, and the balance of justice must be held equal between Muslims and non-Muslims and between friends and foes. A slightly less scrupulous person would have been led away from the strict requirements of justice by the exigencies of the case, for it was a time when every Muslim hand was sorely needed for the defence of Islam, and a verdict against a man supported by his whole tribe meant the entire loss of that tribe.

621 The injunction in this as well as the previous verse is meant for every Muslim who is called upon to act as a judge. The asking for forgiveness here enjoined is apparently for the party who, being a Muslim, has been guilty of dishonesty. The verse that follows lends support to this interpretation. As for the Prophet's asking forgiveness for himself, see 2194.

622 Those who supported the guilty man are spoken of here, and all such persons are condemned as hypocrites. The same subject is continued in the verses that follow.

110 And whoever does evil or acts unjustly to his soul, then asks forgiveness of Allah, he shall find Allah Forgiving, Merciful.

111 And whoever commits a sin, he only commits it against his own soul; and Allah is Knowing, Wise.

112 And whoever commits a fault or a sin, then accuses of it one innocent, he indeed takes upon himself the burden of a calumny and a manifest sin.[623]

623 The innocent person thus falsely accused may be a non-Muslim, even an enemy of Islam, yet a false accusation, by whomsoever made, and against whomsoever made, is a "calumny and a manifest sin." No other religion lays down such unbiased rules for regulating and administering justice.

624 Aḍalla-hū is the equivalent of ahlaka-hū, and thus means that he destroyed him or brought him to perdition (LL), and this is the meaning here.

624A This verse clearly speaks of the unbelievers and the hypocrites, who followed a way other than the way of the believers, and it is said to relate to Ṭa'ma's apostasy (Rz), for which see 620. Only a laboured distortion of the word could make it signify that it was a sin to differ from the majority of the Muslims on any question of religion. No sensible Muslim has ever held that opinion.

625 Inás has two significances, either of which may be adopted. (1) It signifies inanimate things, as trees and stones and wood. (2) It also means idols, because they named the idols as females, for instance Lât, 'Uzza, Manát (LL). Hasan says every one of the Arabian tribes had an idol, which they called the unsá (lit. female) of such a tribe (Rz). Hence the word may also be translated as feminine divinities.

626 Marid and márid have both the same significance, viz. one devoid of all good, as you say شجر امرد i.e. a tree which has no leaves on it, and رملة مرداء i.e. sand that produces no plants (Rgh). According to LL the significance of marid is insolent or rebellious.

cattle,[627] and most certainly I will bid them so that they shall alter Allah's creation ;[628] and whoever takes the devil for a guardian rather than Allah, he indeed shall suffer a manifest loss.

120 He gives them promises and excites vain desires in them; and the devil does not promise them but to deceive.

121 These are they whose abode is hell, and they shall not find any refuge from it.

122 And (as for) those who believe and do good, We will make them enter into gardens beneath which rivers flow, to abide therein for ever ; (it is) a promise of Allah, true (indeed) ; and who is truer of word than Allah ?

123 (This) shall not be in accordance with your vain desires[629] nor in accordance with the vain desires of the followers of the Book; whoever does evil, he shall be requited with it, and besides Allah he will find for himself neither a guardian nor a helper.

627 The slitting of the ear was performed on the baḥîrah, i.e. a she-camel that had brought forth five young ones, the last of which was a male, in which case her ear was slit, and she was exempted from being ridden, from carrying burden, and from being slaughtered. The word was also applied to a ewe or she-goat, one that, having brought forth five young ones, had her ear slit (TA-LL). Some think that the reference is to the practice of cutting off the ears of cattle as an act of devotion to idols (Rz). The practice of slitting or cutting off the ear of certain animals was a prevalent form of polytheism in Arabia, for such an animal was looked upon as devoted to certain idols. See further 742.

628 A comparison with 30 : 30 will show clearly that by Allah's creation is here meant the religion of Allah, because the true religion is the natural religion of man. In 30 : 30 we have : "Then set your face upright for religion in the right state : the nature made by Allah in which He has made men ; there is no altering of Allah's creation, that is the right religion, but most people do not know." By the devil's changing the creation of Allah is therefore meant the changing of the natural religion of man, which requires obedience to Allah and His laws. Some commentators understand by changing the creation of Allah the using of His created things for an object other than that for which they were created, for instance, worshipping objects such as the sun, etc., which were really created to be subservient to man (Rz). Thus the misuse of any faculty which is created in man is equivalent to a changing of the creation of Allah.

629 The vain desires of the idolaters, who are addressed in the words not according to your vain desires (Rz), were that they should not be raised after death : "And they say, There is nothing but our life in this world, and we shall not be raised" (6 : 29). And as regards the followers of the Book : "And the Jews and the Christians say, We are the sons of Allah and 630 The reference is to the commencement of this chapter (see v. 3 and 535). There is almost a consensus of opinion on this point, the construction being that a decision has already been given there.

631 يتامى النساء means orphans of women, and the significance orphan women, or female orphans, is altogether inadmissible according to Basra grammarians, though others think that it is permissible (Rz). The meaning is clear, for there is an injunction here to do good to orphans whose mothers have been taken in marriage, and the same is the subject dealt with in v. 3. According to I'Ab, what is appointed for them means the share of inheritance to property, which was not allowed by pagan Arabs (Rz). But others think dowry is meant. The giving of the dowry to such women was all the more necessary as it was needed for the maintenance of orphans. It is also stated that the verse was revealed in connection with the incident of Umm-i-Kuhat, who had orphan children (Rz). As against this, however, Bkh reports a saying of 'Ayesha, according to which the orphan girls are meant who were taken in marriage by their guardians without settling a dowry on them.

632 There are two words, nushūz and i'rāḍ, used here. The former literally means rising. You say نشزت المرأة as meaning the wife was or became disobedient to her husband, and exalted herself against him, and resisted him and hated him and deserted him. And you say نشز بعلها عليها meaning her husband treated her unjustly and was unkind to her,

Equitable Dealings with all Men, and Condemnation of Jewish Hypocrisy

135. Firmness in justice and truth. 136. Firmness in faith enjoined. 137–141. The weak in faith forsake truth for the sake of worldly honour.

135 O you who believe! be maintainers of justice, bearers of witness for Allah's sake, though it may be against your own selves or (your) parents or near relatives; if he be rich or poor, Allah is most competent (to deal) with them both;[633] therefore do not follow (your) low desires, lest you deviate; and if you swerve or turn aside, then surely Allah is aware of what you do.

Or, nearer to them both in compassion.

136 O you who believe! believe in Allah and His Apostle and the Book which He has revealed to His Apostle and the Book which He revealed before; and whoever disbelieves in Allah and His angels and His apostles and the last day, he indeed strays off into a remote error.

or estranged himself from her, or disliked or hated her (Q, Msb, TA-LL). I'rāḍ is literally turning away, avoiding, shunning or leaving a thing. Hence I render the first word as ill-usage and the second as desertion, as order is generally indicative of the comparative strength of the significance in the absence of other considerations.

633 The meaning is that you should not be partial to the rich man on account of some favour that you may expect from him or some harm that you fear from him, nor should you state other than the truth when the person against whom you bear witness is a poor man, on account of compassion for him. Thus, neither ties of kinship and love nor considerations of fear, favour, or compassion should make one swerve a hair's-breadth from the truth.

137 Surely (as for) those who believe then disbelieve, again believe and again disbelieve, then increase in disbelief,[634] Allah will not forgive them nor guide them in the (right) path.[635]

إن الذين امنوا ثم كفروا ثم امنوا ثم كفروا ثم ازدادوا كفرا لم يكن الله ليغفر لهم ولا ليهديهم سبيلا ۝

138 Announce to the hypocrites that they shall have a painful chastisement,[636]

139 Those who take the unbelievers for guardians rather than believers. Do they seek honour from them? Then surely all honour is for Allah.

الذين يتخذون الكفرين اولياء من دون المؤمنين ايبتغون عندهم العزة فان العزة لله جميعا ۝

140 And indeed He has revealed to you in the Book that when you hear Allah's communications disbelieved in and mocked at, do not sit with them until they enter into some other discourse; surely then you would be like them; surely Allah will gather together the hypocrites and the unbelievers all in hell;[637]

وقد نزل عليكم في الكتب ان اذا سمعتم ايت الله يكفر بها ويستهزا بها فلا تقعدوا معهم حتى يخوضوا في حديث غيره انكم اذا مثلهم ان الله جامع المنفقين والكفرين في جهنم جميعا ۝

141 Those who wait for (some misfortune to befall) you; then if you have a victory from Allah they say: Were we not with you? And if there is a chance for the unbelievers, they say: Did we not acquire the mastery over you and defend you from the believers? So Allah shall judge between you on the day of resurrection; and Allah will by no means give the unbelievers a way against the believers.

الذين يتربصون بكم فان كان لكم فتح من الله قالوا الم نكن معكم وان كان للكفرين نصيب قالوا الم نستحوذ عليكم ونمنعكم من المؤمنين فالله يحكم بينكم يوم القيمة ولن يجعل الله للكفرين على المؤمنين سبيلا ۝

634 The persons spoken of in this verse are the waverers who again and again went over to unbelief (Rz). Some, however, are of opinion that the reference is to the Jews in particular, who believed in one revelation and denied the other (Rz). The reference to the Book "which He revealed before," in v. 136, shows clearly that the Jews are meant, among whom there were, no doubt, many hypocrites.

635 Allah's not guiding them is the consequence of their own actions. They wavered first, but in the end became firm in disbelief.

636 Tabshir (related to bushrah, i.e. complexion) originally denotes the announcing of an event which produces a change in the complexion. In common acceptation it is used with regard to the news which rejoices a man, but is sometimes used for the announcement of an event which grieves a man (Rz-LL).

637 In the sixth chapter of the Holy Qur-án, which was revealed at Mecca, we find this injunction in v. 68. The Muslims are told to leave the assembly where truth is mocked at, for if they do not, they will grow accustomed to such mockery: Surely then you would be like

142 Surely the hypocrites strive to deceive Allah, and He shall requite their deceit to them,[638] and when they stand up to prayer, they stand up sluggishly; they do it only to be seen of men and do not remember Allah save a little, them. A Christian annotator draws from these words the strange conclusion that the Muslims are prohibited from hearing any criticism of their religion. It does not require more than common sense to understand that mockery and criticism are not the same thing.

638 For the meaning of khada'a and khâda'a see 23. It may be added that khâdi'uhum means here the requiter to them of their deceit (TA-LL). In fact, a comparison of this passage with the similar passage occurring in 2 : 9 makes the meaning perfectly clear. There we have: "They desire to deceive Allah and those who believe and they deceive only themselves." In both cases they are warned of punishment for their striving to deceive the believers.

639 Muzabzab, lit., much driven away, has the same significance as muzabzib, i.e. wavering or vacillating between two things or affairs (T, S, M, Q-LL). The reference in that is to the believers and unbelievers spoken of in the concluding words of v. 141.

640 Insincerity in religion is the worst of all, and hence the hypocrites, or the insincere men whose actions are not in accordance with their avowed beliefs, are spoken of as being in the worst condition.

148 Allah does not love the public utterance of hurtful speech, unless (it be) by one to whom injustice has been done; and Allah is Hearing, Knowing.[642]

150 Surely those who disbelieve in Allah and His apostles and (those who) desire to make a distinction between Allah and His apostles and say: We believe in some and disbelieve in others; and desire to take a course between (this and) that,

151 These it is that are truly unbelievers, and We have prepared for the unbelievers a disgraceful chastisement.[643]

152 And those who believe in Allah and His apostles and do not make a distinction between any of them—Allah will grant them their rewards; and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

641 The word shâkir when used as an attribute of the Divine Being signifies who gives large reward for small works or in whose estimation small works performed by His servants increase, and who multiplies His rewards to them (TA-LL), and so you say: شكر الله سعيه meaning may God reward his labour (LL).

642 The use of defamatory speech of every kind regarding others is strictly forbidden, but justification for it may exist in case a person has in some way been injured.

643 To make distinction between Allah and His apostles means to believe in one and not in the other. Islam requires also the acceptance of all prophets who were raised for the regeneration of men, and hence a denial of any one of the prophets named in the Holy Qur-án takes a man out of the category of believers and places him among the unbelievers.

644 The calumny here referred to was that Mary was guilty of fornication (Rz). Jewish tradition shows that the man about whom they accused Mary was a Jew named Panther (Jewish Life of Jesus).

645 The word does not negative Jesus' being nailed to the cross, but it negatives his having expired on the cross as a result of being nailed to it. That he died a natural death was made dubious to them,[646] and most surely those who differ therein are only in a doubt about it;[647] they have no knowledge respecting it, but only follow a conjecture, and they know it not for sure;[648]

شُبِّهَ لَهُمْ ۚ وَإِنَّ الَّذِينَ اخْتَلَفُوا فِيهِ لَفِي شَكٍّ مِّنْهُ ۚ مَا لَهُم بِهِ مِنْ عِلْمٍ إِلَّا اتِّبَاعَ الظَّنِّ ۚ وَمَا قَتَلُوهُ يَقِينًا ۙ

is plainly stated in 5 : 117: "And I was a witness of them so long as I was among them, but when Thou didst cause me to die, Thou wert the watcher over them." See 752. The Gospels contain clear testimony showing that Jesus Christ escaped death on the cross. The following points may be noted: (1) Jesus remained on the cross for a few hours only, but death by crucifixion was always tardy. (2) The two men crucified with Jesus were still alive when taken down from the cross, therefore Jesus also might have been alive. (3) The breaking of legs was resorted to in the case of the two criminals, but dispensed with in the case of Jesus. (4) The side of Jesus being pierced, blood rushed out, and this was a certain sign of life. (5) Even Pilate did not believe that Jesus actually died in so short a time (Mark 15 : 44). (6) Jesus was not buried like the two criminals, but was given into the charge of a wealthy disciple of his, who lavished care upon him and put him in a spacious room hewn in the side of a rock. (7) When the tomb was seen on the third day the stone was found to have been removed from its mouth, which would not have been the case if there had been a supernatural rising. (8) Mary, when she saw him, took him for the gardener (John 20 : 15), which shows that Jesus had disguised himself as a gardener. (9) Such disguise would not have been needed if Jesus had risen from the dead. (10) It was in the same body of flesh that the disciples saw Jesus, and the wounds were still there deep enough for a man to thrust his hand in. (11) He still felt hunger and ate as his disciples ate (Luke 24 : 39-43). (12) Jesus Christ undertook a journey to Galilee with two of his disciples walking side by side with him, which shows that he was flying for refuge, for if his object had been to rise to heaven he would not have undertaken a journey to Galilee. (13) In all post-crucifixion appearances Jesus is found concealing and hiding himself as if he feared being discovered. (14) Jesus Christ prayed the whole night before his arrest to be saved from the accursed death on the cross, and he also asked his disciples to pray for him, and it is the Divine law that the prayers of a righteous man in distress and affliction are always accepted. He seems to have even received a promise from his Master to be saved, and it was to this promise that he referred when he cried out on the cross: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" —Heb. 5 : 7 making the matter still more clear, for there it is plainly stated that the prayer of Jesus was accepted: "When he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto Him who was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared."

All these testimonies show conclusively that Jesus could not have died on the cross, and therefore the statement in the Qur-án is perfectly true.

646 The words ولكن شبه لهم may bear two interpretations. You say شبهه اياه i.e. he made it to be like it or to resemble it (MA,KL-LL). And also شبهه عليه i.e. he rendered it confused to him, and he rendered it ambiguous, dubious or obscure to him (MA-LL). As the first significance is only admissible when an object is mentioned which the thing is made to resemble, the latter remains the only possible meaning. The Rúḥ-ul-Ma'ání adopts this as one of the possible significances, and says the meaning may be التبس عليهم الامر i.e. the matter became dubious to them. The story that some one else was made to resemble Jesus is not borne out by the words of the Qur-án, which could only mean, if an object were mentioned, that Jesus was made to resemble (something). And even if we may supply the object that is omitted, that which he was made to resemble must be spoken of in the same passage, and while the resemblance to one crucified is implied in the statement that they did not crucify him, there is no mention here or elsewhere of any person who may have been made to resemble him, or more properly whom he may have been made to resemble.

647 The circumstances relating to the crucifixion, far from showing that Jesus died on the cross, clearly prove that he was taken down alive.

648 ما قتلوه يقينا means, according to Rgh, they did not know with a certain knowledge his having been put to death on the cross.

649 For the significance of raf' see 437. The form here adopted—they did not kill him for sure on the cross, but Allah exalted him—shows that being exalted in the Divine presence was opposed to being killed on the cross. Deut. 21 : 23 explains this, for there we have, he that is hanged is accursed of God, and as the accursed one cannot be called honourable in the Divine presence, hence the negation of Jesus being killed on the cross and the affirmation that he was exalted before the Divine presence—i.e. he was not accursed.

650 Both the Jews and the Christians necessarily believe in the death of Jesus on the cross, while according to the Holy Qur-án they have really no sure knowledge of it. The Jews reject his claim to Messiahship—without rejecting which they cannot, of course, remain Jews—on the basis of Deut. 21 : 23: "He that is hanged is accursed of God"; and their belief is that since Jesus died on the cross he was accursed, and no one who is accursed of God can be a prophet. Upon quite a different line of argument, the death of Jesus upon the cross is the most essential principle of a Christian's faith. He admits the truth of Deut. 21 : 23, but he says that unless Jesus were accursed he could not take away the sins of those that believe in him. As in Gal. 3 : 13 : "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on the tree." Hence the fundamental principle of the belief of both Jews and Christians is that Jesus died on the cross, and the meaning of the verse is clear, viz. every Jew and Christian, notwithstanding that he has no sure knowledge at all, must believe before his death that Jesus died on the cross. Or the personal pronoun his may refer to Jesus, the meaning in that case being that both the Jews and the Christians base their faith on Jesus' death before it actually occurred.

651 The prophets spoken of here all belong to the Israelite race. Abraham and his immediate descendants are mentioned first; then follow the three prophets of Israel who suffered great tribulations, viz. Jesus, Job, and Jonah. The next group is that of the four who were both rulers and prophets, viz. Moses, Aaron, David, and Solomon. But as David and Moses stand in a special relation to the Holy Prophet, the former singing his praises throughout his Psalms and the latter being his like, they are spoken of separately at the end. The good news which they brought relates as much to the peace and happiness which is granted to the righteous as to the advent of one who, coming at the end, should unite the qualifications of all the prophets in his own person, and accordingly make the nations of the earth as one nation. It is for this reason that the Qur-án is spoken of as "pure pages wherein are all the right books" (98 : 2). That all the prophets had spoken of the advent of the Holy Prophet is clear from Acts 3 : 21–22 : "Whom the heaven must receive until the time of restitution of all things which God had spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me."

166 But Allah bears witness by what He has revealed to you that He has revealed it with His knowledge, and the angels bear witness (also); and Allah is sufficient as a witness.

652 Kalimah, or word, is here equivalent to prophecy, in which sense the word is frequently used in the Holy Qur-án. Jesus is called a prophecy because he was born in accordance with a prophecy from Allah, just as in a saying the Holy Prophet speaks of himself as "the prayer of my father Abraham," the significance being that he appeared in fulfilment of Abraham's prayer. For a fuller explanation see 423. And the significance of ilqá varies according to its object. When its object is a tangible thing, it implies the act of throwing or casting. But you say القيت اليه خيرا i.e. I did good to him and القيت اليه المودة i.e. I offered love to him (TA-LL), and القى الي سره i.e. he revealed to me his secret (TA in art. sirr); and القيت اليه القول which corresponds to what is said here, the object of the verb being kalimah instead of qaul, both having the same meaning, must be rendered I communicated to him the saying (Msb-LL). The physical act of throwing or casting a thing is farthest off from the true meaning of the word as used here. Sale's and Rodwell's conveying into Mary and Palmer's casting into Mary, as if the object were a tangible one, are equally foreign to the real sense of the word.

653 The word rúḥ may convey any one of the following three significances. Rauḥ and rúḥ both mean mercy of Allah, according to Az (LL under rauḥ), this being the proper significance of the word in the passage under discussion. Rúḥ also signifies inspiration or Divine revelation (Zj, TA, Q-LL), and the adoption of this meaning explains what is said in كلمته القيها الى مريم i.e. His prophecy which He communicated to Mary, the meaning of the whole sentence being that the advent of Jesus was in accordance with a prophecy and an inspiration from the Divine Being. Even if we take spirit to be the meaning of the word rúḥ, it does in no way carry Jesus a step beyond the limits of mortality, for of Adam also it has been said نفخت فيه من روحي i.e. I breathed My spirit into him. But more than that, we have the saying referred to by LL under rauḥ: احيا الناس بروحه where the correct reading is rúḥ and not rauḥ, meaning, He (God) has quickened all men with His spirit. Therefore روح منه which could only mean a spirit from Him, is further evidence that even in this sense the word is not exclusively applicable to Jesus, for he is not the word of God and the spirit from Him, but only a word and a spirit, and as all men are declared to be quickened by the spirit of Allah in the proverb quoted above, all men, and in fact all creatures, are declared to be the words of Allah in 18:109:

"Say, If the sea were ink for the words of my Lord, the sea would surely be consumed before the words of my Lord are exhausted."

654 The doctrine of Trinity is plainly rejected here. There are not three persons in Godhead, but only one: Allah is only one God. The Holy Qur-án nowhere says that the Christian Trinity is formed of Jesus, Mary, and God, though it no doubt refers to the Roman Catholic doctrine of the worship of Mary in 5 : 116, for which see 751.

655 The rule given here supplements the law of inheritance as given at the commencement of this chapter, and is said to have been revealed very late. The sisters and brothers spoken of here are the real sisters and brothers or half-sisters and half-brothers on the father's side, those on the mother's side having already been spoken of in v. 12. Reversion to the law of inheritance just after speaking of Jesus Christ indicates a deeper meaning. It is a fact that no prophet appeared among the Israelites after Jesus Christ, and therefore his death really left Israel without a spiritual head who should rise to the eminence of prophethood. Hence, according to this law, the spiritual inheritance must have gone to the brother tribe of Ishmael, who received it in the person of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him. This would also explain the words addressed to Moses: "God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me" (Deut. 18 : 15), where the spiritual inheritance is clearly made to devolve on the brethren of the Israelites, i.e. the Ishmaelites, and thus from the midst of thee is clearly explained as meaning from the midst of thy brethren, as Moses saw that the Israelites would lose their title to the inheritance of the spiritual kingdom before the advent of the prophet who was to be his like.

Title and connection.

THE name of this chapter is taken from the mention of a demand for food on the part of the followers of Jesus Christ, to which reference is made towards the end of this chapter; and as it deals with the Christians in particular, that incident is unquestionably one of its chief features, although the chapter deals with Christians in general. Ordinarily máidah, which is the Arabic word, is rendered as meaning a table, but even taking that meaning to be correct, it signifies a table for food only. The adoption of this name for this chapter might be with a view to express the Christian love of the dainties of this life.

This chapter stands in almost the same relation to the last as the 3rd to the 2nd. Thus, while the 4th chapter deals chiefly with the hypocrites, the 5th deals with those who had assumed open enmity to Islam, being interspersed here and there with directions for the Muslims. While the 4th chapter deals with the question of Jewish disobedience, this gives prominence to the Christian transgressions due to their inordinate worldly love, this distinction being made plain in the concluding portions of the two chapters. There is also a plain connection between the end of the 4th and the commencement of the 5th chapter, for while the former ends with the Christian doctrine of the divinity of Jesus, the necessary result of which is disregard of the religious law, the latter in its opening verses lays particular stress upon one's duty to be true to religious laws and covenants.

Subject-matter.

The contents of this chapter are chiefly concerned with the Jewish and Christian violation of their covenants, with an exhortation to the Muslims to remain true to their own. Attention to the latter point is drawn in the very opening verse of the chapter: "O you who believe! fulfil your obligations." This injunction is followed by certain details relating to the performance of the pilgrimage, to foods, and to social relations with other people. The second section, which calls attention to the duty of uprightness, is as it were a caution against laying too much stress upon details of the law to the utter neglect of the inner qualities which make the real man. The third section speaks of the covenants made with the Jews and the Christians, and after hinting at the violation of the covenant by the Christians in assigning a Divine dignity to a mere mortal, takes up the Jewish violation of the covenant in the fourth section, at the very outset of their national life, and points out the evil consequences of their disobedience. The fifth section, opening with a lesson to the Jews in Cain's aggression, plainly points towards the end to the punishment of the Jews who were now engaged in making war upon the Prophet, and the subject of the punishment of similar offences is continued in the sixth section. The seventh speaks of the relation of the Quranic revelation to previous revelations, and points out that this final revelation is really the fulfilment and perfection of all those revelations. The eighth section, however, warns the Muslims of the hostile attitude of the Jews and the Christians and those who apostatize, the subject being continued in the ninth, which tells of their mockery of the Muslim religion. The tenth introduces the subject of Christian deviation from the truth, while the eleventh proves that the Qur-án is not unjust to them on account of their enmity towards Islam, valuing the meekness of monks and priests among them, and recognizing their nearness to Islam in contrast to the Jews and the polytheists. The three sections that follow are specially addressed to the believers, while hinting at Christian disregard of the middle course and of their aggressions against the Muslims. Thus the twelfth section, while warning the Muslims on the one hand of such practices as monkery, which required a man to deprive himself even of lawful things, cautions them on the other against the use of impure drugs, such as intoxicating liquors, and the acquisition of property by illegal means, such as in gambling, the two besetting sins of Christian nations, and requires obedience and regard of duty to be made the main principles of action. The thirteenth section, opening with an injunction requiring the Muslims not even to hunt wild animals and birds during the pilgrimage, lays stress on the security of the Ka'ba, containing probably an allusion to the attempts of a Christian nation to demolish it (see ch. 105), and a prophetic allusion as well perhaps to future designs of more powerful nations. The fourteenth section, containing further directions for the Muslims, lays special stress on the gravity of the sin of polytheism, which had led the Christians farthest away from the truth, notwithstanding their proximity to Islam. The two concluding sections of the chapter deal with the Christian religion more plainly, attention being drawn in the fifteenth to the Christian love of this life, the immediate disciples of Jesus demanding an abundance of worldly provisions, which finds an echo, perhaps, in the Lord's prayer asking for daily bread; while the sixteenth, which is the last section, contains a plain condemnation of the doctrine of the divinity of Jesus out of the mouth of that prophet himself.

Date of revelation.

A consideration of the topics dealt with in this chapter, as well as the opinions of different authorities, lead us to the almost certain conclusion that this chapter follows in the order of revelation, as it does in arrangement, the last chapter, and the main portion of it was revealed within the years five to seven Hejira. It is only in very rare cases that the exact date of the revelation of a verse can be fixed with certainty, and the various dates assigned to the different verses of a particular chapter are in most cases mere conjectures, devoid of accuracy. The tendency of Christian critics, for instance, to ascribe verses condemning certain Jewish or Christian doctrines to a period when political relations with these people became strained is to be deprecated, for, as a matter of fact, the Qur-án did not deny the good in these religions at any time, nor did it ever approve of their errors. For instance, it is in an early Meccan revelation that we find the Christian doctrine of the sonship of Jesus condemned in the severest terms (19 : 88–92), while it is in a late Medina revelation that we find the Christians praised on account of their meekness, while the enmity of both Jews and Christians to Islam had already been clearly recognized in v. 51, where both are spoken of in the same breath as people with whom the Muslims can no more be friendly.

There is, however, one verse in this chapter which belongs to a much later period than the main portion of the chapter, the date of the revelation of which can be fixed with the utmost certainty. It is the third verse, and it speaks of the perfection of the faith of Islam. Of its revelation in the Holy Prophet's last pilgrimage to Mecca in the year 10 A.H. there is not the least doubt, and, further, there is the clearest testimony that it was revealed on the 9th Zil Haj in that year, when the Holy Prophet was in the plain of 'Arafát. The importance of its subject, which, speaking of the perfection of the faith of Islam, foretold the approaching end of the Prophet, gave it a fame which was preserved to the days of the Caliphate of 'Umar (Bkh). It need not be denied that other verses may have also been revealed later than the 7th year of Hejira, but as the task of assigning particular dates to particular verses rests on nothing but conjecture, I had better refrain from this fruitless labour.

656 The respect for all covenants, contracts, agreements, leagues, treaties, and engagements, all of which are included in the significance of the word 'Uqúd (LL), and also of all Divine ordinances given for the welfare of the individual and society, is the very first necessity of social relations. According to Zj the word includes the covenants imposed by God as well as the mutual agreements made by men (LL).

657 The prohibition of game during pilgrimage is mentioned in connection with the security of the Ka'ba in section 13, so that even wild animals are secure during the time; see 735.

658 Sha'áir is plural of sha'írah, which means here mash'irah, i.e. a place where a thing is known to be, or a place for the performance of a religious service (TA-LL). But sha'írah and shi'árah and shi'ár are also explained as meaning a sign or a religious performance (LL). The sha'áir-ul-ḥaj are therefore the religious performances that must be gone through in the pilgrimage; and sha'áir-ullah is variously explained as meaning all the religious services appointed as signs by Allah, or, according to Hasan, the religion of Allah (Rz); according to others it denotes the religious performances in connection with the pilgrimage, as the halting at 'Arafát and running between Ṣafá and Marwah and the sacrificing of victims (Zj, TA-LL); or the rites and ceremonies of the pilgrimage and the places where these rites and ceremonies are performed (Bḍ-LL). I adopt any thing appointed as a sign by Allah as the true meaning, which not only conveys the root-significance of sign, but also includes the various explanations given by commentators. In the Holy Qur-án the two mountains Ṣafá and Marwah (2 : 158) and the offerings (22 : 36) are said to be sha'áir-ullah. Here the places connected with the performance of the pilgrimage seem to be intended, as the offerings are separately mentioned.

659 The two words had-y and Qaláid both indicate animals meant for sacrifice during the pilgrimage. The former is plural of hadyah, and means what is driven (to Mecca), and the latter is plural of qiládah, meaning a necklace, or what is put upon the neck of an animal that is brought as an offering to Mecca for sacrifice (LA-LL), and hence also the animal which is made to wear a garland (Rz). The word qaláid as a description of such animals is used to intensify respect for them, because they bear a clear mark showing that they are meant to be sacrificed. It should be noted that only camels are made to wear garlands, while had-y includes all kinds of animals brought as offering.

660 The principle laid down here as to uprightness of conduct in dealing even with those whom we hate is one which is not met with anywhere but in Islam, and the international law of modern Europe stands sorely in need of such a principle of uprightness. Hence, Islam alone can serve as an international law, requiring equal treatment for all nations.

661 The exception may apply to all the five classes. The infinitive noun tazkiyah means causing the natural heat to pass forth. Technically, it indicates a particular mode of slaughtering (Rgh, TA-LL); and the meaning is that if an animal partly eaten by wild beasts is found while yet alive, and is slaughtered in the proper manner, its flesh is allowed.

This day have I perfected for you your religion and completed My favour on you and chosen for you Islam as a religion;[664] but whoever is compelled by hunger, not inclining wilfully to sin, then surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

662 According to Ibn-i-Juraij these were certain stones which were set up around the Ka'ba over or near which it was customary to kill animals as offerings to certain idols, their blood being sprinkled and flesh laid on the stones (Rz). Naṣab also means any stone that is set up and worshipped (Msb-LL).

663 Istaqsamtu-hú means, according to Rgh, I asked him to divide, and he adds: "Then it is used to signify dividing." If this significance be adopted, the azlám (lit. arrows without a head and without a feather) would mean the headless arrows of the game of hazard. The Arabs played with such arrows for division of the flesh of a slaughtered camel bought on credit (LL). This significance is favoured by the context, for it prohibits dividing flesh of slaughtered animals by means of certain arrows with which was played the game of chance called maisir. A comparison with 6:146, where slaying in other than Allah's name is called a transgression, as here dividing by arrows is called a transgression, also shows this to be the correct significance. Probably animals devoted to idols were divided by arrows when slain. According to others, however, istaqsama means he sought to know what was allotted to him by means of the azlám. When any one of them desired to make a journey, or to get married, or to perform some other great affair, he drew out arrows, on one of which was written "My Lord has commanded me," on a second, "My Lord has forbidden me," while a third arrow was blank. He did or refrained from doing the desired thing according to the arrow which came forth, repeating the operation if a blank arrow came out (Rz). This significance is given in the margin.

664 External testimony as to the late revelation of this verse has already been quoted in the introductory note to this chapter. The very subject-matter of the verse shows that it must have been revealed towards the close of the Holy Prophet's life, and hence it is held by all authorities that no precept was revealed after this. The Prophet died eighty-one or eighty-two days after its revelation (Rz). This verse is a clear testimony to the perfection of religion in Islam, no such claim being made by any other book or religion. Hence it was that Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him, was the last of the prophets, because religion being perfected no prophet was needed after him.

665 Game killed by means of beasts and birds of prey taught to hunt is allowed. When, however, the beast or the bird is sent after the prey, the name of Allah should be mentioned. Game killed by an arrow or by a shot is allowed, subject to the same condition. In either case, if the game is not killed before it falls into the hand of the hunter, it should be slaughtered; if it is already killed, it is lawful in that condition. There is, however, a difference of opinion when the beast tears up the game and eats part of it. Some think that in such a case it is not lawful to eat it (Rz).

666 The question arises here whether the food of those who have been given the Book is lawful even when that food includes what is expressly declared to be unlawful elsewhere, as, for instance, in v. 3, etc. The answer to this question must be given in the negative. A thing which is clearly prohibited cannot become lawful because it is offered by a Jew or a Christian. But there are no two opinions regarding animals slaughtered by the Jews or the Christians, except in the case when a Christian slaughters an animal in the name of Jesus, for Jesus is other than Allah, and according to the three famous imams, Abú Hanífah, Málik, and Sháfa'í, such an animal is prohibited, while 'Ata, Makhúl, Hasan, Shi'bí, and Sa'íd allow it as being the food of the followers of the Book (Rz).

667 Both the Jewish and the Christian laws do not compare well with the Islamic law in this respect. In Islam intermarriages with idol-worshippers are totally prohibited (2:221), but in the case of a people whose religion is based on a revealed book, intermarriages are allowed to the extent that women belonging to an alien religion may be taken in marriage. The giving away of Muslim women in marriage to followers of other religions is not, however, allowed. Indeed, while women belonging to other religions would be happy in a Muslim household, because of the status and rights which Islam confers on woman, Muslim women in an alien household would be in a condition of distress, because they would lose the rights which they enjoy in Muslim society. It may be added that the law here given is not limited to the Jews and the Christians, but includes the followers of all religions based on revelation. Hence the law was extended to the Persians by the companions of the Holy Prophet.

As for the Jewish law, which makes no exception, see Deut. 7:3: "Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son." Paul follows the Jewish law: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness?" (2 Cor. 6:14).

668 The denial of faith is variously explained. Some think it means denial of Allah; others, denial of the unity of Allah; while others still think that faith stands for the revelation of the Qur-án. The meaning in this last case is said to be the laying of stress upon the injunction relating to intermarriages with those who have any scriptures.

669 The reference is generally supposed to be to the oath of fidelity taken by the Medinites at 'Aqabah, but it is more likely to be to the swearing of allegiance at Hudaibiyyah, a more recent event, to which the Holy Qur-án also refers in 48:10 and 18.

670 The occasions on which the enemies of Islam endeavoured to take away the life of the Prophet or to exterminate the Muslims are too numerous to mention here. This is an obvious reference to those Quraish and their allies who left no stone unturned to destroy the Muslim community. The commentators, however, think that there is special reference to the attempt made by the Bani Nadir on the life of the Holy Prophet (Rz).

671 It is strange to find Rodwell adding a note here that the Prophet "invented these twelve leaders of tribes," whereas they are clearly mentioned by name in Num. 1:5–15, and in the 16th verse they are called princes of the tribes of their fathers; while in the 44th verse we have: "And the princes of Israel, being twelve men." And further, in Num. 13:3–15 we again read of twelve heads of the children of Israel having been sent to search the land of Canaan.

13 But on account of their breaking their covenant We cursed them and made their hearts hard; they altered the a 582. words from their places[a] and they neglected a portion of what they were reminded of;
Ar. thou shalt. and you shall always discover treachery in them excepting a few of them; so pardon them and turn away; surely Allah loves those who do good (to others).

14 And with those who say, We are Christians, We made a covenant,[673] but they neglected a portion of what they were reminded of, therefore We excited among them enmity and hatred to the day of resurrection; and Allah will inform them of what they did.[674]

15 O followers of the Book! indeed Our apostle has come to you making clear to you much of what you concealed of the Book and passing over much;[675] indeed, there has come to you light and a clear book from Allah;[676]

672 The following description of that land was given by Joshua and Caleb to the Israelites: "If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey" (Num. 14:8).

673 "I have yet many things to say to you, but ye cannot hear them now. Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come" (John 16:12, 13). The kingdom of God so often spoken of in the Gospels is no other than the spiritual kingdom established by the Holy Prophet, the Gospel being in fact only the good news of his advent.

674 The prophecy that there shall always be hatred and enmity between the various Christian peoples has proved true in all ages, and never more clearly than in the great European war of our own day. They will find peace and concord only when they accept Islam.

675 There were many truths which the Jews and the Christians had lost, their scriptures not having remained free from corruption. Some of these which were of permanent value were revealed in the Holy Qur-án, but others which had been given to them to suit only the requirements of the time when they were given were not now needed. Or the reference may be to the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet, for the Qur-án refers to only very few of them.

676 The Prophet is here called light because he leads men into light out of darkness, as stated in the next verse. The word may also have a reference to Jesus' description of him: he will guide you into all truth.

16 With it Allah guides him who will follow His pleasure
Or, safety. into the ways of peace and brings them out of utter darkness into light by His will and guides them to the right path.

17 Certainly they disbelieve who say: Surely, Allah—He is the Messiah, son of Mary. Say: Who then could control anything as against Allah when He wished to destroy the Messiah son of Mary and his mother and all those on the earth?[677] and Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what is between them; He creates what He pleases; and Allah has power over all things.

18 And the Jews and the Christians say: We are the sons of Allah and His beloved ones. Say: Why does He then chastise you for your faults?[678] Nay, you are mortals from among those whom He has created; He forgives whom He pleases and chastises whom He pleases;[679] and Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what is between them, and to Him is the eventual coming.

19 O followers of the Book! indeed Our apostle has come to you explaining to you after a cessation of the (mission of the) apostles,[680] lest you say:

677 The meaning is that Jesus Christ and his mother Mary, and all those who were on the earth, tasted equally of death; hence Jesus Christ was an ordinary human being and not God, for if he had been God he would not have died. In sometimes signifies iz or when (Mgh-LL).

678 The Divine law of evil being followed with evil consequences in this world had not ceased to work at the advent of either Moses or Jesus, hence there was no reason that it should cease to work in the life after death. Yet if the Jews and the Christians were indeed the beloved ones of God, their sins should not have met with punishment as they did in this very life, not to say in the life after death, in which they asserted they would not be punished. The words contain a clear refutation of the doctrine of atonement. In spite of the Christian's belief in atonement, when the Divine law of the punishment of evil in this life was not dispensed with for them, how could it have been dispensed with in the life after death?

679 It is in accordance with Divine laws that forgiveness and punishment are exercised, and the alleged atonement of Christ had brought about no change in that law.

680 Several centuries had elapsed since the appearance of any prophet in any country when the great Arabian Prophet made his appearance. No nation in the world claims the appearance of any apostle in it between the advent of Jesus Christ and that of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him. The world was as it were preparing itself for the advent of the greatest of all prophets, who was to be an apostle to all the nations of the world. Hence the cessation of prophecy among all people. And moreover the scriptures of all nations had undergone alterations, so that the advent of the Apostle Muhammad, may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him, was preceded by an entire cessation of the mission of the apostles.

681 There is no anachronism here. The Israelites are here told that two favours had been bestowed upon them: (1) prophets were raised among them; (2) they were made kings. The reference need not be to the earlier history of the Israelites, but to their history as dating from the time of Moses, for the advent of Moses had brought about an entire change both in their spiritual and political status. Not only had two prophets, Moses and Aaron, already appeared among them, but with the Mosaic law was laid down the basis of a dispensation which gave them promise of numerous prophets appearing among them. And politically they had no doubt already emerged as an independent nation, being masters of themselves and no more slaves of their Egyptian masters. They had acquired kingship, and so the words no doubt contained a clear prophetic reference to their future career as a ruling nation. Spiritual dominance combined with political supremacy was manifestly a favour which was not bestowed upon any of the other contemporary nations.

682 "All the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature" (Num. 13 : 32). For the murmurings of the Israelites and their refusal to go against the enemy, see Num. 14 : 1–4.

23 Two men of those who feared, upon both of whom Allah had bestowed a favour, said: Enter upon them by the gate, for when you have entered it you shall surely be victorious, and on Allah should you rely if you are believers.[683]

24 They said: O Moses! We shall never enter it so long as they are in it; go therefore you and your Lord, then fight you both, surely we will here sit down.[684]

Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land . . . their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us, fear them not" (Num. 14 : 6–9).

684 Some commentators think that by your lord is here meant Aaron, because he was Moses' elder brother (Rz).

30 Then his mind facilitated to him the slaying of his brother, so he slew him; then he became one of the losers.

31 Then Allah sent a crow digging up the earth so that he might show him how he should cover the dead body of his brother.[688] He said: Woe me! do I lack the strength that I should be like this crow and cover the dead body of my brother? so he became of those who regret.

32 For this reason did We prescribe to the children of Israel that whoever slays a soul, unless it be for manslaughter or for mischief in the land, it is as though he slew all men; and whoever keeps it alive, it is as though he kept alive all men;[689] and certainly 686 The reference is apparently to the story of Cain and Abel. Compare Gen. 4:3-12. Hasan and Dk are, however, of opinion that the reference is to two men from among the Israelites, because every man may be spoken of as a son of Adam (Rz). But the whole story may be taken allegorically to refer to the Jewish plots against the Holy Prophet, where the Israelites may be taken for the aggressive and sinful brother and the Ishmaelites, as represented by the Holy Prophet, for the righteous one. It may be noted that in v. 11 we have a reference to the Jewish plots against the Holy Prophet's life, and the two sections that follow are, as it were, parenthetical, reminding the Jews and the Christians of their covenants and their violation of them, and the subject of v. 11 is continued in this and the following section.

687 Ismī here means not my sin, but the sin committed against me, i.e. the sin of murder; while by ismika is meant your sin, i.e. his previous sin on account of which his offering was not accepted.

688 The Bible is silent on this point; but there is nothing improbable in primitive man having learnt some things from other creatures.

689 The reference is generally understood to mean the gravity of the crime of murder, and the reason for its becoming a capital crime requiring the execution of the criminal. But by the slaying of a soul may as well be meant the slaying of the prophets who come to

Our apostles came to them with clear arguments, but even after that many of them certainly act extravagantly in the land.

33 The punishment of those who wage war against Allah and His apostle and strive to make mischief in the land[690] is only this, that they should be murdered or crucified or their hands and their feet should be cut off on opposite sides or they should be imprisoned;[691] this shall be as a disgrace for them in this world, and in the hereafter they shall have a grievous chastisement, establish righteousness, because the slaying of one of them is indeed equivalent to the slaying of all men and assisting in the saving of their lives is surely the same as saving the lives of all men. The reference is to the Jewish plots against the life of the Holy Prophet, and that is the reason for mentioning here the Israelites in particular.

Or, on account of opposition.

690 The words used here seem to imply originally all those opponents of Islam, including the Jews, who waged war on the Muslims and made mischief in the land by persecuting or slaying innocent Muslims who fell into their hands. But it has generally been accepted that dacoits and murderers who cause disorder in a settled state of society may be dealt with according to this verse. The punishment described is of four kinds, which clearly shows that the punishment to be inflicted in any particular case would depend upon the circumstances of the case as well as the time and place where the crime is committed. If murder has been committed in the course of dacoity, the punishment must include the execution of the culprit, which may take the form of crucifixion if the offence is so heinous or the culprit has caused such terror in the land that the leaving of his body on the cross is necessary as a deterrent. In other cases the punishment may be imprisonment, where severer punishment is deemed unnecessary.

691 ينفوا من الارض literally means they should be banished from the earth, but according to Abú Hanífa the meaning here is imprisonment (al-habs), and most lexicologists accept this (Rz). LA also accepts the interpretation that they should be kept in the prison. The reason is apparent. No one can be banished from the whole of the earth unless he is kept in prison. Or al-arḍ may signify a particular country, and in that case the words would imply deportation.

692 The martial law of Islam, as well as its ordinary criminal law, is subject to this exception. Past crimes must be forgiven if there is sincere repentance.

693 The crime of theft, like that of fornication, is one which Islam has dealt with severely, and the punishment, which requires the cutting off of the hand of the thief, must no doubt have a deterrent effect. But as imprisonment has already been mentioned in connection with certain cases of dacoity, the ordinary crime of theft may be punished similarly, while the cutting off of a hand may be reserved as a punishment for serious cases by habitual offenders upon whom imprisonment has no deterrent effect. The considerations which entitle us to make this distinction are as follows: (a) The punishment is called exemplary, and exemplary punishment could only be inflicted where the crime is very serious or the offender is an habitual criminal. (b) The punishment is not to be inflicted if the offender repents and turns from his evil course. The next verse shows that the punishment of cutting off the hand is only for a criminal who does not reform, i.e. for the habitual offender. Moreover, what is required is repentance and reform, but no one can affirm that when an offender repents he will also reform. To give him a chance to reform it is necessary that he should be given freedom of action before the more serious punishment is inflicted. (c) The punishment of the cutting off of hands has been mentioned in connection with the more serious crimes spoken of in v. 33, while even those serious crimes may be punished only with imprisonment, and therefore mere stealing, which is by no means a serious offence unless it becomes habitual, need not be punished with such extreme severity. (d) Various incidents are related in the early history of Islam in which theft was not punished by the cutting off of hands (S.A. Commentary of the Holy Qur-án). (e) Even the jurists who deduced such condign punishment from this verse for theft have been compelled to introduce many limitations, without which the verse could have no practical application; the limitation which seeks to restrict the punishment to the habitual offender is at least as reasonable as any other.

At the most, the cutting off of the hand as stated in this verse, and imprisonment as stated in v. 33 (see 691), may be taken as alternative forms of punishment for theft. In the early history of Islam, on a representation made to Hishám, that monarch decided to try imprisonment and cutting off of hands as a punishment for theft in two alternate years, but as the former punishment increased the offence, the cutting off of hands remained in force; had there been no increase, the alternative punishment of imprisonment for thieves would have been adopted. This shows at least that if the circumstances of society permit, imprisonment may be introduced as a punishment in ordinary cases of theft, while the more exemplary punishment may be inflicted in those of a more serious character.

694 The meaning is that they listen, but their object is only to invent lies and to spread false reports of your statements to their elders, who are the people who have not come to you. The words can equally bear the interpretation that they listen only to the lies uttered by their Rabbis, who have not come to you.

42 (They are) listeners of a lie, devourers of what is forbidden; therefore if they come to you, judge between them or turn aside from them, and if you turn aside from them, they shall not harm you in any way; and if you judge, judge between them with equity; surely Allah loves those who judge equitably.[695]

695 By the agreement drawn up between the various nationalities of Medina on the advent of the Holy Prophet there (see 126), all disputes were to be referred to the Holy Prophet, but the Jews had by this time become so inimical to the Holy Prophet that he is allowed to refuse to judge between them. In case he judged between them, he is still told to judge with equity. To be equitable notwithstanding the severest enmity and notwithstanding the knowledge that the Jews were always plotting with the enemies of Islam for its extirpation, is that trait in the character of the Holy Prophet which marks him out as having reached the highest point of moral rectitude to which man can attain.

696 The Divine judgment in Torah referred to here may either imply the Divine injunctions in the Torah which the Jews refused to follow, or the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet which they refused to accept.

697 Verses 44-47 are supposed by Christian critics to be evidence of the purity of the Torah and the Gospel. How they arrive at that conclusion I am unable to see. There are several statements made with regard to these two books in these verses, and before we consider them it were as well to bear in mind that their true value and the relation in which they stand to the Holy Qur-án is spoken of in v. 48, and therefore 703 should be read along with these verses. The first statement made here is that the Torah was a Divine revelation containing light and guidance. This is a statement which no Muslim has ever denied. What is denied is that that light and guidance were kept intact throughout the ages. It is the Book of Allah,[698] and they were witnesses thereof; therefore fear not the people and fear Me, and do not take a small price for My communications; and whoever did not judge by what Allah revealed, those are they that are the unbelievers.[699]

45 And We prescribed to them in it that life is for life, and eye for eye, and nose for nose, and ear for ear, and tooth for tooth, and (that there is) reprisal in wounds;[700] but he who foregoes it, it shall be an expiation for him;[701] and whoever did not judge by what further denied that these two books were meant for the whole world and for all ages. They certainly contained light and guidance, but only for one people—the Israelites, and for a limited time. The Christian critics forget that, notwithstanding the light and guidance contained in the Torah, the Gospel was sent down for the Israelite people, which shows clearly that the light and guidance contained in the Torah were not considered sufficient even for the Israelites for all ages, obviating the necessity of a fresh revelation. Thus the Quaranic view of the Torah is that it contained light and guidance for one nation for a certain time, other nations having light and guidance through their own revelations.

698 The statement made here is that the masters of Divine knowledge and the doctors "were required to guard part of the book of Allah," i.e. the Torah. Now this statement by no means implies that they actually guarded the Book so as to be able to transmit it in all its purity. They were no doubt required to do it, but it is nowhere stated that they had succeeded in guarding it. As against this, where the guarding of the Qur-án is spoken of, it is not the learned among the Muslims that are required to guard the Holy Book, but a protection has been provided for it which is far surer than that of any man, for if men had been entrusted with the task they would most probably have failed, as is illustrated in the case of the Israelites. Thus with regard to the Qur-án being guarded we are told: "Surely We have revealed the Reminder and We will most surely be its guardian" (15:9).

Another point worth noting in the statement under discussion is that even the doctors were required to guard min Kitáb-illah, which signifies a part of the Book of Allah. The whole is not meant, otherwise the word min, signifying part, would not have been added.

699 The statement made here in connection with the Torah is that those who did not judge (such being the real significance of the words lam yaḥkum) by what Allah revealed are unbelievers. And there is no doubt that the people for whom the Torah was meant could not be called believers in it if they did not judge matters according to it. It should further be borne in mind that by judging is not meant only the judging of civil or criminal cases, but judging in all matters of religion, so that those who did not judge the revelation of the Holy Prophet by what was revealed in the Torah were unbelievers. And note that the adoption of the words what Allah has revealed instead of the Torah is not without significance. It shows that the whole of the Torah as existing then was not looked upon by the Holy Qur-án as being the Divine revelation, otherwise a verse speaking of the Torah would have ended with the statement whoever judges not by the Torah, instead of what we actually have, whoever did not judge by what Allah revealed, the difference leading to the clear conclusion that the Qur-án considered the Torah to contain something which was not revealed by Allah.

701 If a man foregoes his right to an act of reprisal against his brother, this shall be an expiation for any wrong he may have done.

702 The description of the Gospel as containing light and guidance conveys the same significance as the similar statement regarding the Torah, for which see 697. In addition it is stated that the Gospel verified the Torah. The Christian critics who are so fond of showing the existence of differences between the Torah and the Holy Qur-án, in order to disprove the statement that the latter is a verifier of the former, should note that the Gospel is also called a verifier of the Torah, notwithstanding the fact that it introduces many new doctrines in place of those given in the Mosaic law, as in the case of divorce, the law of reprisal, etc. This description of the Gospel clearly shows that by verification is meant only corroboration of the general principles and broad doctrines of the faith, such as the unity of God and equitable dealing with men, or the declaration by one prophet of the truth of a previous prophet, as the declaration of the truth of Moses by Jesus and of both by the Holy Prophet.

703 The Qur-án is called muhaimin or a guardian over all previous revelation, thus showing that whatever was of permanent value in the previous scriptures has been preserved in the Qur-án, and secured from the corruption which it was undergoing in them. The previous books contained a light and guidance for the people for whom they were meant, and they were commanded to judge by those books, but the Qur-án is now made the Book which judges all truth, wherever it may have been, and therefore is the only Book which should be followed.

704 The appointment of a law and a way for every one refers to the giving of different laws to different nations in accordance with their requirements (Bd.) before the revelation of the Holy Qur-án, which fulfilled the requirements of all nations and all ages. Thus the Qur-án here recognizes the principle to which it refers frequently, that prophets were raised among every people, for which see particularly 10 : 47, 13 : 7, and 35 : 24.

Hence, led by that discretion, men follow different ways, adopting different sects, whereas if man's very nature had been so made as to make him unable to use his discretionary powers, his better qualities, which give him preference over the rest of creation, would not have been manifested.

any party of them, whether Jews, Christians, or idolaters (Rz). It would have been weakness of faith in the ultimate triumph of Islam if, from fear of a powerful enemy, they had sought help and friendship here and there among a hostile people, as the next verse shows. And though the civilized nations go to-day a step further than the Qur-án, yet they must find fault with the Qur-án for having taught this common-sense principle. When two nations are at war, an individual of one nation having friendly relations with the enemy nation is treated as an enemy; that is exactly what the Qur-án requires when it says: "And whoever amongst you takes them for a friend, then surely he is one of them."

707 By hastening towards them is meant hastening to make friendship with them or seeking their help. The hypocrites did this, fearing a Muslim reverse.

708 By victory is meant a victory for the Muslims, and by punishment a punishment for their enemies. The word amr, as meaning punishment or threatened punishment, is used in the Holy Qur-án several times in the phrase amr-ullah, as in 10 : 24, 11 : 40, 16 : 1, in all of which cases the commentators and lexicologists take it as meaning the threatened punishment ordained by Allah (Zj, TA-LL). The word is clearly used here in the same sense. The weak in faith fear the enemy who is indeed powerful, the Jews within and the idolaters without. They are told that Allah will soon grant a victory to the Holy Prophet or bring down a punishment upon his opponents. But we may as well take amr as conveying its ordinary significance of commandment, in which case there is a reference here to the government of Islam, which it was prophesied would soon be established.

709 This was a prophecy that what the hypocrites were doing in opposition to the Prophet would prove of no effect, and they would not be able to achieve the end which they had in view.

710 This was said to give comfort to the Prophet against the machinations of the Jews, who made plots of every sort to make the Muslims apostatize (see 448). Who were the particular men or tribes that apostatized, and who were those who came in their place, is a matter which lies within the sphere of history. The Prophet's life at Medina, however, affords clear proof that apostasy never thinned the ranks of Islam, and if one man apostatized, a number of people joined the ranks of Islam and fought in its defence. Three tribes are said to have apostatized towards the close of the Prophet's life, but as these were dealt with in the time of Abu Bakr, the prophetic reference in these words is clearly to Abu Bakr's caliphate, which witnessed a fulfilment of this prophecy when the companions of the Holy Prophet, immediately after his death, had to suppress a very great rising, which would ultimately have led to the apostasy of whole tribes. Thus Abu Bakr and his helpers and advisers are the people who are here spoken of as loving Allah and being His beloved ones.

711 The description given here is a general one. The story that 'Alí gave away his ring to a poor man while bowing down in prayer does not explain the verse. The Zakát, or the poor-rate, was paid into the treasury, the bait-ul-mál, and was then appropriated to several heads. The meaning is clear. The believers are told that they should not take the Jews and the Christians for their guardians or friends, but their guardians are Allah and His Apostle and the faithful followers of the Prophet. The next verse makes it clear that the whole body of the believers is meant here, for they are called the party of Allah who shall be triumphant, and evidently it was the Muslim community as a whole that was triumphant, and not 'Alí alone. The persons addressed seem to be those whose faith in the ultimate triumph of Islam was not so strong as that of the general body of the true believers.

712 It is clear from this that the Muslims were prohibited from having friendly relations with those who mocked their religion and their Prophet.

58 And when you call to prayer they make it a mockery and a joke; this is because they are a people who do not understand.

59 Say: O followers of the Book! do you find fault[713] with us (for aught) except that we believe in Allah and in what has been revealed to us and what was revealed before, and that most of you are transgressors?

60 Say: Shall I inform you of (him who is) worse than this in retribution from Allah? (worse is he) whom Allah has cursed and brought His wrath upon, and of whom He made apes and swine, and he who served the devil: these are worse in place and more erring from the straight path.[714]

713 Naqama is synonymous with ankara, i.e. he found fault with, disapproved of, or hated him (Rgh, Rz).

714 It is clear that those who are here spoken of as having been made apes and swine are the Jews. Compare 107 and 2:65 as explaining the significance of these words. It is remarkable that though the people spoken of are in both places the same, they are on one occasion called simply apes and on the other apes and swine. In addition, the same people are here spoken of as serving the devil; and the concluding words that the people who were thus made apes and swine and the servants of the devil are "worse in place and more erring from the straight path," remove all doubts, establishing the fact that they were still men, because apes and swine could not be said to be erring from the straight path. Thus this verse lends additional support to the conclusion arrived at in 107. The next verse makes this plainer, for these very apes and swine are there described as coming to the Apostle with unbelief and going away with unbelief.

715 Suḥt signifies any property that is forbidden, not lawful to be gained (Msb, TA-LL).

eating of what is unlawfully acquired? Certainly evil is that which they work.

It is also applied to a bribe (Rgh). Hence the reference is here to any unlawful act of acquiring property.

716 This reference was levelled at an objection against the raising of subscriptions for the defence of the Muslim community; the absurd idea of the taunting Jews being that a cause which was represented as Divine, or the cause of truth, should not stand in need of funds raised by the ordinary methods of subscription. Compare 3:180: "Allah is poor and we are rich," and 524. Or the meaning may be that the hand of Allah is withheld from assisting the Muslims because the prophecies of the final triumph of the Muslims over their opponents had not yet been fulfilled. The answer is a prophecy that they shall find their own hands withheld from assisting the enemies of the Muslims, and further that they shall be cursed, i.e. banished from all good and brought on evil days. The past tense is often used in the Holy Qur-án to indicate certainty as to the future.

717 By the iqámat or keeping up of the Torah and the Gospel is meant their preserving these books in the right state and acting up to them. The eating from above is in reference to spiritual food, or receiving of the Divine revelation, and eating from beneath their feet signifies the earthly provisions; i.e. they would have abundance of both. But as they failed, the door to Divine revelation was closed on them. The attitude of liberality adopted by Islam towards even the worst forms of religion is unparalleled. Consider, for instance, the direction given to Muslims: "Do not abuse those whom they call upon besides Allah" (6:109), according to which even idols should not be mentioned contemptuously, and compare it with any direction that may be contained in any other sacred book concerning the attitude to be adopted towards other religions. Thus here, notwithstanding their strong enmity to Islam, a party of the Jews and the Christians is described as keeping to the moderate course. The first part of this verse shows that Divine revelation had been tampered with by the Jews and the Christians.

718 In Mecca the Prophet's only enemies were the Quraish. His flight to Medina increased the difficulties tenfold. The Jews were a powerful nation, and a little plain speaking had made them the most dreadful enemies. The other tribes of Arabia had also by this time been successfully excited by the Quraish to side with them. The Qur-án now not only condemned idolatry, but also the Jewish transgressions and Christian errors. Hence we find the Divine revelation promising that the Prophet shall remain under Divine protection as against the innumerable dangers that threatened from all quarters and the numerous plots against his life.

719 This is a very severe condemnation of the contention of the Jews and the Christians. They had not even preserved the Torah and the Gospel in their purity, and whatever remained of the original teachings of the prophets they did not act upon. Hence their position in a discussion against the Holy Prophet was nothing. If they had held their books intact and had acted according to the instructions of the Divine revelations as contained therein, they could not have denied the revelation of the Qur-án, which fulfilled not only the prophecies of the previous books but also all the tests of Divine revelation. As they did not possess the Divine revelation in its purity, they had not the least excuse to reject the Qur-án.

720 Although they had been repeatedly warned of the afflictions which would befall them, they still thought that, being a favoured nation, they would not suffer punishment for their evil deeds. The word fitnah is not limited either to punishment in this world or to that in the next, but includes both. They were also sorely afflicted in this life. They had been subjected to great sufferings at the hands of Nebuchudnazzer and the Babylonian rulers who followed him, large numbers having been slain and the rest taken prisoners.

721 The reference is said to be to the rising of John the Baptist and Jesus the Christ among them (Rz). Thus Allah's turning mercifully to them signifies the advent of Jesus, and their becoming blind and deaf a second time refers to the Christian error in deifying Jesus, a fact clearly indicated in the next verse.

722 "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and Him only shalt thou serve" (Matt. 4:10). Compare this severe condemnation of the Christian doctrine of the Divinity of Jesus with the plain admission of their better qualities in v. 82. The Qur-án knows of no such enmity to a particular nation as to condemn even the good that is met with in it, nor of friendship to a people so as not to condemn its errors.

723 The Christian doctrine of the Trinity is here plainly referred to. It should be noted that the name of Mary is not mentioned in connection with the doctrine of the Trinity. But as the Christians, especially the Roman Catholics, invested Mary with the Divine character and there is no god but the one God, and if they desist not from what they say, a painful chastisement shall befall those among them who disbelieve.

74 Will they not then turn to Allah and ask His forgiveness? and Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

78–81. Israelites cursed by David and Jesus on account of their transgressions. 82. Jewish hatred and Christian friendship of Muslims. 83–86. Christian believers in Islam.

78 Those who disbelieved from among the children of Israel were cursed by the tongue of David and Jesus son of being the mother of God, the Qur-án often mentions her along with Jesus as being an ordinary mortal.

724 Feeling hungry and partaking of food shows that both Jesus and his mother were ordinary mortals. If Jesus had been above mortals he would also have been above the needs of mortals, the most essential of which is partaking of food, without which no human being can live, but of which the Supreme Being has no need.

724A The ghuluww or undue immoderation spoken of here refers to the Christian doctrine raising a mortal to the dignity of godhead. The Christians are here told that in making this doctrine the basis of their religion they have only followed an erroneous doctrine preached by a people before them. Recent criticism has shown that the Christians have only followed previous idolatrous nations in deifying a man.

725 After Moses, David and Jesus, who represent the highest achievement of Israelite prophethood in temporal and spiritual glory, spoke of the advent of the Holy Prophet in unmistakable terms. The curse is used here in its original sense. Both prophets had warned the Jews that their transgressions called for Divine punishment which should soon overtake them if they did not mend their ways. The time of both was followed by a great affliction overtaking the Jews, in the respective depredations of the Babylonian kings and the destruction wrought by Titus.

726 By the prophet here is meant Moses, who clearly foretold the advent of the Holy Prophet Muhammad; therefore the Jews, if they believed in Moses, could not have joined the opponents of the Holy Prophet in opposition to him.

727 The verse shows the better side of the Christian religion, and it affords a convincing proof of the cosmopolitan nature of the religion of Islam which did not deprecate goodness even though manifested in a people who had adopted open enmity towards it.

Muslims warned of the Besetting Sins of Previous People

87-89. Use and acquisition of lawful things recommended. 90, 91. Intoxicants and gambling prohibited. 92, 93. Obedience and regard of duty to be made main principles of action.

87 O you who believe! do not forbid (yourselves) the good things which Allah has made lawful for you and do not exceed the limits; surely Allah does not love those who exceed the limits.[729]

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا لَا تُحَرِّمُوا طَيِّبَاتِ مَا أَحَلَّ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ وَلَا تَعْتَدُوا إِنَّ اللَّهَ لَا يُحِبُّ الْمُعْتَدِينَ ۝

728 This refers to the Christians who believed. An important personage belonging to this class was the Negus of Abyssinia, in whose dominions the Muslims found shelter in the early days of the Prophet's mission, when compelled to fly from Mecca on account of the severe persecutions of the Quraish. Even there they were followed by a deputation of the persecutors, who, in order to excite the religious hatred of the Christian monarch against the homeless Muslims, represented to the Negus that the fugitives not only denounced the idols of the Meccans but also spoke disparagingly of Jesus Christ. Whereupon, the Muslims being called upon to answer the charge, their leader read out the portion of the chapter "Mary" dealing with Jesus Christ, and the words so impressed the Negus that he wept, and said that Jesus Christ was not one whit more than what the Qur-án described him to be. That he subsequently became a true convert to Islam is clearly shown by a funeral service having been held for him by the Holy Prophet when news of his death reached Medina.

729 These words not only denounce such self-denying practices as those adopted by the Christian monks, spoken of in the last section, but also the act of depriving oneself of Divine blessings by falling into evil and slothful habits. Thus, while the Muslims are told on the one hand not to follow the self-imposed restrictions of the Christians, they are at the same time warned that they can enjoy Divine blessings only so long as they strive arduously for them.

730 It is wrong to suppose that this verse sanctions the expiation of all kinds of oaths. Reading it along with the previous verses shows that the oaths referred to are in relation to vows, etc., by which one forbids oneself what is otherwise lawful. A comparison with 2: 226 shows that that verse is also to be read along with the previous verse (i.e. 2: 225), which forbids the taking of oaths that prevent one doing some good. And the injunction at the end of this verse, guard your oaths, also shows that oaths cannot be violated generally, and therefore expiation is only allowed in the case of oaths by which a man deprives himself of some lawful thing or of an occasion of virtue. It is further evident that the Book which lays stress upon the faithful performance of all kinds of engagements could not allow the violating of agreements which had been confirmed with oaths.

731 Guard your oaths, i.e. do not take oaths unless the necessity is urgent (Rz). The words can also bear the interpretation keep your oaths, i.e. be true to oaths when you have taken them.

732 This verse totally prohibits all intoxicants and games of chance; and besides, by classing them with sacrifices to stones set up for idols and dividing by arrows, subjects them to the prohibition of v. 3. It is related that when this verse was revealed, a crier proclaimed in the streets of Medina that wine was prohibited, and in response to this every jar of wine in a Muslim house was emptied, so that wine flowed in the streets (Bkh). Never in the history of the world was such a deep-rooted evil as drink so suddenly yet so completely eradicated.

733 Only one very clear reason is here given why intoxicants and games of chance are forbidden.

734 The verse speaks of those who died before the prohibition came. But even if it be taken to refer to all believers, it would not justify our doing what is unlawful, because one who believes, does good deeds, and is careful of his duty will not approach any prohibited thing. In thrice mentioning belief and carefulness of one's duty, the reference is to the threefold duty of man, viz. to Allah, to himself, and to others.

735 The prohibition to kill game when on pilgrimage is a token of respect for the security of the Ka'ba, in addition to being a measure necessary for the safety of life in such a large gathering, where liberty to hunt would most probably lead to dangerous accidents to human life and limb.

736 Bahr is used here in an extensive sense, and by the game of the sea is meant all water game, whether sea, river, pond, or lake (Rz).

737 The ṭa'ām (lit. food) of the sea is here distinguished from its game, and means, according to the first successor of the Holy Prophet, what is found, the sea or river having thrown it (on dry land), or what is left by the water having receded from it, for the catching of which no struggle is needed (Rz).

738 Ka'bah, from Ka'aba, meaning it swelled or became prominent, is so called because of its prominence (Rz), or it is a prophetical name showing that it shall forever have eminence in the world. It is also called bait-ul-ḥarām, or the Sacred House, and among the Arabs it was known as the bait-ullāh, or the house of Allah. The building proper is 55 feet by 50 feet, but the whole courtyard in which it stands measures 530 feet by 500 feet.

739 This is a prophetic announcement that the Ka'ba shall forever remain a support or stay for men, where pilgrims shall forever flock and shall take animals for sacrifice. The reference to this prophecy is elucidated in the concluding words: "This is that you may know that Allah knows whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth"; that is, the fulfilment of this prophecy in all future ages shall be a sign of the great knowledge of Allah, who pronounced it at a time when the Ka'ba was hardly known beyond the environs of Arabia (see 469).

98 Know that Allah is severe in requiting (evil), and that Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

99 Nothing is (incumbent) on the apostle but to deliver (the message), and Allah knows what you do openly and what you hide.

100 Say: The bad and the good are not equal, though the abundance of the bad may please you; so be careful of (your duty to) Allah, O men of understanding, that you may be successful.

101 O you who believe! do not put questions about things which if declared to you may trouble you, and if you question about them when the Qur-án is being revealed, they shall be declared to you; Allah pardons this, and Allah is Forgiving, Forbearing.[740]

740 As Islam discouraged rigorous practices, such as monastic life, it also prohibited questions relating to details on many points which would require this or that practice to be made obligatory, and much was left to individual will or the circumstances of the time and place.

741 It does not refer to a particular people. The history of previous nations shows that the statement is generally true.

742 The liberation of certain animals in honour of idols was a practice among the Arabs, and as Islam uprooted every vestige of idolatry, this practice is condemned here. Baḥirah (from baḥara, meaning he cut or slit) means a she-camel having her ear slit. When a she-camel (according to some also a ewe or a she-goat) had brought forth five (or seven, or ten) young ones, the last of these, if a male, was slaughtered, but if a female, her ear was slit. According to others it was the mother; she being also exempted from slaughter and from carrying burdens (LL).

Sáibah (from sába, which means it ran of itself) signifies any beast left to pasture without attention. According to some, it was the mother of a baḥirah, or a she-camel which, having brought forth females at ten successive births, was set at liberty to pasture where she would, and was not ridden nor was her milk taken (LL).

Waṣílah (from waṣala, i.e. he connected or joined) means a she-goat which brought forth twins, a male and a female; when the male was brought forth alone it was slaughtered to the idols, the female alone being kept; but in the case of the male and the female being born twins, the male was considered to be joined to the female, and was not therefore sacrificed to the gods (Rz).

Ḥámi (from ḥama-hu, i.e. he prohibited or interdicted it or protected or guarded it) means a stallion-camel that has prohibited or interdicted his back (to be used for bearing a rider or any burden); that is left at liberty and not made any use of; whose offspring in the second degree of descent has been fertile (LL, Rz).

743 The following story is related in connection with this verse. Two brothers, both Christians, Tamím Dárí and 'Adí, were entrusted by their dying Muslim companion Budail, in Syria, with certain property to be made over to his relatives on their return to Medina. The two brothers, however, stole a cup of silver, making over the remaining property; the relatives found a complete list disclosing the existence of the stolen cup of silver as being part of the original property, and thus the evidence of the Christian brothers was shown to be false.

This story abundantly proves that so late as the revelation of this chapter, which was revealed towards the close of the Holy Prophet's life, Muslim and Christian relations, notwithstanding differences of religion, were still friendly. It further demonstrates that the evidence of the followers of an alien religion is admissible according to the Holy Qur-án.

(them), they shall both swear by Allah, (saying): We will not take for it a price, though there be a relative, and we will not hide the testimony of Allah[744] for then certainly we should be among the sinners.

107 Then if it becomes known that they both have been guilty of a sin, two others shall stand up in their place from among those who have a claim against them, the two nearest in kin; so they two should swear by Allah: Certainly our testimony is truer than the testimony of those two, and we have not exceeded the limit, for then most surely we should be of the unjust.

Or, deserved imputation.

108 This is more proper in order that they should give testimony truly[745] or fear that other oaths be given after their oaths; and be careful of (your duty to) Allah, and hear; and Allah does not guide the transgressing people.

744 "The testimony of Allah" stands for the testimony which Allah had enjoined to be borne uprightly.

745 You say: ليس لكلامك وجه i.e. there is no truth or correctness in thy saying (TA-LL), and also قص الحديث على وجهه meaning he related the story in its proper manner (LL in art. qaṣṣ). Waj-h also signifies drift, mode or course or bearing.

746 The question is, Did those to whom you were sent accept your message and remain true to it, or was it otherwise? The answer of the prophets is that only Allah knew how their message was received, because they could not say how far its rejecters were guilty, nor how far the accepters of the message remained true to it after their death.

110 When Allah will say: O Jesus son of Mary! remember My favour on you and on your mother, when I strengthened you with the holy revelation;[a] you spoke to the people in the cradle and when of old age,[b] and when I taught you the Book and the wisdom and the Torah and the Gospel; and when you determined out of clay a thing like the form of a bird by My permission, then you breathed into it and it became a bird by My permission,[c] and you healed the blind and the leprous by My permission;[d] and when you brought forth the dead by My permission;[e] and when I withheld the children of Israel from you when you came to them with clear arguments, but those who disbelieved among them said: This is nothing but clear enchantment.

111 And when I revealed to the disciples,[f] saying, Believe in Me and My apostle, they said: We believe and bear witness that we submit (ourselves).

112 When the disciples said: O Jesus, son of Mary! will your Lord consent[747] to send down to us food from heaven?[748] He said: Be careful of (your duty to) Allah if you are believers.

748 Máidah is from máda, which has two meanings: (1) it became in a state of motion, and (2) he conferred a benefit or favour on him. According to Rgh máda-ni means he gave me food, and مائدة من السماء is either food or knowledge, because knowledge is the nutriment for hearts, as food is the nutriment for bodies (Rgh). Máidah is also the table with the food upon it, but a table without food is not so called (Al-Fárisí-LL). 116 And when Allah will say: O Jesus, son of Mary! did you say to men, Take me and my mother for two gods besides Allah,[751] he will say: Glory be to Thee, it did not befit me that I should say what I had no right to (say); if I had said it, Thou wouldst from the root-meaning and from the use of the word it is clear that máidah is food, and this significance is given by LL on the authority of many lexicologists. Rz gives ma'țiyah or what is given as a benefit or a favour to be the meaning.

أَنْ أَقُولَ مَا لَيْسَ لِي بِحَقٍّ إِنْ كُنْتُ قُلْتُهُ

749 According to Bḍ, 'Íd means an ever-recurring happiness or source of enjoyment.

750 This passage seems to refer to the well-known prayer for daily bread, which Jesus appears to have included in the famous Lord's prayer on account of the earthly inclinations of his disciples. The food of earth has no doubt been granted in abundance to the Christians, but this has deprived them of the heavenly food. Compare the Muslim's prayer in the opening chapter, which craves not for bread but for the right path. The form of the prayer, that it should be an ever-recurring happiness, shows clearly that the prayer was not for a table laden with provisions, as is generally supposed. As to its being sent down from heaven, it should be borne in mind that—in the language of the Holy Qur-án—every thing is with God and is sent down to men. Compare 15:21: "And there is not a thing but with Us are the treasures of it, and We do not send it down but in a known measure."

751 From this description of Mary being taken for a god by the Christians, some Christian critics of the Qur-án conclude that the doctrine of the Trinity according to the Qur-án consists of three persons—God, Jesus, and Mary. But this is an absolutely unwarranted conclusion. Mary is no doubt spoken of as being taken for an object of worship by the Christians; but the doctrine of the Trinity is not mentioned here, while the Divinity of Mary is not mentioned where the Trinity is spoken of. Had Mary not been worshipped by the Christians as the "Mother of God," the conclusion would have been safe that the Qur-án mistook Mary for the third person of the Trinity. But the doctrine and practice of Mariolatry, as it is called by Protestant controversialists, is too well known. In the catechism of the Roman Church the following doctrines are to be found: "That she is truly the mother of God, and the second Eve, by whose means we have received blessing and life; that she is the mother of Pity and very specially our advocate; that her images are of the utmost utility" (Ency. Br. 11th ed., vol. 17, p. 813). It is also stated that her intercessions are directly appealed to in the Litany. And further, that there were certain women in Thrace, Scythia, and Arabia who were in the habit of worshipping the virgin as a goddess, the offer of a cake being one of the features of their worship. "From the time of the council of Ephesus (held in 431 Christian era)," says the same writer, "to exhibit figures of the virgin and child became the approved expression of orthodoxy. . . . Of the growth of the Marian cultus, alike in the east and in the west, after the decision at Ephesus it would be impossible to trace the history. . . . Justinian in one of his laws bespeaks her advocacy for the Empire, and he inscribes the high altar in the new church of St. Sophia with her name. Narses looks to her directions on the field of battle. The Emperor Heracleus bears her image on his banner. John of Damascus speaks of her as the Sovereign lady to whom the whole creation has been made subject by her son. Peter Damian recognizes her as the most exalted of all creatures and apostrophizes her as deified and endowed with all power in heaven and in earth, yet not forgetful of our race." The Christian world had in fact felt "the need for a mediator to deal with the very mediator," and thus Mary was raised to the throne of Divinity along with Jesus.

751A By what is in my mind, the things known to me are meant, and by what is in Thy mind, the things known to Thee.

752 This verse is a conclusive proof that Jesus died a natural death, and is not now alive in heaven, according to the theoretic belief of the Christians and the supposition of many Muslims; because here Jesus says that so long as he was among his followers he was a witness of their condition, and he did not find them holding the belief in his Divinity. The logical conclusion of this statement is that the false doctrine of his Divinity was introduced into the Christian faith after his death, after "Thou didst cause me to die" (see further 436).

A saying of the Holy Prophet is recorded in Bkh, in which the Holy Prophet speaks concerning himself in the very words which are here put into the mouth of Jesus. He said

119 Allah will say: This is the day when their truth shall benefit the truthful ones; they shall have gardens beneath which rivers flow to abide in them for ever; Allah is well pleased with them and they are well pleased with Allah; this is the mighty achievement.

120 Allah's is the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what is in them; and He has power over all things.

قَالَ اللّٰهُ هٰذَا يَوْمُ يَنْفَعُ الصّٰدِقِيْنَ صِدْقُهُمْ ؕ
لَهُمْ جَنّٰتٌ تَجْرِيْ مِنْ تَحْتِهَا الْاَنْهٰرُ خٰلِدِيْنَ
فِيْهَآ اَبَدًا ؕ رَضِيَ اللّٰهُ عَنْهُمْ وَرَضُوْا
عَنْهُ ؕ ذٰلِكَ الْفَوْزُ الْعَظِيْمُ ۝
لِلّٰهِ مُلْكُ السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْاَرْضِ وَمَا
فِيْهِنَّ ؕ وَهُوَ عَلٰى كُلِّ شَيْءٍ قَدِيْرٌ ۝

that he would be shown on the day of resurrection some men who had gone against his teachings, and "I would say what the righteous servant said: I was a witness of them so long as I was among them, but when Thou didst cause me to die, Thou wert the watcher over them."

This saying shows clearly that it was after the death of both Jesus and the Holy Prophet that their followers perverted their teachings.

Compare John 17 : 3, "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent"; and John 17 : 12, "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in Thy name."

Title and connection.

THE name of this chapter is taken from the mention of cattle in connection with certain superstitions and idolatrous practices of the Arabs, the abolition of which was needed to establish the doctrine of Divine Unity in all its purity. The object of Islam was not simply to preach Unity, but to make it the basis of a Muslim's practical life, and so to uproot all idolatrous practices.

The last chapter deals towards its close with the Christian doctrine of the deification of Jesus, and hence this chapter is introduced to deal at length with the doctrine of Divine Unity and its ultimate triumph, not only over idolatry, but over all kinds of polytheism. It may be added that though Divine Unity, the establishment of which is the chief object of the Qur-án, is frequently discussed in the previous chapters, its discussion at length is only taken up here after the details of the Law have been considered.

Ultimate Triumph of Divine Unity

1–3. Divine Unity. 4, 5. The mockers. 6. Nations live and die. 7–9. Hopeless unbelief. 10. Its consequences.

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

1 All praise is due to Allah, who created the heavens and

Subject-matter.

A perusal of the abstract of the various sections of this chapter will show that its one continuous theme is the Divine Unity. The Prophet had preached this noble doctrine for twelve whole years, both night and day, in the Metropolis of Arabia without apparently causing any great change in the national idol-worship of the people. Among the thousands that had listened to his noble message, less than a hundred had responded to his call, and those few converts had either fled to Abyssinia or were now preparing to leave for Medina. To an outward observer, therefore, the cause of the Prophet seemed an utter failure, yet so marvellous was his faith in the ultimate triumph of Divine Unity that no obstacle, no apparent failure, had shaken it in the least, and the words with which this chapter opens were uttered with unshakeable confidence in the ultimate triumph of his cause, as if he had never received the least check in his onward course, and as though the goal was not only within sight, but close at hand.

The connection of the various sections, or the internal arrangement of the chapter, is too clear to need much discussion. Opening with a forcible declaration of the ultimate triumph of Divine Unity, and referring to the greatness of His mercy in the second section, the doctrine of Unity being always combined with the doctrine of the unique mercy of the Divine Being, it refers in the third to the polytheists' own evidence against their polytheism, which they no doubt often produce in this very life. The rejection of this great truth of Divine Unity and its consequences are then stated in the fourth and the fifth sections, mentioning incidentally the reward of believers in the sixth section. In the two succeeding sections the Divine judgment is declared to be imminent. The ninth, while calling attention to the necessity of submission to the Divine Being—the pith of Abraham's religion—mentions the arguments with which Abraham, that great Patriarch, who may be said to be the father of monotheism, and who is undoubtedly the father of two of the biggest monotheistic peoples in the world, convinced his countrymen of the futility of the worship of any object other than Allah. The tenth section mentions the names of seventeen other prophets who preached the Unity of the Divine Being, and the Holy Prophet is enjoined to follow in their footsteps.

The eleventh section draws attention to the truth of the Divine revelation of the Qur-án, which was now the bearer of that noble message of Divine Unity to mankind, and the next speaks of the ultimate triumph of that message. The thirteenth section states that this triumph would be brought about by a gradual progress, and the fourteenth refers to the polytheists' opposition. The plans adopted by the chief opponents are then hinted at in the fifteenth, and their failure prophesied in the sixteenth section. The next two refer to the polytheists' self-imposed but superstitious restrictions against the use of the flesh of certain animals, and their vain excuses for not abjuring their idolatrous practices. The guiding rules of life are then briefly stated in the nineteenth section, while the chapter is closed by drawing attention to the great goal before the faithful; because, undoubtedly, the adoption of the doctrine of Unity raised the ideal of human life to a very high standard.

Date of revelation.

The whole of this chapter is said to have been revealed in one portion (I'Ab-Rz). Its revelation belongs to the Meccan period, and it is generally considered to belong to the last year of the Holy Prophet's life at Mecca.

753 The words that Allah is the Maker of the darkness and the light are directed against the dualistic doctrine of the Magian religion, which holds light and darkness to be two co-eternal principles. The religion of Islam is the purest monotheism, and thus it holds that the ultimate cause of all things is the Great Maker of the heavens and the earth. Pure monotheism holds out before man the bright hope that, as goodness is inherent in the Divine Being, it is also the goal to which the creation moves on; while dualism considers the prevalence of evil to be necessary.

754 The first term is that of life and the second the resurrection. Or both refer to the term of life.

All men are here said to be created from clay, and this shows what creation from clay or dust signifies. The same significance must be attached to the creation of Adam from clay.

755 There is a clear reference here to the ultimate triumph of the doctrine of Unity.

SECTION 2

Greatness of Divine Mercy

11. Fate of former people. 12–18. Divine goodness towards creatures. 19, 20. Appeal to human nature.

11 Say: Travel in the land, then see what was the end of the rejecters.

قُلْ سِيرُوا فِي الْأَرْضِ ثُمَّ انْظُرُوا كَيْفَ
كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الْمُكَذِّبِينَ ○

12 Say: To whom belongs what is in the heavens and the earth? Say: To Allah; He has ordained mercy on Himself;[760] most certainly He will gather you on the resurrection day—there is no doubt about it. (As for) those who have lost their souls, they will not believe.

قُلْ لِّمَنْ مَّا فِي السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْأَرْضِ
قُلْ لِّلّٰهِ كَتَبَ عَلٰى نَفْسِهِ الرَّحْمَةَ لَيَجْمَعَنَّكُمْ
إِلٰى يَوْمِ الْقِيٰمَةِ لَا رَيْبَ فِيهِ الَّذِينَ خَسِرُوا
أَنْفُسَهُمْ فَهُمْ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ○

756 Compare 4:153: "The followers of the Book ask you to bring down to them a book from heaven."

757 The coming of the angels is always spoken of in the Qur-án as being synonymous with the infliction of the punishment with which the opponents were threatened. Compare 2:210: "They do not wait aught but that Allah should come to them in the shadows of the clouds along with the angels, and the matter has already been decided," and v. 159: "They do not wait aught but that the angels should come to them, or that your Lord should come, or that some of the signs of your Lord should come."

758 The meaning is that if an angel were made an apostle to mankind he would doubtless appear in the form of man, inasmuch as the human eye cannot see angels and because only a human being could serve as a model for men; moreover, mankind would have fallen into the same confusion into which it has now cast itself concerning the mission of the Prophet.

759 They mocked at the promises of success for the Prophet and the believers, and at the eventual triumph of the doctrine of Unity over idol-worship, so that the final triumph of Islam was a good answer to their mockery, and the mockers themselves were put in a position to be ridiculed.

760 This passage bears evidence to the all-encompassing mercy of the Divine Being.

13 And to Him belongs whatever dwells in the night and the day; and He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

وَلَهُ مَا سَكَنَ فِي الَّيْلِ وَالنَّهَارِ ۚ وَهُوَ السَّمِيعُ الْعَلِيمُ ○

14 Say: Shall I take a guardian besides Allah, the Originator of the heavens and the earth, and He feeds (others) and is not (Himself) fed. Say: I am commanded to be the first who submits himself, and you should not be of the polytheists.

Ar. thou shouldst.

قُلْ أَغَيْرَ اللّٰهِ أَتَّخِذُ وَلِيًّا فَاطِرِ السَّمٰوٰتِ وَالْأَرْضِ وَهُوَ يُطْعِمُ وَلَا يُطْعَمُ ۗ قُلْ إِنِّي أُمِرْتُ أَنْ أَكُونَ أَوَّلَ مَنْ أَسْلَمَ وَلَا تَكُونَنَّ مِنَ الْمُشْرِكِينَ ○

15 Say: Surely I fear, if I disobey my Lord, the chastisement of a grievous day.

قُلْ إِنِّي أَخَافُ إِنْ عَصَيْتُ رَبِّي عَذَابَ يَوْمٍ عَظِيمٍ ○

16 He from whom it is averted on that day, Allah indeed has shown mercy to him; and this is a manifest achievement.

مَنْ يُصْرَفْ عَنْهُ يَوْمَئِذٍ فَقَدْ رَحِمَهُ ۚ وَذٰلِكَ الْفَوْزُ الْمُبِينُ ○

17 And if Allah touch you with affliction, there is none to take it off but He; and if He visit you with good, then He has power over all things.[761]

Ar. thee.

Ar. touch thee.

18 And He is the Supreme, above His servants; and He is the Wise, the Aware.

وَهُوَ الْقَاهِرُ فَوْقَ عِبَادِهِ ۚ وَهُوَ الْحَكِيمُ الْخَبِيرُ ○

19 Say: What thing is the weightiest in testimony? Say: Allah is witness between you and me; and this Qur-án has been revealed to me that with it I may warn you and whomsoever it reaches.[762] Do you really bear witness that there are other gods with Allah? Say: I do not bear witness. Say: He is only one God, and surely I am clear of that which you set up (with Him).

Ar. between me.

قُلْ أَيُّ شَيْءٍ أَكْبَرُ شَهَادَةً ۖ قُلِ اللّٰهُ ۖ شَهِيدٌ بَيْنِي وَبَيْنَكُمْ ۚ وَأُوحِيَ إِلَيَّ هٰذَا الْقُرْاٰنُ لِأُنْذِرَكُمْ بِهِ وَمَنْ بَلَغَ ۚ أَئِنَّكُمْ لَتَشْهَدُونَ أَنَّ مَعَ اللّٰهِ اٰلِهَةً أُخْرٰى ۚ قُلْ لَا أَشْهَدُ ۚ قُلْ إِنَّمَا هُوَ إِلٰهٌ وَاحِدٌ وَإِنَّنِي بَرِيءٌ مِمَّا تُشْرِكُونَ ○

20 Those whom We have given the Book recognize him as they recognize their sons; (as for) those who have lost their souls, they will not believe.[763]

الَّذِينَ اٰتَيْنٰهُمُ الْكِتٰبَ يَعْرِفُونَهُ كَمَا يَعْرِفُونَ أَبْنَاءَهُمُ ۘ الَّذِينَ خَسِرُوا أَنْفُسَهُمْ فَهُمْ لَا يُؤْمِنُونَ ○

The words He has ordained mercy on Himself imply that mercy is in fact His very nature. The evidence of Divine mercy is manifest in the physical world: He has created all things for the benefit of man. Would He not deal equally mercifully with man in his spiritual needs and send a revelation to guide him?

761 The form adopted expresses the idea that Allah, being All-powerful, will bring good to you.

Polytheists Witness against Themselves

21. Greatness of the guilt. 22–26. They shall deny polytheism, to which they now stick. 27–30. Their desire to be sent back.

21 And who is more unjust than he who forges a lie against Allah or (he who) gives the lie to His communications; surely the unjust will not be successful.

22 And on the day when We shall gather them all together, then shall We say to those who associated others (with Allah): Where are your associates whom you asserted?

23 Then their excuse[764] would be nothing but that they would say: By Allah, our Lord, we were not polytheists.

24 See how they lie against their own souls, and that which they forged has passed away from them.

25 And of them is he who
Ar. thee. hearkens to you, and We have cast veils over their hearts lest they understand it and a heaviness into their ears; and even if they see every sign they will not believe in it;[765] so much so that when they come
Ar. thee. to you they only dispute with
Ar. thee. you; those who disbelieve say: This is naught but the stories of the ancients.

يَقُولُ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا إِنْ هَٰذَا إِلَّا
أَسَاطِيرُ الْأَوَّلِينَ ○

762 This shows clearly that the Holy Prophet did not consider himself as only a prophet for those who could listen to his message, i.e. the Arabs only, but for all people whom the Qur-án may reach, i.e. for the whole world.

763 As the revelation of this chapter really belongs to the last year of the Holy Prophet's life at Mecca, there may be a reference here to the respectful attitude of the Jews to the Prophet's claim when Islam was first proclaimed at Medina. As to the meaning of the words as they recognize their sons, see 190.

764 Fitnah, according to IJ, means here either answer or excuse, the answer or the excuse being so called because of its being a lie. According to Bd, it means their kufr or unbelief, which they would see, on the day of reckoning, had no basis. Or the meaning may be: Then their unbelief would not remain, but they would say . . .

765 This and what follows shows that veils were cast over their hearts because they would not believe even if they saw all the signs; they visited the Prophet, not for the purpose of listening to and pondering over what he said, but to dispute with him. The casting of the veils is ascribed to God exactly in the same sense as the adding to their disease in 2:10, for which see 24.

26 And they prohibit (others) from it and go far away from it, and they only bring destruction upon their own souls while they do not perceive.

وَهُمْ يَنْهَوْنَ عَنْهُ وَيَنْـَٔوْنَ عَنْهُ ۚ وَإِنْ يُّهْلِكُوْنَ إِلَّآ أَنْفُسَهُمْ وَمَا يَشْعُرُوْنَ ۝

Ar. couldst thou.

27 And could you see when they are made to stand before the fire, then they shall say: Would that we were sent back, and we would not reject the communications of our Lord and we would be of the believers.

وَلَوْ تَرٰىٓ إِذْ وُقِفُوْا عَلَى النَّارِ فَقَالُوْا يٰلَيْتَنَا نُرَدُّ وَلَا نُكَذِّبَ بِاٰيٰتِ رَبِّنَا وَنَكُوْنَ مِنَ الْمُؤْمِنِيْنَ ۝

28 Nay, what they concealed before shall become manifest to them; and if they were sent back, they would certainly go back to that which they are forbidden, and most surely they are liars.[766]

بَلْ بَدَا لَهُمْ مَّا كَانُوْا يُخْفُوْنَ مِنْ قَبْلُ ۖ وَلَوْ رُدُّوْا لَعَادُوْا لِمَا نُهُوْا عَنْهُ وَإِنَّهُمْ لَكٰذِبُوْنَ ۝

29 And they say: There is nothing but our life of this world, and we shall not be raised.

وَقَالُوْٓا إِنْ هِيَ إِلَّا حَيَاتُنَا الدُّنْيَا وَمَا نَحْنُ بِمَبْعُوْثِيْنَ ۝

Ar. couldst thou

30 And could you see when they are made to stand before their Lord. He will say: Is not this the truth? They will say: Yea! by our Lord. He will say: Taste then the chastisement because you disbelieved.

وَلَوْ تَرٰىٓ إِذْ وُقِفُوْا عَلٰى رَبِّهِمْ ۗ قَالَ أَلَيْسَ هٰذَا بِالْحَقِّ ۗ قَالُوْا بَلٰى وَرَبِّنَا ۗ قَالَ فَذُوْقُوا الْعَذَابَ بِمَا كُنْتُمْ تَكْفُرُوْنَ ۝

SECTION 4

Rejection of the Truth

31-34. Rejection of truth is a sure loss. 35-39. They are dead to all reasoning. 40, 41. Yet Allah removes their sufferings.

31 They are losers indeed who reject the meeting of Allah; until when the hour[767] comes upon them all of a sudden they shall say: O our grief for our neglecting it![768] and they shall bear their burdens on their backs; now surely evil is that which they bear.

قَدْ خَسِرَ الَّذِيْنَ كَذَّبُوْا بِلِقَآءِ اللّٰهِ ۗ حَتّٰىٓ إِذَا جَآءَتْهُمُ السَّاعَةُ بَغْتَةً قَالُوْا يٰحَسْرَتَنَا عَلٰى مَا فَرَّطْنَا فِيْهَا ۙ وَهُمْ يَحْمِلُوْنَ أَوْزَارَهُمْ عَلٰى ظُهُوْرِهِمْ ۗ أَلَا سَآءَ مَا يَزِرُوْنَ ۝

766 The evil consequences of their deeds were hidden in this life, but they will become manifest in the life after death. And since, if they were sent back, the evil consequences of evil deeds would again be hidden from the physical eye, they would revert to evil deeds.

767 By the hour is meant their doom, as well as the hour of final judgment.

32 And this world's life is naught but a play and an idle sport; and certainly the abode of the hereafter is better for those who guard (against evil); do you not then understand?

33 We know indeed that what they say certainly grieves you, but surely they do not call you a liar, but the unjust deny the communications of Allah.[769]

768 فرط فيه means he neglected it, or failed to do what he ought with respect to it (TA-LL). "It" refers to the hour.

769 The Prophet was known among them as Al-Amín, i.e. the faithful or the truthful one; and he was so highly reputed for his truth because he was never guilty of having uttered a lie in his life. It was after he received the Divine revelation that he was called a liar, and hence it was really a denial of the Divine revelation of which they were guilty and not any denial as to the truthfulness of the Prophet himself.

770 The context shows clearly that by the words of Allah here are meant the prophecies promising assistance to His apostles. As help came to the apostles before the Holy Prophet, so would help come to him, and this was a prophecy which none could change.

771 By the bringing of a sign is meant a sign that should bring all to guidance, as is clearly indicated by what follows. Their doom was pronounced, and that word must be fulfilled, as affirmed in the previous verse; but the demand of the people to be overawed into an immediate submission to the Prophet by a sign was not in accordance with the Divine Law.

772 Even the spiritually dead, upon whom warnings and admonitions are wasted, and who do not listen to the voice of the Apostle, will be raised to life by the powerful hand of Allah. Those addressed by the Prophet are divided into two classes: (1) those who listen: these accept the Prophet and become believers; (2) those who are spiritually dead and are careless of warnings; even these are not to be despaired of, for Allah will raise them to life, i.e. they, too, will accept the Prophet after some time. That the spiritual raising in this life is herein

37 And they say: Why has not a sign been sent down to him from his Lord? Say: Surely Allah is able to send down a sign, but most of them do not know.[773]

38 And there is no animal that walks upon the earth nor a bird that flies with its two wings but (they are) genera like yourselves; We have not neglected anything in the Book, then to their Lord shall they be gathered.[774]

39 And they who reject Our communications are deaf and dumb, in utter darkness; whom Allah pleases He causes a 40. to err,[a] and whom He pleases He puts on the right way.

40 Say: Tell me if the chastisement of Allah should overtake you or the hour should come upon you, will you call (on others) besides Allah, if you are truthful?

41 Nay, Him you call upon, so He clears away that for which you pray if He pleases and you forget what you set up (with Him).[775] meant may be established by the fact that their being returned to Allah, which stands for their death, is spoken of as taking place after they were raised to life.

773 The sign spoken of here is the same as adverted to in v. 35. And Allah did send the very sign demanded, as we find the Arabs submitting to the Holy Prophet almost in a body after the conquest of Mecca, a reference to which is contained in 110 : 2 (see 2812): "And you see men entering the religion of Allah in companies."

774 Other creatures are all provided for by Allah as men are, so far as physical needs are concerned. And they obey the laws of nature; therefore, man must also obey the Divine laws. But man's nature aspires after something higher, and it is to satisfy that spiritual craving that prophets are sent. This verse, moreover, points as it were to two classes of men—those who, like beasts, are wholly bound to the earth and cannot rise, and those who rise like birds, soaring upward to the higher spiritual regions.

775 In dire distress and affliction even the polytheist finds nobody to call upon but God. This shows that a belief in the Divine existence and Unity of God is inherent in human nature.

SECTION 5

Consequences of Rejection

42–45. How former people were dealt with. 46, 47. Approach of punishment. 48–50. Warning given.

42 And certainly We sent (apostles) to nations before you, then We seized them with distress and affliction in order that they might humble themselves.

Ar. thee.

43 Yet why did they not, when Our punishment came to them, humble themselves? But their hearts hardened and the devil made what they did fair-seeming to them.

44 But when they neglected that with which they had been admonished, We opened for them the doors of all things, until when they rejoiced in what they were given We seized them suddenly; then lo! they were in utter despair.[776]

45 So the roots of the people who were unjust were cut off; and all praise is due to Allah, the Lord of the worlds.[776A]

46 Say: Have you considered that if Allah takes away your hearing and your sight and sets a seal on your hearts, who is the god besides Allah that can bring it to you? See how We repeat the arguments, yet they turn away.[777]

Ar. communications.

47 Say: Have you considered if the chastisement of Allah should overtake you suddenly or openly, will any be destroyed but the unjust people?

776A By cutting off the roots is meant the destruction of the ringleaders in particular. Dábir, according to Rz, is the last man left to look after affairs.

777 Taṣrif ul Áyát, according to LL, signifies the varying or diversifying of the verses of the Qur-án by repeating them in different forms, or, the making of the verses of the Qur-án distinct in their meanings by repeating and varying them. For the meaning of áyat see 67.

778 Never did a prophet talk in plainer language and with a greater modesty to his people. Those whom Muhammad—may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him!—addressed had for centuries been superstitious idol-worshippers. Had the Prophet so wished, he could have claimed any supernatural powers for himself, and the people would willingly have accepted him. But he was above all free from every kind of selfishness, and whatever he said proceeded direct from a heart devoid of all affectation and personal considerations. He plainly said, as he is here commanded, that he was but a man; he had no treasures, nor did he lay claim for himself as a man to know the secrets of the future, nor did he profess to be any more than a mortal. For all the good he did, for all the prophecies he uttered, he did not like to take the credit to himself. All glory was due to Allah, he proclaimed. What distinguished him from the rest of mankind was that Allah revealed His will to him, and he faithfully followed and translated into practice everything that he received from on High. And as he himself was, so he wanted others to be. It was not his object to make his followers possessors of treasures or wonder-workers or fortune-tellers, but men first and last—men true to themselves and true followers of the high principles of life which had been revealed to him. He plainly told the people what was wanted of them, and it is for his plain speaking that he is frequently called in the Holy Qur-án a plain warner.

But even his sublime and selfless sentiments and motives, the best that pure human nature could possess or desire, encounter nothing but carping criticism at the hands of many Christian writers. "Here he declares himself unacquainted with the secrets of God" is the remark which the noble words of the above verse draw from a Christian annotator, and the grotesque conclusion is immediately deduced that "he confesses he does not possess the gift of prophecy." But any reasonable man can see that by this verse the gift of revelation and prophecy has not been denied, but claimed in the clearest words. What is meant by the verse is that as a man Muhammad was like other men, i.e. he did not know the unseen, etc., but as a prophet he knew and followed everything revealed to him by Allah. The unique greatness and nobleness of the Prophet lie in the fact that he never tried to put himself before people as superhuman. Many were the prophecies of the Qur-án fulfilled in his own lifetime, yet he continued to say, "Nor do I know the unseen." Islam triumphed, yet he never said, "I have the treasures of Allah." Every prophecy fulfilled, every success made, he attributed to the all-powerful, all-knowing Allah.

Reward of Believers

51-53. Those who benefit by the warning. 54, 55. Peace and mercy for believers.

51 And warn with it those who fear that they shall be gathered to their Lord—there is no guardian for them, nor any intercessor besides Him—that they may guard (against evil).

52 And do not drive away those who call upon their Lord in the morning and the evening, they desire only His favour; neither are you answerable for any reckoning of theirs, nor are they answerable for any reckoning of yours, so that you should drive them away and thus be of the unjust.[779]

Ar. art thou.

Ar. thine.

Ar. thou shouldst.

53 And thus do We try some of them by others so that they say: Are these they upon whom Allah has conferred benefit from among us?[780] Does not Allah best know the grateful?

54 And when those who believe in Our communications come to you, say: Peace be on you, your Lord has ordained mercy on Himself, (so) that if any one of you does evil in ignorance, then turns after that and acts aright, then He is Forgiving, Merciful.

Ar thee.

779 The commentators agree that this verse was revealed when some leading Quraish expressed their willingness to accept the Prophet if the poorer Muslims were not allowed to remain in his company at the time (Rz). The poor and the rich are here brought to the same level; they are all men, they have equal claims to learn and practise the truth. Nay, those who had accepted the truth had a prior claim on the Prophet's attention. Truth is equally accessible to all, to the religion—I do not say the world—of Islam, no aristocracy is known. Before the Great Master the differences of rank, wealth, and colour sink into insignificance. And as the poorest man could hold communion with his Great Master, so the true servant of that Master could not drive away the poor from his presence because the rich objected to their company. Before Allah's Apostle, as before Allah Himself, they must all stand upon one level. Every one is answerable for what he does is the golden principle preached by Islam.

780 The simple and decisive answer given above no doubt wounded the pride of the wealthy Quraish, who were required to sit along with the poor slaves whom they never treated as human beings, and thus were they tried.

55 And thus do We make distinct the communications and so that the way of the guilty may become clear.

nourishment has been stopped, and here signifies the termination of the power of the Quraish. The grain in the darkness of the earth stands for the mission of the Prophet, for that grain was destined to sprout forth, growing into a tree of exceptional proportions. The "green" indicates those people that prosper and the "dry" those that must fall off.

of entrenched Muslims, took to flight merely on account of a great storm; a punishment from beneath your feet, such as a drought which brought great affliction upon the people of Mecca for seven years—referred to in reports as years of drought like the years of drought of Joseph; and throwing into confusion as well as making some taste the fighting of others clearly signifies the battles which brought about the final disruption of the power of the Quraish. By the two first-named forms some understand a punishment at the hands of the leaders and a punishment at the hands of the servants (I'Ab-Rz), or it may indicate a punishment making havoc among the wealthy and a punishment making havoc among the poor.

786 The concluding phrase may also be translated as I am not a disposer of your affairs, the significance in both cases being that the threatened punishment is not in the hands of the Prophet—it is Allah who requites men.

787 The meaning adopted here is the one given by LL in explaining the meaning of mustaqarr, which means the place or time beyond which a thing does not pass, hence its term.

Necessity of Submission to Allah and Abraham's Reasoning

Naba'a means information, and hence prophecy, which gives information concerning the future. According to Rgh it means an announcement of great utility.

The prophecy of the vanquishment of the powerful opponents of Islam is declared with even greater emphasis than in the earlier stage of the Prophet's mission, notwithstanding the apparent triumph of opposition to his cause which had succeeded in scattering the few men who had been converted to Islam.

788 Istahwat-hu is from the root hawá, which means falling down from a high to a low place, and hence the word means he made him to fall down (Rz). If the faithful go back to idolatry it would be like the falling of one who had attained to a great height into the depths of error and superstition. Others consider the word to be derived from the same root with a different meaning, viz. love or desire, and hence take the significance to be, he infatuated him.

789 Ṣúr is said by some to be the plural of ṣúrah, meaning a form (S, M, Q-LL), but though the use is rare, the alternative reading of ṣuwar, which is necessarily a plural of ṣúrah, lends support to it. The meaning is either that forms will become realities by being breathed into, or, as LL has it on the authority of S, L, and TA, when the souls shall be blown into the forms of the dead, but I prefer the former as being the simpler explanation, for the day of resurrection is the day on which the realities underlying all things will be made manifest. Another meaning of ṣúr is the horn or the trumpet, and the blowing of the trumpet also stands for the day of resurrection, the metaphor being taken from the blowing of the trumpet for the purpose of a great gathering.

790 Whether Ázar was the father of Abraham, or his grandfather or uncle, is a much disputed point. The word ab means a father as well as an ancestor (M, LL), and in 2 : 133 it is also applied to an uncle (because there Ishmael is spoken of as an ab of Jacob). The difficulty arises from two points. In the first place Zj says that the nassábs agree that Abraham's father's name was Tarah, which is the same as Terah, the name given to Abraham's father in Genesis, and Zurqani also gives Tarah as Abraham's father's name. But this difficulty is easily overcome by the fact that the same name is given as Terah in the Talmud and Athar by Eusebius (and the Ar. Ázar quite corresponds with the latter), there being many examples in which a name transported into another language assumes quite a different form. The second difficulty is that Abraham's father (Ar. wálid) is spoken of in 14 : 41 as a believer, while the sire (Ar. ab) is elsewhere spoken of as having stuck to idolatry till his death. This point throws much light on what the Qur-án means by the ab of Abraham, and hence I prefer sire as the significance of the word. Some commentators consider Ázar as being the name of an idol, while others still think that it is not a proper name at all, and means mukhṭí, i.e. erring (Rz).

791 Showing Abraham the kingdom of the heavens and the earth signifies granting him an insignt into the Divine laws of nature working in the kingdom of the heavens and the earth; an insight into which had convinced him that Allah was the real controller of the Universe and Supreme above all, while the sun, the moon, the stars and other heavenly bodies which the Sabeans worshipped were only His creation and subject to His laws.

792 The words háẕá rabbí, literally this is my Lord, do not contain Abraham's conviction, which is opposed to this statement, as shown in the previous verse, because he was a believer in the Unity. The words are either uttered by way of surprise, as referring to his people's belief, who are then made to realize their error by showing that what they call a god disappears at times, and therefore does not deserve to be worshipped—these people were not only idolaters, but also worshippers of the heavenly bodies; or the phrase may be interrogatory, alif, the letter of interrogation, being omitted, and interrogation expresses disapproval (Rz). I prefer the second interpretation.

79 Then when he saw the sun rising, he said: Is this my Lord? Is this the greatest? So when it set, he said: O my people! surely I am clear of what you set up (with Allah).

80 Surely I have turned myself, being upright, wholly to Him who originated the heavens and the earth, and I am not of the polytheists.

81 And his people disputed with him. He said: Do you dispute with me respecting Allah? and He has guided me indeed; and I do not fear in any way those that you set up with Him, unless my Lord pleases; my Lord comprehends all things in His knowledge; will you not then mind?

82 And how should I fear what you have set up (with Him), while you do not fear that you have set up with Allah that for which He has not sent down to you any authority; which then of the two parties is surer of security, if you know?

83 Those who believe and do not mix up their faith with iniquity, those are they who shall have the security and they are those who go aright.

nephew and not an actual descendant of Abraham, but as in 2:133 an uncle is called a father, a nephew might be included among descendants.

Eighteen prophets are named here; that they are not mentioned in chronological order is not a matter for objection, because the Qur-án is not a book of history, neither does it profess to mention these prophets in chronological order. See the next chapter, where the histories of several great prophets are mentioned in exact chronological order. There are some peculiar aspects of life regarding which the prophets referred to here are mentioned in different groups, and this is the reason why the concluding words of each of the three verses speaking of the three groups individually differ.

794 Had they practised polytheism their deeds would have borne no fruit, and thus their mission would have been unsuccessful. This shows that no prophet was a polytheist at any time in his life.

795 To each prophet was given a book with which to guide mankind, with capability to judge, so that he might decide disputes by his own authority, and the gift of prophecy.

796 The Prophet is told to follow the guidance of all the earlier prophets; thus his message was to all the nations to whom previous prophets had separately come. Hence the Holy Qur-án is called a reminder in the concluding words, showing that it was meant for all the nations, to whom it was in fact a reminder of what they had received before.

797 The word qadr has a variety of meanings. I'Ab interprets the words وما قدروا الله حق قدره as meaning they do not honour Allah with the honour due to Him; Abul 'Áliya as they do not assign to Allah the attributes due to Him; and Akhfash as they do not know Him as they ought to have known Him (Rz). A denial of God's power to send revelation is a denial of the most important of His attributes. The reference here seems to be to the Jews, who, while believing a revelation to Moses, denied that to the Holy Prophet.

798 Qarâṭîs is plural of qirṭás, which means a paper. What is implied is that it is written down on scattered papers, some parts being shown, while others are concealed. The book was not kept intact, hence its description as scattered writings.

799 By the metropolis is meant the people of the metropolis. Umm-ul-Qurá is the title by which Mecca is known. Rz says there is a consensus of opinion that the Umm-ul-qurá is Mecca. Those, therefore, who suppose that this and the previous verse were revealed at Medina are mistaken. With such a clear reference to Mecca in this verse, the mere fact that the Jews and Moses are spoken of in the previous connecting verse cannot give rise to the conclusion that these verses were revealed at Medina. And to explain Umm-ul-qurá as meaning Medina is a blunder. The reason why Mecca is called Umm-ul-qurá, or the metropolis (lit. the mother of the towns), is not only that it was both the political and the spiritual centre of Arabia, but also because it was destined to be the universal spiritual centre—the real mother of the whole world.

800 There is nothing in the words of this verse to show that it refers to Musailma and other false prophets, who set up claims towards the close of the Holy Prophet's career, and that it was therefore revealed late at Medina. The verse expresses only in another form the truth expressed in this chapter in vv. 21, 145, 158 and in 39 : 32. It is to declare the Prophet free of having forged a lie against Allah; the words "or say: It has been revealed to me, while nothing has been revealed to him," only explain those that precede, viz. "Who forges a lie against Allah," while the words "I can reveal the like of what Allah has revealed," are the words of those who refuse to believe in the truth of Divine revelation, or "reject" the Divine revelation, as is elsewhere said.

appearance it is lost in the earth, soon springs forth into a large tree. The bringing forth of the living from the dead is the bringing forth of a living people from the spiritually dead Arabs, and the bringing forth of the dead from the living alludes to the spiritual death of those who had been previously granted spiritual life through Divine revelation.

803 The darkness prevailing in the earth would soon be dispelled, and would give place to light, even as with the break of the morning darkness gives place to light.

804 In religious literature the stars represent the lesser lights which guide the people. The Prophet is likened to the sun, and those who receive light from him and transmit it to others are likened to the stars. Thus in a saying of the Holy Prophet we have: "My companions are as stars; whomsoever of them you follow, you follow the right course." The analogy is that he who makes light to guide you physically could not have neglected your spiritual guidance.

805 Mustaqarr and mustauda' are explained variously as meaning the loins of the father and the womb of the mother, as standing for the male and the female (AH), or, the resting-place is this life, and the depository is the grave, so that the meaning is that some live and others die; or the resting-place is the final abode of bliss and the depository the temporary residence in this world. Or it is an infinitive noun meaning there is abiding, and entrustment, the abiding being in this life, and the entrustment the return to the Divine Master (AH, Rz).

806 The reference is either to the dualistic doctrine of the Magi, who thought that while Allah was the creator of good, the devil was the creator of evil, or to the Arab belief that the jinn had a hand in the transaction of their affairs, or in bringing them good fortune or ill luck (Rz). Thus the word jinn stands here either for the devil or for the genii. For other uses of the word jinn, which occurs only in Meccan revelations, see 822.

806A This verse and those that follow describe the transcendental unity of the Divine Being. To attribute a son to Him is to acknowledge that He had a consort; otherwise the word son will have to be taken simply as a metaphor. See 161.

807 The physical vision of man, working as it does only within narrow limits and being able only to see bodies, cannot comprehend the Infinite One. He is the spirit and can be seen only with the spiritual eye.

808 The words are supposed by some to be a commandment to leave Mecca.

809 No other religion comes up to the religion of Islam in its tolerance of other religions. Here the Muslims are forbidden to abuse even the idols of other people, though their worship is condemned in the strongest terms. It may be added that the clearing of the Ka'ba of idols when Mecca fell into the hands of the Holy Prophet does not in any way contradict this verse, for to abolish the worship of idols and to abuse them are not the same.

The deeds which are described as having been made fair-seeming to men are the good deeds which are shown by conscience and reason to be fair, not such deeds as appear only under some delusion to be fair while they are not really so. See v. 43 and v. 138.

810 Christian annotators have been at great pains to prove, from the words used in this verse, that the Holy Prophet could not show a sign. The attempt is rather awkward in the face of the words with which the verse ends: And what should make you know that when it (i.e. the sign which they demand) comes they will not believe? It is a misconception of the words signs are only with Allah which has led to the distortion of the plain words of the Holy Qur-án. The words do indeed mean that it does not rest with the Prophet himself to show signs, but they do not mean that signs cannot be shown or will not be shown. Signs being with Allah signifies, on the other hand, that Allah will show what signs He pleases and when He pleases. And the words when it comes, moreover, show that the unbelievers' demand was for a particular sign.

111 And We will turn their hearts and their sights, even as they did not believe in it the first time, and We will leave them in their inordinacy, blindly wandering on.[811]

PART VIII

SECTION 14

Polytheists' Opposition

112-114. Every prophet had enemies. 115-122. Polytheism is opposed to Islam externally as well as internally.

112 And even if We had sent down to them the angels and the dead had spoken to them and We had brought together all things before them, they would not believe unless Allah pleases, but most of them are ignorant.[812]

113 And thus did We make for every prophet an enemy, the devils from among men and jinn,[813] some of them suggesting to others varnished falsehood to deceive (them), and had your Lord pleased they would not have done it, therefore leave them and that which they forge;

Ar. thy.

وَلَوْ أَنَّنَا نَزَّلْنَا إِلَيْهِمُ الْمَلٰٓئِكَةَ وَكَلَّمَهُمُ الْمَوْتٰى وَحَشَرْنَا عَلَيْهِمْ كُلَّ شَيْءٍ قُبُلًا مَّا كَانُوا لِيُؤْمِنُوٓا إِلَّآ أَنْ يَّشَآءَ اللّٰهُ وَلٰكِنَّ أَكْثَرَهُمْ يَجْهَلُوْنَ ۝

وَكَذٰلِكَ جَعَلْنَا لِكُلِّ نَبِيٍّ عَدُوًّا شَيٰطِيْنَ الْإِنْسِ وَالْجِنِّ يُوْحِيْ بَعْضُهُمْ إِلٰى بَعْضٍ زُخْرُفَ الْقَوْلِ غُرُوْرًا ۚ وَلَوْ شَآءَ رَبُّكَ مَا فَعَلُوْهُ فَذَرْهُمْ وَمَا يَفْتَرُوْنَ ۝

811 The turning of their hearts and sights is Allah's leaving them in their inordinacy, as explained by the verse itself. And even this is due to their own action in rejecting the truth when it first came to them. When the truth is not accepted and an attitude of enmity is assumed towards it, the heart becomes estranged, and this growing estrangement is termed the turning away of the heart from it. They wander on in their inordinacy, they refuse to believe in the signs; this amounts to Allah's turning their hearts and sights.

812 The subject of v. 111 is continued here. There are always some men who assume such an attitude of hostility towards truth that they turn a deaf ear to every argument. The sending down of angels is mentioned in various senses in the Holy Qur-án; for instance, to bear the word of Allah to His prophets, to punish the wicked, to carry out the commandments of Allah, to inspire good ideas into the hearts of men; and the words may here be taken in any of these senses. But reading them along with v. 159 further on, "They do not wait aught but that the angels should come to them . . ." shows the meaning to be the coming of the angels to execute the decree of their punishment. The speaking of the dead refers either to the rising of the spiritually dead to life, for which compare what is said a few verses further on: "Is he who was dead, then We raised him to life . . ." (v. 123), or to the evidence of those who had passed away before the Holy Prophet, being given through their writings. And lastly, by the bringing together of all things is meant the bringing together of things relating to their punishment. The meaning is that some of the opponents are so blind that the clearest of signs or proofs would not convince them.

813 By the men and the jinn here are apparently meant the ordinary men and the leaders, 114 And that the hearts of those who do not believe in the hereafter may incline to it and that they may be well pleased with it and that they may earn what they are going to earn (of evil).

115 Shall I then seek a judge other than Allah? and He it is who has revealed to you the Book (which is) made plain; and those whom We have given the Book know that
Ar. thy. it is revealed by your Lord with truth, therefore you
Ar. thou shouldst. should not be of the disputers.

because the words which follow show it to be these who suggest to each other varnished tales of falsehood. The word jinn, like the word shaiṭán, is repeatedly used in speaking of men in the Holy Qur-án.

814 The word signifies the prophetic word, because it is spoken of as being accomplished, and accomplishment or fulfilment can only be spoken of with regard to prophecies. See further 770.

815 The injunction to eat of that on which Allah's name is mentioned is really an injunction not to eat of that on which the name of an idol is mentioned, a subject always introduced in connection with the abolition of idol-worship. A perusal of v. 122 makes this clear.

Ar. thy.

The Chief Opponents

123, 124. Plans of the leaders of opposition. 125, 126. They shall meet with disgrace and not achieve the end. 127, 128. Peace for believers. 129, 130. Leaders and their followers.

123 Is he who was dead, then We raised him to life and made for him a light by which he walks among the people, like him whose likeness is that of one in utter darkness whence he cannot come forth?[817] Thus what they did was made fair-seeming to the unbelievers.

إِلَّا بِأَنفُسِهِمْ وَمَا يَشْعُرُونَ ○

816 It is a very low view of morals which considers only sins against society to be hateful. The Muslim is here commanded to consider open and secret sins to be equally hateful. This gives us a further picture of the Prophet's holy mind, who detested open and secret sins alike.

817 These words throw a flood of light on many of the verses which speak of the raising of the dead to life through the prophets and the apostles.

818 That is, as the chief men of Mecca planned against the Prophet's life, so the chief men in every town have been guilty of making plans against their prophets. Powerful men are given a chance to exert themselves to the utmost to do harm to the prophets, so that the triumph of the truth, notwithstanding their opposition, may ultimately show that the Divine hand worked to support it.

125 And when a communication comes to them they say: We will not believe till we are given the like of what Allah's apostles are given. Allah best knows where He places His message.[819] There shall befall those who are guilty humiliation from Allah and severe chastisement because of what they planned.[820]

126 Therefore (for) whomsoever Allah intends that He should guide him aright, He expands his breast for Islam, and (for) whomsoever He intends that He should cause him to err, He makes his breast strait and narrow as though he were ascending upwards; thus does Allah lay uncleanness on those who do not believe.[821]

127 And this is the path of your Lord, (a) right (path); indeed We have made the communications clear for a people who mind.

Ar. thy.

128 They shall have the abode of peace with their Lord, and He is their guardian because of what they did.

819 Finding themselves unable to answer the convincing arguments of the Holy Qur-án, the unbelievers would ask, if Allah really meant to reveal His message, why was it not revealed directly to every one of them? The answer is that every one is not fit to communicate with the Divine Being, and Allah is the best knower of him whom He has chosen.

820 The words contain a prophecy regarding the fate of the powerful opponents who were planning to destroy Islam and the Muslims.

821 The words that occur in this verse, "And whomsoever He intends that he should cause him to err . . ." are misconstrued as meaning that "the infidels are lost because God has rendered them as incapable of believing as they are of ascending up to heaven"; while in reality they convey no such impression. الصعود فى السماء signifies ascending upwards. As when a man ascends a height, his breast heaves so that he pants for breath, thus does the unbeliever find it difficult to assimilate truth. He does not disbelieve because his breast is straitened, but his breast is straitened because he disbelieves, and the concluding words of the verse, "thus does Allah lay uncleanness on those who do not believe," make this clear. They disbelieve first and reject the truth, and the "uncleanness which straitens their breasts" follows as a result of their disbelief. Allah's causing a man to err has been fully explained in 44, and 2:26 is a conclusive proof of what it means: "He causes many to err by it and many He leads aright by it, but He does not cause to err by it any except the transgressors."

129 And on the day when He shall gather them all together: O assembly of jinn![822] you took away a great part of mankind. And their friends from among the men shall say: Our Lord! some of us profited by others and we have reached our appointed term which Thou didst appoint for us. He shall say: The fire is your abode, to abide in it, except as Allah is pleased; surely your Lord is Wise, Knowing.[823]

822 The use of the word jinn in the Holy Qur-án is not always in the sense of beings which may be defined as spirits divested of bodies that can be touched or seen, which is the original significance of the word, which is derived from janna, meaning he covered or concealed or hid or protected. The class of beings that goes under this name stands in the Holy Qur-án for the spirits of evil or the beings that invite man to evil, as opposed to the angels, who invite him to good, both being alike in being invisible to the human eye. But there is a wider use of the word in Arabic literature, as well as in the Qur-án. One signification of the word is explained in 2580, and I would refer the reader to that foot-note. But it may be here noted that the word is also applied in the Qur-án to great potentates or powerful leaders who, through their importance and detachment from the masses, do not mix freely with them, so they remain distant or "hidden from their eyes." There is nothing strange in this use of the word, when the Holy Qur-án, as shown in 26 (on 2:14), speaks of men as shayáṭín, or devils. In Arabic literature such a use was permitted. A verse of Músá Ibn Jábir فما نفرت جنى ولا فل مبردى is thus explained by LL on the authority of Tabrezi on Ham: "And my companions, who were like the jinn, did not flee when I came to them and informed them, nor was my tongue, which is like the file, deprived of its sharp edge," where the word jinn is translated as meaning companions who were like the jinn. And Tabrezi says further that the Arabs liken a man who is sharp and clever in affairs to a jinni and a shaiṭán, and hence they said نفرت جنه (literally, his jinn fled away), meaning he became weak and abject. Therefore a man's companion, without whose help he would be weak and abject, was called a jinni, or at least the word could be metaphorically used in Arabic literature to indicate such a helper. It may also be added that jinn, when qualifying the word youth, signifies the prime or first part or the sprightliness of youth, as one says كان ذلك فى جن شبابه meaning that was in the prime of his youth. For another important significance of the word see 2580.

Now we have to see what is meant by the assembly of jinn here, and by jinn in v. 131. This is made clear if we read this verse with those following. In this verse jinn are spoken of as friends of men, and v. 130, opening with the word kaẕálika (which means likewise or thus), says that it is only some of the iniquitous who befriend others, so the two verses read together clearly show that the friends in both verses are the same, they being called jinn in one case and ẓálimín (iniquitous) in the other. Again, in v. 132 those very jinn are spoken of as beng no others than dwellers of the cities which are destroyed on account of their sins,

Certainty of the threatened Punishment

131–134. The warning. 135, 136. Threatened punishment cannot be avoided. 137–141. Their superstitions and infanticide.

131 O assembly of jinn and men! did there not come to you apostles from among you, relating to you My communications and warning you of the meeting of this day of yours?[824] They shall say: We bear witness against ourselves; and this world's life deceived them, and they shall bear witness against their own souls that they were unbelievers.

Ar. thy. 134 And your Lord is the Self-sufficient one, the Lord of mercy; if He pleases, He may take you off, and make whom He pleases successors after you, even as He raised you up from the seed of another people.

and we know that the jinn who dwell in cities are only men. Further light is thrown on this subject by 14:21: "And the weak shall say to those who were proud, Surely we were your followers," where the weak followers and the proud leaders stand exactly in the position respectively of men and jinn in this verse, and by 33:67: "And they shall say: O Lord! surely we obeyed our leaders and our great men, and they led us astray from the path," where the leaders and the chiefs undoubtedly occupy the position of jinn in the two verses we are considering, and by similar other verses abounding in the Holy Qur-án, in which the weak followers and the proud leaders stand in the same relation to each other as do men and jinn in these verses. It is quite easy to understand that as the word shayáṭín, meaning devils, is used to signify the mischievous leaders in 2:14 (see 26), so the word jinn is used to convey a similar significance. See further 824.

823 The words except as Allah is pleased indicate that those in hell shall after all be delivered from it. For a full discussion on this point see 1210.

824 Here the jinn and the men are told that apostles had come to them from among them, but as the only apostles known to us in the Qur-án and other reliable histories of prophets are those who belong to mankind, it follows that the jinn spoken of here must also belong to mankind, and not to any other class of creation.

825 That is, while the reminder and the warning had not yet come to them.

135 Surely what you are threatened with must come to pass and you cannot escape (it).[825A]

136 Say: O my people! act according to your ability; I too am acting; so you will soon come to know, for whom (of us) will be the (good) end of the abode; surely the unjust shall not be successful.

137 And they set apart a portion for Allah out of what He has created of tilth and cattle, and say: This is for Allah—so they assert—and this for our associates; then what is for their associates, it reaches not to Allah, and whatever is (set apart) for Allah, it reaches to their associates; evil is that which they judge.[826]

Ar. according to their assertion.

138 And thus their associates[827] have made fair-seeming to most of the polytheists the killing of their children,[828] that they may cause them to perish and obscure for them their religion;[829] and if Allah had pleased, they would not have done it, therefore leave them and that which they forge.

139 And they say: These are cattle and tilth prohibited; none shall eat them except 825A Mark again the certainty with which the idolatrous Quraish are told—and through them all the proud opponents of truth—in this verse and the one preceding, that their authority in their country would cease to exist and another people would be raised in their stead. These were the Muslims.

826 It was a custom among the Arab idolaters to set apart certain portions of the produce of their fields and their cattle, one portion for Allah and another portion for the idols. The portion for idols was always applied to their use, but the portion set apart for Allah, though ordinarily spent to feed the poor and the needy, was in certain cases, for instance, when the portion of the idols was somehow or other destroyed, diverted to the use of the idols (I'Ab–Rz), the portion for the idols being handed over to the priests.

827 By their associates are here meant those whom they took for gods besides Allah, or the priests or the devils whom they obeyed.

828 This refers to the practice of slaying or burying alive the female children (Rz), and also to the human sacrifices to idols, as they sometimes vowed that if they had a number of sons they would sacrifice one of them to an idol (Kf).

829 By introducing these superstitious and evil customs they were making confused and obscure the true religion—the religion of the service of the One God which was preached by Ishmael (Rz).

Ar. according to their assertion.

All these along with what is said in the next two verses are denounced as being idolatrous practices, and it was necessary not only to accept the doctrine of Unity in theory, but also to bring it into practice, giving up all those ancient institutions which were based on idolatry.

833 The word ukul here, as well as in 2 : 265 and 13 : 35, is equivalent to ṡamar (TA), and means fruit.

Prohibited Foods and Idolaters' Vain Excuses

146. Forbidden foods. 147. What was forbidden to Jews. 148–151. Vain excuses of unbelievers.

146 Say: I do not find in that which has been revealed to me anything forbidden for an eater to eat of except that it be what has died of itself, or blood poured forth, or flesh of swine—for that surely is 834 Farsh (from farasha, i.e. he spread or expanded it) means in the first place what is spread of household furniture, or a wide tract of land. But here, according to lexicologists as well as commentators, it signifies animals fit for slaughter, because they are thrown down for slaughter (Rz, TA, LL), or because a bed is made of their hair or wool. Some, however, think that by the ḥamūlah are meant the larger animals, and by the farsh the young ones, such as the young of camels, calves, etc., because the latter are, on account of their want of stature, as it were, spread on the ground (Rz).

835 The Arabs considered those animals which were otherwise lawful for them to be unlawful in particular cases. These practices, which were all superstitious, resulting from idol-worship, are here condemned, and the inconsistency of these practices, making lawful in some cases the very things which were considered unlawful in others, is shown to be a reason for their denunciation.

148 But if they give you the lie, then say: Your Lord is the lord of all-encompassing mercy; and His punishment cannot be averted from the guilty people.[839]

سَيَقُولُ الَّذِينَ أَشْرَكُوا
لَوْ شَاءَ اللَّهُ مَا أَشْرَكْنَا

836 This verse is generally thought to be of Medinite origin, on account of the law relating to forbidden foods which it contains. But the evidence of 16 : 115, which is a Meccan revelation, combined with the fact that there is a general agreement among authorities that the whole of this chapter was revealed in one portion, shows conclusively that this verse cannot be Medinite. The reference in "I do not find in that which has been revealed to me" seems to be to 16 : 115, which is an earlier revelation. It also deserves to be noticed that for the prohibition made known here reasons are also given, the reason for the prohibition of what dies of itself and blood and swine's flesh being that these things are unclean, while the reason for the prohibition of animals on which other than Allah's name is invoked is different, viz. fisq, or a transgression of the Divine commandment, which requires all things to be avoided which are in any way associated with idolatry. The uncleanness in the case of the first three consists in their pernicious effect upon the intellectual, the physical, and the moral systems respectively, while the transgression in the case of the last affects the spiritual conditions.

837 According to I'Ab it means only the camel, or the camel and the ostrich (Rz). Rz is of opinion that by ẓufr here is meant talons and claws. According to Mjd and Qtd the ẓi-ẓufr means every beast and bird that has not divided toes, as the camel, ostrich, goose, and duck (TA-LL). The prohibition of using the camel for food, though a punishment for the rebellion of the Jews, as stated further on, was a blessing to them. On account of their disobedience to Moses they had to remain in the wilderness for a long time, where the camel was of great service to them in their journeys from place to place.

838 "You shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat" (Lev. 7 : 23).

839 The all-encompassing mercy of Allah is mentioned even in speaking of those who rejected the Holy Prophet. It was because of the mercy of Allah that the unbelieving nations were not destroyed immediately; but as punishing the "guilty" is in itself a mercy towards the weak and the oppressed, Allah warns them that they will not always escape punishment.

151 Say: Bring your witnesses who should bear witness that Allah has forbidden this, then if they bear witness, do not bear witness with them; and follow not the low desires of those who reject Our communications and of those who do not believe in the hereafter, and they make (others) equal to their Lord.

SECTION 19

Guiding Rules of Life

152–154. Duties to God, kindred, self, and all. 155. Similar rules in Moses' book.

152 Say: Come! I will recite what your Lord has forbidden to you—(remember) that you do not associate anything with Him and show kindness to your parents, and do not slay your children for (fear of) poverty—We provide for you

قُلْ تَعَالَوْا أَتْلُ مَا حَرَّمَ رَبُّكُمْ
عَلَيْكُمْ أَلَّا تُشْرِكُوا بِهِ شَيْئًا وَ
بِالْوَالِدَيْنِ إِحْسَانًا وَلَا تَقْتُلُوا
أَوْلَادَكُمْ مِنْ إِمْلَاقٍ نَحْنُ نَرْزُقُكُمْ

840 The previous verse records the statement of the unbelievers: "If Allah had pleased we would not have associated aught with Him." The reply is that Allah reveals His will through His chosen messengers, so bring forth any Divine revelation that you possess sanctioning idolatry. On the other hand, they are told that they only tell lies and follow conjectures, and have no certain knowledge with them. The argument is here carried on further. Allah does not mislead men, but on the other hand sends His prophets to guide them into the right path. His pleasure is therefore that all men should walk in the right path and serve only one Master. Is not that a conclusive argument against the false assertion of the idolaters? And the Arabs were all guided to the right course, idolatry being swept off for ever from their midst, and monotheism established so firmly as no more to be supplanted.

The guidance of Allah is, however, brought through prophets, and men are never compelled to accept the right way; much less could they be compelled to follow the wrong course, as the idolaters thought. Man was created with a will free within certain limits to act as he pleases.

842 This is not limited to the giving of evidence or pronouncing of judgment, but to every thing spoken, even including the invitation to men to the religion of Islam (Rz). Islam requires a man to be so upright as not to be led away by the ties of relationship (or, ẕáqurbá may signify the Prophet's relatives) where truth should be manifested. Truth is man's chief interest, which should never suffer, however great may be the loss entailed by any other interest.

843 By all things are meant all those things needed for the guidance of the Israelites, including the prophecies relating to the advent of the Holy Prophet.

SECTION 20

The Goal for the Faithful

156–160. The Qur-án revealed for guidance. 161. Law of requital of good and evil. 162–165. The great goal. 166. The believers shall be rulers in the land.

156 And this is a Book We have revealed, blessed; therefore follow it and guard (against evil) that mercy may be shown to you;[844]

157 Lest you say that the Book was only revealed to two parties before us and We were truly unaware of what they read;[845]

158 Or (lest) you should say: If the Book had been revealed to us, we would certainly have been better guided than they; so indeed there has come to you clear proof from your Lord, and guidance and mercy. Who then is more unjust than he who rejects Allah's communications and turns away from them? We will reward those who turn away from Our communications with an evil chastisement because they turned away.

159 They do not wait aught but that the angels should 844 It should be noted that as the Qur-án is mentioned along with the previous revelations, the word mubárak is added as signifying the continuance for ever of the blessings which a thing possesses (Rz). The object is to show that whereas the blessings of other books come to an end after a time, the Qur-án shall for ever remain a source of blessings to its followers.

848 This refers primarily to the Jews and the Christians, but includes sectarians of all religions who divide their religion into parts, accepting one part and rejecting the other.

849 No other sacred book gives such prominence to the preponderance of the quality of mercy in the Divine Being. While evil must have its evil consequence, it is only its like, but virtue brings a tenfold reward. According to a saying of the Holy Prophet, evil is pardoned or recompensed with its like, while good brings from a tenfold to a seven-hundredfold reward (Bkh). Thus the verse mentions only the maximum punishment of evil and the minimum reward of good.

850 The idea of entire submission to the Divine Being conveyed in the word Islam finds its perfect manifestation in the Holy Prophet, who is the first of the Muslims (v. 169). There are different motives, love of one's self, of one's wife and children, of one's friends and relatives, love of one's country or love of humanity at large, which prompt a man to action; and there is no doubt that the grander, the purer, and the more selfless the object, the nobler is the deed done, but above even the noblest object that a man can set for himself stands the love of the Divine Being. The deed done may be for the welfare of one's self, or of those dearest to one, or of one's country or of humanity in general, but the mainspring of that action must be the love of the Divine Being, for then only is it that perfect disinterestedness combined with absolute justice to all creatures can be achieved. It is the highest goal of human life, and it was amply illustrated in the Holy Prophet's life. His very prayers and sacrifices, nay, his very life and death, were for the Lord of the worlds.

851 "No bearer of burden shall bear the burden of another" are the words in which the Christian doctrine of atonement is rejected by the Holy Qur-án. The Christian is unable to realize the true significance of these words. The Holy Qur-án explains itself elsewhere: "That no bearer of burden shall bear the burden of another, and that man shall have nothing but what he strives for" (53:38, 39). Every man that is born is called a bearer of burden, not because he is a sinner, but because he starts life with certain responsibilities of his own, and having his own responsibilities, cannot bear the responsibilities of another. It is groundless to assert that Jesus Christ entered into life without any responsibilities of his own. The study of his life shows him as feeling his own responsibilities and as caring for them. The burden mentioned in the Holy Qur-án is thus the burden of a man's responsibilities.

852 Each nation in turn is made a successor to another nation. The idolatrous Meccans were the successors of previous people, while in their turn they must now give place to the Muslims.

Title.

THE title of this chapter is taken from the mention of Al-a'ráf or the elevated places on which stand those righteous servants of Allah who walk perfectly in the ways of truth and goodness.

Subject-matter.

The prominent theme of this chapter is the truth of Divine revelation, there being occasional references to the doctrine of Divine Unity, because it is that doctrine which the Divine revelation aims at establishing, as illustrations from the histories of previous prophets clearly indicate.

The chapter opens with a statement of the truth of the Divine revelation as granted to the Holy Prophet in the Book called the Holy Qur-án, and its truth is emphasized by a prophetic reference to the doom of those who oppose the propagation of the truth contained therein. The second section shows that opposition to the Prophet is similar to the devil's opposition to the righteous servants of God, whose prototype is Adam ; and is followed in the third section by a warning to all men against the insinuations of the devil. The next four sections are devoted to general statements regarding the advent of prophets, the fate of those who reject and illtreat them, and the ultimate triumph of the righteous. These are followed by four other sections containing illustrations of these general statements as drawn from the histories of five prophets, whose names, and the prominent incidents of whose lives, were known to the Arabs, viz. Noah, Húd, Sálih, Lot, and Shu'aib—all these prophets, though belonging to different nations and different countries, being mentioned in the chronological order of their appearance. These histories are followed in the twelfth section by a warning to the opponents of the Holy Prophet that if they did not mend their ways they would meet with the same fate as overtook the former opponents of the truth.

The remaining half of the chapter, with the exception of the last three sections, is taken up entirely with the history of Moses, importance being attached to that history on account of the close resemblance of the Holy Prophet of Arabia to the great Israelite prophet, and on account of the clear prophecies of Moses regarding the appearance of a prophet from among the brethren of the Israelites, i.e. the Ismaelites, or the Arab nation. This is the reason that towards the end of that history mention is specially made of the prophecies contained in the Torah and the Gospel. The Holy Prophet is, in reference to the prophecy of Moses, called an Ummí prophet and a prophet from among the Arabs; facts closely related to the subject-matter of the chapter, yet, strangely enough, supposed by Christian critics to be entirely out of place.

The last three sections are again of a general nature, referring first to the impress of Divine Unity upon man's nature, thus adducing evidence of the truth of revelation, which also preaches Unity; then to the coming of the doom, closing with a final word, containing as it were the essence of the two chapters, enjoining at the conclusion prayer and humility to the Supreme Being.

Connection with the preceding chapter.

The connection of this chapter with the last becomes clear when the subject-matter of the chapters is jointly considered. The last chapter deals chiefly with the doctrine of Divine Unity, while this deals with the truth of revelation, and as the two doctrines are closely inter-related, this chapter complements the last one. Even as the closing section of that chapter deals with the revelation of the Qur-án, this fittingly opens with an assertion relating to the Divine source of the revelation contained in the Holy Book.

Date of revelation.

Internal as well as external evidence shows this chapter to have been revealed at about the same time as the last chapter. Hence the date of its revelation may be placed at a period just prior to the Flight. The best opinion among the earliest commentators holds the whole of it to have been revealed at Mecca (I'Ab, Hs, Mjd, etc., AH). A small minority, however, hold certain passages to have been revealed at Medina; but there being no reliable evidence, these assertions may be regarded as purely conjectural. Importance is, however, attached by Christian critics to the following reasons regarding the revelation of vv. 157-159 at Medina, viz. first, the occurrence in those verses of the word Ummí and the words Torah and Gospel, which it is stated never occur in other than Medinite revelation, and the occurrence of the words and assist him, which are supposed to refer to the helpers or Ansár of Medina; and secondly, that this passage breaks the thread of the narrative, which is otherwise continuous. I take the last reason first. A perusal of vv. 156 and 157 will show the two verses to be so closely connected that their revelation cannot be referred to two distinct occasions. V. 156 begins with a prayer by Moses for mercy to be shown to his people and ends with a Divine promise to show mercy to those of his followers who keep the Divine Commandments and who believe in the Divine communications. This is supplemented by v. 157, which opens with the words, those who follow the Apostle . . . being evidently a part of what is said in the previous verse. Hence, there is no break whatever, but the closest connection between the two verses, rendering it absolutely impossible to refer them to two different periods. The first argument, based on the occurrence of the words "and assist him," is simply whimsical, the word and its derivatives occurring frequently in Meccan revelation in connection with the help afforded to the religion of Islam by the Muslims at Mecca. As regards the occurrence of the words Torah and Gospel and the word Ummí, the evidence carries little weight, for the prophecies uttered by Moses and Jesus are referred to frequently in Meccan revelation, and there is nothing remarkable in the mention of the books of those prophets by name in a Meccan revelation. The entire chapter is one of the later Meccan revelations.

The Prophet's Revelation and the Doom of his Opponents

1–3. A book revealed. 4–10. The doom of opponents and its justice.

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

1 I am Allah, the best Knower, the Truthful.[853]

853 Of the four letters Alif, lám, mím, and ṣád, the first three are the same as at the commencement of ch. 2, for which see 11; while ṣád stands for ṣádiq, meaning truthful, i.e. the Knowing Allah, whose prophecies would not fail (Tabrezi-AH), or for afṣal, i.e. the best Decider (I'Ab-AH), or for ṣabúr, meaning the patient or long-suffering Allah who gives a respite to the wicked and makes His righteous servants to suffer persecution and hardships at their hands for a time.

854 Sale's translation of the word ḥaraj as meaning doubt, and Arnold's remark based on that translation, that "the author of the Qur-án betrays precisely the disquietude and suspicion which invariably indicate fraud," are both wrong. Ḥaraj signifies straitness, and the parenthetical passage, so let there be no straitness in your breast on account of it, is introduced to console the Prophet, who at this time encountered the greatest opposition and was surrounded on all sides by difficulties, and whose mission so far had made very little progress. The Qur-án is full of statements showing that the Holy Prophet never entertained the least doubt either as to the truth of the Divine revelation or as to its ultimate triumph, but it was natural that he should be anxious for the spiritual well-being of the rejecters.

855 The Qur-án is very often called ẕikr or ẕikrá, i.e. a reminder, because, being in consonance with human nature, it is a reminder of what is imprinted on human nature; or ẕikrá has here the meaning of ẕikr, i.e. an honour or eminence, as in 43 : 43 : "Surely it is an honour to you and to your people" (TA-LL), and in 38 : 1 : "By the Qur-án possessed of eminence" (S-LL).

856 It was in these very words that the opponents of the Holy Prophet confessed their faults on the conquest of Mecca. This shows that the punishment spoken of in the Holy Qur-án does not always exclusively apply to the chastisement after death, but more often includes the punishment in this life, which is really an indication of what the wicked must suffer hereafter.

6 Most certainly then We will question those to whom (the apostles) were sent, and most certainly We will also question the apostles;[857]

7 Then most certainly We will relate to them with knowledge, and We were not absent.[858]

8 And the measuring out on that day will be just; then as for him whose measure (of good deeds) is heavy, those are they who shall be successful.[859]

9 And as for him whose measure (of good deeds) is light, those are they who have made their souls suffer loss because they disbelieved in Our communications.[860]

10 And certainly We have established you in the earth and made in it means of livelihood for you; little it is that you give thanks.

SECTION 2

The Devil's Opposition to Adam

11–13. The devil's claim to superiority. 14–18. His determination to mislead men. 19–22. The devil disturbs man's peace. 23–25. Man's repentance.

11 And certainly We created you, then We fashioned you, then We said to the angels:

857 Those to whom apostles were sent shall be questioned as to how they treated the apostles, and the latter as to how they were received.

858 Allah, being the Knower of all things, will declare to them what they had done; in other words, the consequences of their actions will become manifest.

859 According to Rgh, wazn means the knowing of the measure of a thing. And he adds that in the saying in the Qur-án والوزن يومئذ الحق the allusion is to justice in the reckoning of men. Mjd used to say wazn here means qaḍá, or judging (IJ). The explanation of wazn as meaning justice and judgment, as given by Mjd, Ḍk, A'mash, and others, has largely been followed by later commentators (Rz, AH).

860 Ẓulm, when made transitive by means of bá, has the meaning of kufr. Thus, explaining ظلموا بها in v. 103, LL says: "It is also made transitive by means of bá, as in the phrase in the Qur-án (7:103 and 17:59), because the meaning is kafarú, i.e. and they disbelieved in them, referring to the signs (M, TA), the verb having this meaning tropically or by implication, or being thus made transitive because implying the meaning of takẕīb."

861 That what is stated here of Adam is true of all men is made clear by the words of this verse. Men are created first, then fashioned, then the order is given to angels to make obeisance to Adam, who in this sense typifies man, the verse speaking of men generally in the opening words, "We created you, then We fashioned you." It would appear from this statement that Adam is introduced in the nature of an allegorical description. It is not, of course, meant that Adam did not exist.

862 The creation of man from dust is frequently referred to in the Holy Qur-án. Not only is Adam created from dust, but all men are spoken of as being similarly created (see 443). As a contrast to man's creation from dust, the devil claims to have been created from fire. The meaning may be that the preponderating element in the creation of man is earth, while in that of the devil it is fire. There may be a reference here to the nature of the temperaments of the two classes, men and devils. The Holy Qur-án says elsewhere: "Man is created of haste: now will I show to you My signs; therefore do not ask Me to hasten them on" (21:37). These words explain themselves. Man's creation of haste means that he is hasty. In like manner the devil's creation of fire may mean that he is made of a fiery temperament, while the perfect man is humble and meek, being created of dust, which stands for humility and meekness. Thus the description given here may stand for the prominent characteristics of the temperaments of the two classes of beings; and the significance in this case may only be that it is only fiery temperaments that refuse to follow the perfect man or a righteous prophet.

863 It has always been the punishment of those who oppose the prophets of God, Who abases those who consider themselves mighty.

864 The devil's grip continues only so long as man is not spiritually raised to life. The raising up here stands for the spiritual resurrection of man.

865 Aghwá-hu (from ghawá, i.e. he erred) ordinarily signifies he caused him to err, but sometimes also indicates punishing for error; thus ان كان الله يريد ان يغويكم is said to mean if Allah desire to punish you for erring (TA-LL), or, according to TA, يحكم عليكم بغيكم i.e. that He should judge against you on account of your error (which

866 Sau'at signifies shame or parts of the body which it is necessary to cover, and also any saying or action of which one is ashamed when exposed to view, or any evil, abominable or unseemly property, quality, custom, or practice (TA-LL). The devil's suggestions always lead man to the disclosure of his shame.

867 The consciousness of having done something unworthy of one's self is the surest way to the attainment of perfection. The covering with the leaves of the garden is the desire to

Warning against the Devil's Insinuations

26, 27. Man is warned. 28–31. Goodness and moderation are enjoined.

26 O children of Adam! we have indeed sent down to you clothing to cover your shame, and (clothing) for beauty[869]; and clothing that guards (against evil), that is the best.[870] This is of the communications of Allah that they may be mindful.

27 O children of Adam! let not the devil cause you to fall into affliction as he expelled your parents from the garden, make up by human effort any fault that may have been committed. The clothing that guards against evil, which is spoken of in v. 26 as being the best clothing, explains the meaning of covering here. Divine revelation points out to man the true way, enabling him to cover himself or guard himself against evil. And, further, the statement in v. 27, putting off from them both their clothing that he might show them their evil inclinations, shows that covering with the leaves of the garden is an allegorical statement (see 871). Though the Qur-án does not neglect to give directions regarding the physical requirements of man, yet there is even in these an underlying idea of the spiritual elevation of man.

يَا بَنِي آدَمَ قَدْ أَنزَلْنَا عَلَيْكُمْ لِبَاسًا يُوَارِي

868 This verse proves conclusively that every man must live and die upon this earth. The story of Jesus having been transplanted to the heavens to pass his life there is opposed to this verse, and must be rejected.

869 Rísh means originally feathers or plumage, constituting the clothing and ornament of birds (TA-LL), and is then applied to clothing worn for embellishment (Rz), or superb or excellent clothing (LL), or ornament and beauty (A, TA-LL).

870 Clothing at first simply served to cover shame; with further progress men sought to embellish their persons; but there is yet a third kind of clothing, says the Qur-án, which is the best, and that is libás-ut-taqwá, or the clothing of piety, literally the clothing that guards one against evil. It indicates a further step in the progress of man, for virtue is an embellishment of the mind, and when man has seen the good of embellishing his person, he will soon be aware of the necessity of embellishing the mind.

pulling off from them both their clothing[871] that he might show them their evil inclinations, he surely sees you, he as well as his host, from whence you cannot see them; surely we have made the devils to be the guardians of those who do not believe.[872]

28 And when they commit an indecency they say: We found our fathers doing this, and Allah has enjoined it on us. Say: Surely Allah does not enjoin indecency; do you say against Allah what you do not know?[873]

29 Say: My Lord has enjoined justice,[874] and set upright

871 That the clothing for the body is not meant here is clear from the fact that all men are warned against a similar attack of the devil. As to the clothing of which Adam was divested, there remains no doubt when it is seen that the devil tries to divest every child of Adam of the same clothing. Some say that this clothing was light, and others piety, the latter being the significance adopted by Mjd (IJ). AH has

قال المجاهد هو لباس التقوى و سواتهما ما يسوءهما من المعصية

i.e. Mujāhid says: it is the clothing that guards against evil, and by their sau'at is meant the evil that afflicted them on account of their disobedience.

872 It is because they do not believe in the truth that the devils are made their guardians; those who sever their connection with the source of purity must fall into impurity.

873 Some commentators are of opinion that the indecency here referred to is their going round the Ka'ba naked (Mjd-IJ). But the statement is general, and need not be limited.

874 The word qist is variously explained as meaning Divine Unity; what is good and right; truth (Rz, AH). All these are really included in the literal meaning of the word qist, which signifies justice in its broadest sense.

875 The meaning is either that you will find life after you have been spiritually dead or that you will return to Allah in the life after death. Or the meaning is explained in the verse that follows, i.e. those who do good will return to a good life and those who work evil, to an evil life.

876 حق عليه كذا means wajaba or sabata (TA), and, according to LL, the signifi-

32–35. Apostles come to reform. 36–39. Fate of those who reject their message.

32 Say: Who has prohibited the embellishment of Allah[878] which He has brought forth for His servants and the good provisions? Say: These are for the believers in the life of this world, purely (theirs) on the resurrection day; thus do We make the communications clear for a people who know.[879]
33 Say: My Lord has only prohibited indecencies, those of them that are apparent as well as those that are concealed, and sin and rebellion without justice, and that you associate with Allah that for which He has not cance in such cases is that a certain thing has become necessary as suited to the requirements of justice in his case. And ḍalālah sometimes signifies عقوبة الضلالة i.e. the punishment for going astray (Rgh), or a state of perdition (S, O-LL). Hence one significance of حق عليهم الضلالة is, perdition is justly their due; while if we take the ordinary significance of the word ḍalālah, the meaning would be that going astray or remaining in error is suitable to the requirements of justice in their case, consequent upon what they themselves have done. In fact, the words explain themselves: Error is justly their due because they have taken the devils for their guardians, and he who continues to follow the devil must surely remain in error.

877 Zīnat or embellishment is here generally understood to mean apparel, with reference to the practice of going naked round the Ka'ba, but the word itself has a wider significance. Rgh says: Real embellishment is that which does not disgrace or render unseemly a man in any one of his conditions either in the present life or in that which is to come; he also says it is of three kinds, i.e. spiritual, such as knowledge and good beliefs; bodily, such as strength and tallness of stature; extrinsic, such as wealth and dignity. Hence we may regard both the spiritual and extrinsic embellishment to be meant here, the former indicating virtue and the latter clothing.

878 By the embellishment of Allah is meant the embellishment which Allah has made lawful for men to avail themselves of (Rz).

879 The meaning is that in the life of this world the believer and the unbeliever equally profit by the good things, but in the life after death all good shall be exclusively for those who have accepted and acted on the right principles.

sent down any authority, and that you say against Allah what you do not know.

34 And for every nation there is a doom,[880] so when their doom is come they shall not remain behind the least while,[881] nor shall they go before.[882]

35 O children of Adam! if there come to you apostles from among you relating to you My communications, then whoever shall guard (against evil) and act aright—they shall have no fear, nor shall they grieve.

36 And (as for) those who reject Our communications and turn away from them haughtily—these are the inmates of the fire, they shall abide in it.

37 Who is then more unjust than he who forges a lie against Allah or rejects His communications? (As for) those, their portion of the Book[883] shall reach them, until when Our messengers come to them causing them to die, they shall say: Where is that which you used to call upon besides Allah? They would say: They are gone away from us; and they shall bear witness against themselves that they were unbelievers.

38 He will say: Enter into fire among the nations that have passed away before you from among jinn and men; whenever a nation shall enter, it shall curse its sister,[884] until when they have all come up with one another into it, 888 By seeking to make Allah's way crooked is meant that they suggest doubts regarding the truth (Rz).

889 The veil which here separates the wicked from the righteous and on account of which the former fail to see the bliss which the latter enjoy will assume a perceptible form in the next life.

890 A'ráf is plural of 'arf, meaning literally an elevated place, and hence Al-a'ráf means the elevated places. There has been much discussion as to what A'ráf is. The majority of commentators say that it is the ḥijáb or veil spoken of in the previous verse, or the súr or wall spoken of in 57:13; while others, among whom are Hasan and Zj, hold that على الاعراف is only equivalent to على معرفة اهل الجنة و النار i.e. knowing the inmates of paradise and the inmates of hell (Rz). I have already explained the nature of the veil mentioned in v. 46. And the wall in 57:13 is mentioned in connection with the bringing about of a separation between the sincere believers and the hypocrites. The latter desire to be guided by the light which guides the believers, but it would then be too late, and a separation would thus be finally brought about between them. This separation also exists spiritually in this life between those who sincerely adhere to the principles which they profess and those who make only a lip-profession of virtue, although their lives are really led in the darkness of evil. The same separation would assume a palpable form in the life to come. Hence the two verses lend no support to the idea that A'ráf is a particular place midway between heaven and hell; it only carries its literal significance of elevated places, and the men spoken of here are the same righteous servants of Allah who are distinctly mentioned in 56:10, 11: "And the foremost are the foremost: these are they who are drawn nigh to Allah," being the 894 By final sequel is meant the ultimate state of the perfect manifestation of truth by the fulfilment of the prophecies, the end or the ultimate consequence. See 594.

895 The phrase استوى على العرش is used in the Holy Qur-án here and on six other occasions, viz. in 10:3, 13:2, 20:5, 25:59, 32:4, and 57:4. A reference to these six places will show that it is invariably used after mentioning the creation of the heavens and the earth and in relation to the Divine control of His creation, and the law and the order to which the universe is made to submit by its great Author. The Holy Qur-án has, in fact, explained itself here as elsewhere. For instance, here we have first a statement describing Allah's creation of the heaven and the earth, and then this phrase, while the verse ends with a similar statement, surely His is the creation and the command. Hence it must convey the same idea as the word command. Similarly in 10: 3 we have ثم استوى على العرش

55 Call on your Lord humbly and secretly; surely He does not love those who exceed the limits.

56 And do not make mischief in the earth after its reformation, and call on Him fearing and hoping; surely the mercy of Allah is nigh to those who do good (to others).[896]

57 And He it is who sends forth the winds bearing good news before His mercy,[897] until, when they bring up a laden cloud, We drive it to a dead land, then We send down water on it,[898] then bring forth with it of fruits of all kinds; thus shall We bring forth the dead that you may be mindful.[899]

Or, by.

58 And as for the good land, its vegetation springs forth

وَالْبَلَدُ الطَّيِّبُ يَخْرُجُ نَبَاتُهُ

يدبر الامر where يدبر الامر or regulating the affair, clearly explains استوى على العرش A reference to the other occasions where the phrase occurs will make this more clear. Turning to the lexicons, we find that 'arsh literally means a thing constructed for shade (LL) or anything roofed (Rgh). According to the latter authority the court or sitting place of the sultan is called 'arsh on account of its eminence. And he adds: وكنى به عن العز والسلطان والمملكة i.e. and it is used to indicate might or power, and authority and dominion. LL accepts the interpretation of Rgh, who says that "the 'arsh of God is one of the things which mankind know not in reality but only by name, and it is not as the imaginations of the vulgar hold it to be." In fact, both the words 'arsh and kursī have been misunderstood as meaning resting-places for Allah. Bkh has explained the latter to mean knowledge, and the true significance of the former is power or control of the creation. Regarding istawá, it signifies, when followed by 'alá, he had the mastery or control of a thing or ascendancy over it, being synonymous with istaulá (M, K-LL), or he was or became firm (Msb-LL). Summa, as already shown, does not necessarily indicate delay or order. The meaning of the verse is simply this: He created the heavens and the earth, then He it is who holds sway over His dominion, and He is firm in the exercise of His power and knows no weakness.

896 The feeling which should be entertained towards Allah should be a combination of fear and hope, of awe as well as love, because the fear of His displeasure ennobles the mind no less than the hope of His mercy.

897 His mercy represents the rain in the physical world, even as Divine revelation represents bringing the dead to life in the spiritual world.

898 That is, We send down water on the dead land, or send down water by or from the clouds, because the personal pronoun may refer to either.

899 The bringing forth of the spiritually dead to life through the revelation of the Qur-án is always likened to the bringing of the dead earth to life by rain. The wind bearing the good news was the movement towards Islam, which was daily becoming more and more powerful.

SECTION 8

History of Noah

59. Noah preaches Unity. 60–64. He is rejected and his people are drowned.

59 Certainly We sent Noah to his people, so he said: O my people! serve Allah, you have no god other than Him; surely I fear for you the chastisement of a grievous day.[901]

60 The chiefs of his people said: Most surely we see you in clear error.

Ar. thee.

لَقَدْ اَرْسَلْنَا نُوْحًا اِلٰى قَوْمِهٖ فَقَالَ يٰقَوْمِ اعْبُدُوا اللّٰهَ مَا لَكُمْ مِّنْ اِلٰهٍ غَيْرُهٗ ؕ اِنِّيْۤ اَخَافُ عَلَيْكُمْ عَذَابَ يَوْمٍ عَظِيْمٍ ۝ قَالَ الْمَلَاُ مِنْ قَوْمِهٖۤ اِنَّا لَنَرٰىكَ فِيْ ضَلٰلٍ مُّبِيْنٍ ۝

900 Revelation is here likened to the rain and the good or bad nature of man to good or inferior land. If some men do not profit by the revelation it is the fault of the evil in their nature and not that of the revelation, just as if some lands do not profit by rain it is not the fault of the rain.

901 Having warned the Quraish of the evil consequences of their opposition to the Holy Prophet, several illustrations are now given from ancient sacred history showing how those people were dealt with who refused to listen to the voice of the warners. It should be borne in mind in reading the histories of the prophets as given in the Holy Qur-án that the object of the Qur-án is not to narrate history as such, but to bring out certain characteristics of the histories of different nations, to mention incidents which contained prophetic allusion to the Holy Prophet's life, illustrating the general warnings made regarding the ultimate consequences attendant upon the rejection of truth. The Qur-án does not concern itself with the details of what messages a prophet delivered to his people and of how he was received; it simply contents itself with the broad facts that every prophet preached Divine Unity, every prophet laid stress on piety, every prophet was received with severe opposition, and that each of these messengers ultimately succeeded in establishing the truth. This, with slight variations, is the sum and substance of the histories of the prophets that are recorded in the Holy Qur-án. It is not, as stated by a Christian critic, "the experience of Muhammad" that is recorded in the histories of prophets, but it is the experience of the prophets containing a prophetical allusion to the experience of the Holy Prophet. This is clear from the fact that the histories of the prophets relating the destruction of their opponents are contained chiefly in Meccan revelations, whereas at Mecca the opponents of the Holy Prophet were at the zenith of their power and the cause of the Prophet was to all appearance hopeless, while during the Medinite revelations the enemy was vanquished, so there was not much need to mention the history of earlier prophets and their opposers.

References to Noah and his history are contained in the following places in the Holy Qur-án:—3: 32, 6: 85, 7: 59–64, 10: 71–73, 11: 25–48, 14: 9, 17: 3, 21: 76, 77; 23: 23–29, 25: 37, 26: 105–122, 29: 14, 15; 37: 75–82, 51: 46, 53: 52, 54: 9–16, 58: 26, 66: 10, 69: 11–12, 71: 1–28.

61 He said: O my people! there is no error in me, but I am an apostle from the Lord of the worlds:

62 I deliver to you the messages of my Lord, and I offer you good advice, and I know from Allah what you do not know:

63 What! do you wonder that a reminder has come to you from your Lord through a man from among you, that he might warn you and that you might guard (against evil), and so that mercy may be shown to you?

64 But they called him a liar, so We delivered him and those with him in the ark, and We drowned those who rejected Our communications; surely they were a blind people.[902]

SECTION 9

The History of Húd

65. Húd preaches Unity. 66–72. He is rejected and punishment follows.

65 And to 'Ád[903] (We sent) their brother[904] Húd.[905] He said: O my people! serve Allah, you have no god other than Him; will you not then guard (against evil)?

وَاِلٰى عَادٍ اَخَاهُمْ هُوْدًا ۭ قَالَ يٰقَوْمِ
اعْبُدُوا اللّٰهَ مَا لَكُمْ مِّنْ اِلٰهٍ غَيْرُهٗ
اَفَلَا تَتَّقُوْنَ ۝

902 Fuller references to the deluge and the making of the ark are contained in 11 : 37–48 and 23 : 27–29. It may be noted here, however, that the Holy Qur-án does not support the theory of a world deluge, for it plainly states here that Noah was sent only to his people, i.e. not to all the nations. The Holy Qur-án says that only the people to whom Noah delivered his message called him a liar, and that only those were drowned who rejected Our communications, i.e. the message of Allah delivered through Noah. Hence the deluge only affected the territory of Noah's people, not the whole world, as the Bible would have us believe. This is one of the many important points in which the Holy Qur-án differs from the Bible, and the truth is once more on the side of the Holy Qur-án.

903 The tribe of 'Ád, with their prophet Húd, are mentioned in the Holy Qur-án in the following places:—7 : 65–72, 11 : 50–60, 14 : 9, 25 : 38, 26 : 123–140, 29 : 38, 41 : 13–16, 46 : 21–26, 51 : 41–42, 53 : 50, 54 : 18–21, 69 : 4, 69 : 6–8, 89 : 6–8.

'Ád was the grandson of Aram (mentioned in 89 : 7), who was a grandson of Noah, and the tribe of 'Ád here spoken of is called the first 'Ád (53 : 50), as distinguished from the tribe of Samood, which is called the second 'Ád. This tribe lived in the desert of Al-Ahqáf (46 : 21), which is marked on the maps of Arabia and extends from Oman to Hadramaut (Rz). Rodwell's view that "the two tribes of 'Ád and Samood—the latter of whom is mentioned by Diod. Sic. and Ptolemy—lay to the north of Mecca" is wrong in respect of the tribe of 'Ád, though it is tolerably true so far as the tribe of Samood is concerned. Sale has the following account of this tribe in his Pr. Dis.: "'Ád was an ancient and potent tribe of Arabs and zealous idolaters. They chiefly worshipped four deities, Sáqia, Háfizah, Ráziqah, and Sálimah, the first, as they imagined, supplying them with rain, the second preserving them from all dangers abroad, the third providing food for their sustenance, and the fourth restoring them to health when afflicted with sickness."

904 The male member of a tribe is generally spoken of as their brother: "Thus يا اخا بكر means, O thou of the tribe of Bekr" (Ham-LL).

905 The prophet Húd is the Eber of the Bible, because Húd is said to be the grandson of Arphaxad, the grandson of Noah (Rz). Compare Gen. 10 : 24 for Eber's genealogy. His son Joktan is said to have established a kingdom in Yúnán.

906 By making the Arabs khulafá or successors is meant that they were made a ruling nation and possessors of a vast kingdom.

907 Some commentators have related unfounded legends as to the incredible tallness of their stature. The words used in the Qur-án signify only that they were a strong and powerful people.

908 Sticking to their idols and refusing to believe in Allah is here spoken of as uncleanness and wrath having fallen or lighted upon them from the Lord. Compare 22 : 30, which says: "Avoid the uncleanness of the idols." There is also a secondary significance of the word rijs, i.e. punishment, and in that case the past tense would indicate the certainty of the event, because the punishment is so sure to come that it may be spoken of as having lighted upon them.

909 The reference here is to their deities, for which see 903.

910 They were destroyed by a storm blowing on them continuously for eight days (69 : 7). Living in a sandy desert, as the name Al-Ahqáf denotes, the storm had a devastating effect.

911 I have already mentioned that Samood, known as the second 'Ád, is often mentioned in the Holy Qur-án conjointly with the first 'Ád. It is spoken of in the following places:— 7 : 73–79, 11 : 161–168, 14 : 9, 15 : 80–84, 25 : 38, 26 : 141–159, 27 : 45–53, 29 : 38, 41 : 13–14, 41 : 17–18, 51 : 43–45, 53 : 51, 54 : 23–31, 69 : 4–5, 89 : 9, 91 : 11–15.

'Ad and Samood, though two nearly related tribes, were separated both as regards time and place. The tribe of Samood is known after a grandson of Aram, the grandson of Noah. Historical traces of it are met with in Ptolemy. The tribe flourished more than two hundred years after 'Ád, and occupied the territory known as Al-Hijr or Al-Hajar (15 : 80) and the plain known by the name of Wádi-ul-Qurá, which forms the southern boundary of Syria and the northern one of Arabia (Essays on the Life of Muhammad, by S.S.A.).

912 Sáliḥ was a descendant in the sixth generation after Samood, the great ancestor of the tribe, after whom the tribe is known.

913 Neither the Qur-án nor any reliable saying of the Holy Prophet lends any support to the numerous legends regarding the miraculous appearance and prodigious size of the she-camel.

74 And remember when He made you successors after 'Ád[a] and settled you in the land—you make mansions on its plains and hew out houses in the mountains[914]—remember therefore Allah's benefits and do not act corruptly in the land, making mischief.

75 The chiefs of those who behaved proudly among his people said to those who were considered weak, to those who believed from among them: Do you know that Sálih is sent by his Lord? They said: Surely we are believers in what he has been sent with.

76 Those who were haughty said: Surely we are deniers of what you believe in.

77 So they slew the she-camel and revolted against their Lord's commandment, and they said: O Sálih! bring us what you threatened us with, if you are one of the apostles.

Ar. thou didst threaten. Ar. thou art.

78 Then the earthquake overtook them, so they became motionless bodies in their abode.[915]

It was an ordinary she-camel which was given as a sign to a people. Their slaying of it was a sign that they would neither accept the truth nor cease persecuting Sálih and his followers.

It may be noted here that there is nothing strange that a camel should be given as a sign, when even now we can see that a roughly constructed house known as the Ka'ba is given as a sign to the whole world, so that whoever tries to destroy it perishes himself. This ordinary house built of rough stones is a much greater sign than Sálih's living she-camel.

914 In his Essays on the Life of Muhammad, Sir Syed Ahmad Khan says: "They excavated various rocks, and after having hewn and carved them, took up their abode therein. These rocks are up to this very day known by the name of Asalib. Almost every Arab, as well as several foreigners who have travelled in Arabia, can bear testimony to the existence of these rock habitations, which stand there at once to satisfy curiosity and to afford information respecting the nations who made them. These habitations likewise corroborate and bear testimony to the truth of that portion of the history of the Samood tribe which is mentioned in the Holy Qur-án."

915 The punishment which overtook Samood is described under different names. Here it is called rajfah, which means the earthquake. The description of their abodes in 27 : 52 as being fallen down also shows that they were destroyed by an earthquake. In 54 : 31 the same punishment is referred to as ṣaiḥah, i.e. a single cry, and it evidently refers to the rumbling noise which precedes an earthquake. In 51 : 44 and elsewhere it is spoken of as ṣá'iqah, which means any destructive punishment (O, Q-LL), carrying sometimes the same significance as ṣaiḥah. In 69 : 5 Samood are said to have been destroyed by means of ṭághiah, which means an excessively severe punishment. Both of these descriptions apply to an earthquake.

79 Then he turned away from them and said: O my people! I did certainly deliver to you the message of my Lord, and I gave you good advice, but you do not love those who give good advice.[916]

80 And (We sent) Lot when he said to his people: What! do you commit an indecency which any one in the world has not done before you?[917]

81 Most surely you come to males in lust besides females: nay, you are an extravagant people.

82 And the answer of his people was no other than that they said: Turn them out of your town, surely they are a people who seek to purify (themselves).

916 This evidently refers to the survivors from the great disaster.

917 In the chronological order which this chapter keeps in view, Abraham should have been mentioned next, but his name is here omitted for two reasons; firstly, because only those prophets are mentioned whose enemies were destroyed before their eyes; and, secondly, because Abraham's history has already been dealt with in the last chapter, to which this forms, as it were, a supplement. Hence, we come to Lot, Abraham's nephew. For other references to Lot in the Holy Qur-án, see 6 : 87, 11 : 77–83, 15 : 61–74, 21 : 74–75, 26 : 160–173, 27 : 54–58, 29 : 32–35, 37 : 133–136, 51 : 32–37, 53 : 53–54, 54 : 34–38, 66 : 10. Lot is one of those prophets who have been maligned not only in Rabbinical literature but also in the Bible. It is clear that Lot is considered a righteous servant by Abraham (Gen. 18 : 23), and by saving Lot, God has shown that He, too, regarded Lot as a righteous man; but a little further on we are told that Lot was guilty of incestuous intercourse with his daughters, a fact so inconsistent with righteousness that it must be condemned as a manifest lie.

The question whether Lot was a prophet is answered in the affirmative by Sale, but Wherry denies it. We have seen that the Jews represented Lot in a very unfavourable light, and their ideas were transported into the Bible.

If Gen. 19 : 30–38 is a faithful record, Lot cannot take his place even among the righteous; whereas, his being saved in the destruction of Sodom is clear proof of his righteousness, when read along with Gen. 18 : 23. Sale has, however, produced the additional testimony of the apostle Peter, who says: "And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked (for that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds)" (2 Pet. 2 : 7, 8). Here Lot is not only spoken of as being just and righteous, which he could not have been if Gen. 19 : 30–38 is to be believed, but he is also spoken of as vexing his soul with the wickedness of the people of Sodom, which can only be true if he was a preacher of righteousness among those people; for why should an indifferent settler in the land have vexed himself with the wickedness of the Sodomites? And again, why should Lot have gone, being a just man, to settle among a wicked people had he not been charged with the duty of reforming them? Nor is it reasonable to hold that God destroyed a people without even giving them a warning, and that warning, if ever given, was given through Lot.

83 So We delivered him and his followers,[917A] except his wife: she was of those who remained behind.

84 And We rained upon them a rain;[918] consider then what was the end of the guilty.

The History of Shu'aib

85–87. Shu'aib preaches Unity. 88–93. His rejection and the coming of punishment.

85 And to Midian (We sent) their brother Shu'aib. He said: O my people! serve Allah, you have no god other than Him; clear proof indeed has come to you from your Lord, therefore give full measure and weight and do not diminish to men their things, and do not make mischief in the land after its reform; this is better for you if you are believers:[919]

وَإِلٰى مَدْيَنَ أَخَاهُمْ شُعَيْبًا قَالَ يٰقَوْمِ اعْبُدُوا اللّٰهَ مَا لَكُمْ مِّنْ إِلٰهٍ غَيْرُهٗ قَدْ جَآءَتْكُمْ بَيِّنَةٌ مِّنْ رَّبِّكُمْ فَأَوْفُوا الْكَيْلَ وَالْمِيْزَانَ وَلَا تَبْخَسُوا النَّاسَ أَشْيَآءَهُمْ وَلَا تُفْسِدُوْا فِي الْأَرْضِ بَعْدَ إِصْلَاحِهَا ذٰلِكُمْ خَيْرٌ لَّكُمْ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ مُّؤْمِنِيْنَ ○

917A The word ahl is here interpreted as meaning those who believed in him (Bḍ). It means in the first place a man's family or near relatives, being, in fact, the equivalent of ál, but with reference to root-meaning both have a wider significance, including all those who bear a relation to man, as members to a head (from the root óla, meaning he returned or bore a relation to a man) by religion or persuasion or kindred. There is, however, this difference between ál and ahl, that the former is used only in relation to eminent men while the latter may refer to men in general (Rgh).

918 Maṭr (lit. raining) is also used in the sense of doing good or evil, according to the object by which it is followed, but امطر هم الله (which is the form used here) is only used in relation to punishment (Q, TA). The punishment which overtook the people of Lot is frequently called maṭr or rain, while in 11 : 82 and 15 : 74 stones are said to have been rained down upon them, and in 64 : 34 it is called a ḥáṣib, which primarily signifies a thrower or pelter of stones, but means any punishment. Its description as ṣaiḥah in 15 : 73, combined with the above facts, shows that it was a volcanic eruption combined with an earthquake, because ṣaiḥah signifies a great noise such as precedes an earthquake, and is used to denote an earthquake (see 915).

919 References to Shu'aib are contained in the Holy Qur-án here and in 11 : 84–95, 15 : 78–79, 26 : 176–191, and 29 : 36–37. Shu'aib was a descendant of Abraham in the fifth generation. Madian or Midian was the name of Abraham's son by Keturah (Gen. 25 : 2), and a city of the same name grew up on the Red Sea, south-east of Mount Sinai, where his descendants settled, and is mentioned by Ptolemy as Modiana. Shu'aib is generally supposed to be another name for Jethro.

The injunction do not diminish to men their things stands for not depriving or defrauding men of their rights (Bḍ), or not acting wrongfully towards men in respect of their things or dues.

86 And do not lie in wait in every path, threatening and turning away from Allah's way him who believes in Him and seeking to make it crooked: and remember when you were few, then He multiplied you, and consider what was the end of the mischief-makers:

وَلَا تَقْعُدُوا بِكُلِّ صِرَاطٍ تُوعِدُونَ

PART IX

88 The chiefs, those who were proud from among his people, said: We will most certainly turn you out, O Shu'aib, and (also) those who believe with you, from our town, or you shall come back to our faith. He said: What! though we dislike (it)?

92 Those who called Shu'aib a liar were as though they had never dwelt therein: those who called Shu'aib a liar, they were the losers.

93 So he turned away from them and said: O my people! certainly I delivered to you the messages of my Lord and I gave you good advice: how shall I then be sorry for an unbelieving people?[921]

Meccans warned of Punishment

94, 95. Why distress is sent. 96–99. Punishment awaiting the Prophet's rejecters.

94 And We did not send a prophet in a town but We overtook its people with distress and affliction in order that they might humble themselves.[922]

Ar. touch.

96 And if the people of the towns had believed and guarded (against evil) We would certainly have opened up for them blessings from the heaven and the earth, but they rejected, so We overtook them for what they had earned.

97 What! do the people of the towns then feel secure from Our punishment coming to them by night while they sleep?

921 Notwithstanding a much severer opposition, the Holy Prophet's attitude towards his opponents is thus described: Perhaps you will kill yourself with grief because they would not believe (26:3). But the words, even in Shu'aib's mouth, mean only this, that he had fully warned his people, and it was their own fault that they did not benefit by his good advice.

922 That the histories of the nations are meant as a warning to the Quraish is evident. It is also plain that even afflictions and distress, when sent on a people, are meant for their spiritual improvement, that they might humble themselves. The words may indicate the great famine which is more clearly referred to in 44:10, 11.

923 By good and evil are meant here ease and distress respectively (Rz).

98 What! do the people of the towns feel secure from Our punishment coming to them in the morning while they play?[924]

102 And We did not find in most of them any (faithfulness to) covenant, and We found most of them to be certainly transgressors.

وَمَا وَجَدْنَا لِأَكْثَرِهِمْ مِنْ عَهْدٍ ۖ

103 Then We raised after them Moses with Our communications to Pharaoh and 924 Ḍuḥá, which is here translated as morning, begins after sunrise, according to some when the sun is yet low, and according to others when it is somewhat high (TA-LL). It is derived from ḍaḥá, meaning it appeared or became apparent, and is thus applied to the time from when the sun shines brightly to the time when the day is advanced. The playing may be taken either literally or it may indicate the worldly engagements in which they were occupied to the utter neglect of higher aspirations.

925 This shows why and when Allah sets a seal on the hearts. It is the commission of sins on the part of men which calls for an affliction from Allah, and the consequence is the setting of a seal on such hearts so that "hearing they do not hear." This obtains further clarity from the next verse. Allah would have men believe, sending clear arguments which they reject, adhering to their unbelief. Allah's seal is therefore only a mark of their determination not to believe, whatever might happen.

926 Here again we have an instance of the correctness of the Quranic statement where it differs with the Bible, showing the incompleteness of the Bible narrative. In the fourth chapter of Exodus it is clearly stated that two signs were given to Moses—that of his rod turning into a serpent and that of his hand becoming white when put into his bosom; and Exod. 4:8 clearly states that Moses was commanded to show both these signs to Pharaoh. But when we read ch. 7, where the performance of those miracles before Pharaoh is recorded, we find mention only of the miracle of the rod, which was rejected. It is, however, obvious that Moses must have shown the second sign on the rejection of the first; for he could not have disobeyed the Divine commandment, nor was the second miracle given to him in vain.

Another question worth considering here is as to the nature of these miracles. As is stated elsewhere in the Holy Qur-án, Moses' rod was an ordinary staff: "I recline on it, and I beat the leaves with it to make them fall upon my sheep, and I have other uses for it" (20:18). It is nowhere stated in the Holy Qur-án that whenever he threw it down his rod turned into a serpent. Even when the Israelites were in the greatest danger, Moses made no use of it. Only on two occasions the rod is stated to have turned into a serpent, viz. (1) when Moses held communion with God before going to Pharaoh; (2) when he first came before Pharaoh; and on these two occasions only did the hand turn white.

Now on the first of these occasions it is certain that the rod was seen turning into a serpent by Moses alone, when he was in a state of communion with the Divine Being; and therefore it was undoubtedly a state of vision—a state in which a person is temporarily transported to a spiritual sphere. This is the state in which the prophets and other righteous men receive Divine revelation; and while it is certainly not a state of sleep, it is equally certain that it is a state in which the mind rises above the limitations of physical environment, beholding things

The History of Moses

109–119. Pharaoh's enchanters in opposition to Moses. 120–126. Enchanters believe in Moses.

109 The chiefs of Pharaoh's people said: Most surely this is an enchanter possessed of knowledge:

110 He intends to turn you out of your land. What counsel do you then give?[927]

111 They said: Put him off and his brother, and send collectors into the cities:

112 That they may bring to you every enchanter possessed of knowledge.

Ar. thee.

113 And the enchanters came to Pharaoh (and) said: We must surely have a reward if we are the prevailing ones.[928]

114 He said: Yes, and you shall certainly be of those who are near (to me).

115 They said: O Moses! Will you cast, or shall we be the first to cast?

Ar. wilt thou.

116 He said: Cast. So when they cast, they deceived the people's eyes and frightened them, and they produced a mighty enchantment.

which are invisible to the physical eye, and hearing things which the physical ear cannot otherwise hear. It is therefore certain that on the first occasion Moses observed the change whilst in the same state of temporary transportation in which he received revelation.

The second occasion is, however, different, because others besides Moses witnessed the change. It is a recognized fact that the effect of inspired vision is sometimes so strong that others besides the seer partake in it. And since the rod of Moses did not always acquire the quality of turning into a serpent whenever thrown down, and this change was witnessed only on two occasions, the conclusion is incontrovertible that the change was wrought under the peculiar conditions attendant upon receptive revelation.

Yet, what was shown was not mere play. The great truth underlying the 'aṣá or the rod turning into a serpent was that the followers of Moses, as represented by his rod, would prevail over their enemies; and the significance underlying the whitening of Moses' hand was that his arguments would shine forth with clearness.

For these interpretations of the two occurrences see 1581 and 1582.

927 Amr here carries the significance of advising or counselling. One says mur-ni, meaning counsel me, advise me (A-LL). The words are apparently put into Pharaoh's mouth.

928 Compare Exod. 7:11: "Then Pharaoh also called the wise men and the sorcerers."

117 And We revealed to Moses, saying: Cast your rod; then lo! it devoured the lies they told.[929]

Ar. thy.

118 So the truth was established, and what they did became null.

119 Thus they were vanquished there, and they went back abased.

120 And the enchanters were thrown down, prostrating (themselves).

121 They said: We believe in the Lord of the worlds,

122 The Lord of Moses and Aaron.[930]

123 Pharaoh said: Do you believe in Him before I have given you permission? surely this is a plot which you have secretly devised in this city, that you may turn out of it its people, but you shall know:

124 I will certainly cut off your hands and your feet on opposite sides, then will I crucify you all together.

125 They said: Surely to our Lord shall we go back:

126 And you do not take revenge on us except because we have believed in the communications of our Lord when they came to us: Our Lord! pour out upon us patience and cause us to die in submission.

Ar. thou dost.

929 Compare Exod. 7:12: "For they cast every man his rod and they became serpents: but Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods." The description of what the enchanters showed as the lies they told indicates the real nature of their enchantment. It was all a lie and a falsehood. See further 1591.

930 The Bible does not speak of the magicians as believers in the Divine mission of Moses and in the Lord of the Worlds Whom he represented; but we have mention of this in Rabbinical literature, according to which some Egyptians accompanied Moses when he departed from Egypt, which is corroborated by the Bible narrative: "And a mixed multitude also went up with them" (Exod. 12:38). "For the Egyptians, when the time fixed for Moses' descent from the mountain had expired, came in a body, forty thousand of them, accompanied by two Egyptian magicians, Yanos and Yambros, the same who imitated Moses in producing the signs and the plagues in Egypt" (Jewish Ency.). These two magicians are also mentioned in 2 Tim. 3:8, which is a further corroboration of the truth of the statement made in the Qur-án and of the incompleteness of the Bible narrative.

128 Moses said to his people: Ask help from Allah and be patient: surely the land is Allah's; He causes such of His servants to inherit it as He pleases, and the end is for those who guard (against evil).

129 They said: We have been persecuted before you came to us and since you have come to us. He said: It may be that your Lord will destroy your enemy and make you rulers in the land, then He will see how you act.[932]

931 The word translated as master is qâhir, which signifies one who has overcome, conquered, or subdued another (LL).

fortune is only from Allah, but most of them do not know.[933]

134 And when the plague[936] fell upon them, they said: O Moses! pray for us to your Lord as He has promised with you; if you remove the plague from us, we will certainly believe in you and we will certainly send away with you the children of Israel.

135 But when We removed the plague from them till a term which they should attain, lo! they broke (the promise).[937]

933 The Jews are reported to have attributed certain of their misfortunes to the advent of the Holy Prophet, saying, "The prices have risen high and the rains have lessened" (Rz). Probably this referred to the great famine. The Egyptians, too, suffered from a famine and attributed their misfortune to Moses. They are, however, told that the misfortunes which they were made to suffer were due to their own evil deeds. The use of the word ṭáir, literally, a bird, to indicate ill-luck is significant, and refers to an Arab superstition. It is stated that the Arabs used to augur evil from the croaking of the crow and from the birds going to the left (LL).

934 Ṭúfán, according to Rgh, is originally every accident that besets men on all sides, and hence it is also applied to flood or deluge. According to TA, ṭúfán means death, or quick and widespreading death; or death prevailing generally (LL). Hence it might mean either plague causing excessive death or flood. Bkh also gives الموت الكثير i.e. widespread death, as the true interpretation of ṭúfán.

935 The Bible mentions the following signs: (1) turning of the water into blood; (2) frogs; (3) lice; (4) flies; (5) plague upon beasts and men; (6) hail; (7) locusts; (8) darkness; (9) plague on the first-born. Of these the Qur-án mentions the first, second, third, and seventh in clear words; the fourth is included in the third; the fifth and the ninth are mentioned together as ṭúfán or the widespread death; the hail is not mentioned, but the destruction of fruits which was brought about by it is mentioned in v. 130; while instead of the darkness we have the drought in that verse, which seems to have been the actual affliction, and of which darkness may have been a result either metaphorically or actually, because of hurricanes and storms darkening the land, as is usually the case in time of drought. The two signs of v. 130, with the five mentioned here, are the seven signs which, with the two signs of the rod and the white hand, make up the nine signs of 17 : 101 and 27 : 12.

936 The reference is to the plague mentioned in the previous verse.

937 A reference to Exodus, ch. 3–11, will show that Pharaoh again and again broke his promise to let the children of Israel go—promises which he made on condition that a certain affliction should be removed.

136 Therefore We inflicted retribution on them and drowned them in the sea[a] because they rejected Our signs and were heedless of them.

137 And We made the people who were deemed weak to inherit the eastern lands and the western ones which We had blessed; and the good word of your Lord was fulfilled in the children of Israel because they bore up (sufferings) patiently; and We utterly destroyed what Pharaoh and his people had wrought and what they built.[938]

138 And We made the children of Israel to pass the sea,[b] then they came upon a people who kept to the worship of their idols. They said: O Moses! make for us a god as they have (their) gods. He said: Surely you are a people acting ignorantly:[939]

139 (As to) these, surely that about which they are shall be brought to naught and that which they do is vain.

140 He said: What! shall I seek for you a god other than Allah while He has made you excel (all) created things?[940]

141 And when We delivered you from Pharaoh's people who subjected you to severe torment,[c] killing your sons and sparing your women,[d] and in this there was a great trial from your Lord.

938 The land that was blessed is none other than the Holy Land, for which a Divine promise was given to Abraham. The words that follow show that there is a reference here to some promise given already: And the good word of your Lord was fulfilled in the children of Israel. It is the good word contained in Gen. 17:8. The eastern and the western lands might signify the eastern and the western tracts of the Holy Land, or the lands on the eastern and western sides of the Jordan.

939 That the Israelites came across idolatrous nations in their wanderings in Syria is too clear to need any proof. That they themselves had idolatrous leanings is shown by Exod. 32:1, "The people gathered themselves together unto Aaron and said unto him, Up, make us gods which shall go before us." Many other anecdotes show a similar tendency to idol-worship.

940 Moses' argument against idolatry is the one to which the Holy Qur-án repeatedly calls attention, viz. that man, being as it were the lord of creation under God, and excelling the whole of creation, should not take objects lower than himself as his gods.

941 The highest bliss of paradise is said to be the sight of the Divine Being. The words addressed to Moses, you cannot see Me, do not negative the sight of the Divine Being in the life after death. All that they do negative is the seeing of the Divine Being with the physical eye. Moses' request seems to have been based on the elders' demand spoken of in 2:55. The crumbling of the mountain is the same as the rumbling or earthquake of 2:55. I venture, however, another explanation. What Moses wanted to see was the great manifestation of Divine glory which was reserved for the Holy Prophet Muhammad (may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him). But he could not bear the sight which was at last vouchsafed to the Holy Prophet, for which see 53:13, 14 and 2381. In fact, both Moses and Jesus were not equal to the task which was reserved for the Holy Prophet Muhammad: hence it is that Jesus also said that he could not teach his followers all things, but that when the Comforter made his appearance he would guide them into all truth. That Moses was unequal to the Holy Prophet's task was clearly demonstrated by his falling down in a swoon when he beheld the Great Manifestation. The crumbling of the mountain signified that the Mosaic law would not stand for ever, and this significance is corroborated by the contrast between Mount Sinai (which thus crumbled down) and the "secure city" (95:2, 3), i.e. Mecca, which was to remain secure so long as the world lasted.

942 Kataba means He (God) prescribed, appointed or ordained (TA-LL) and made obligatory (Msb-LL). There is nothing here or elsewhere in the Holy Qur-án to show that Moses had received written tablets. On the other hand, it appears that Moses was spoken to by Allah, and therefore he received His commandments by revelation like other prophets. The words admonition of every kind and explanation of all things cannot be taken generally, but are limited by the requirements of the Israelitish people, for whom they were meant (Rz).

943 The meaning is that a time will come over the Israelites when they will become transgressors, i.e. they will not keep the commandments which are enjoined on them. This is also stated plainly in the books of Moses.

944 The word jasad means a body, as well as red or intensely yellow. The former meaning is the one generally adopted by the commentators, the significance being that the

He said: Son of my mother! surely the people reckoned me weak and had well-nigh slain me, therefore make not the enemies to rejoice over me and count me not among the unjust people.

calf made was a mere body without a soul. Yet it was so made that it uttered a voice like the voice of a calf. The other meaning also affords a true description of the calf made, for being made of gold ornaments it was of a red or an intensely yellow colour.

945 سقط فى ايديهم is a phrase which, by the consensus of opinion obtaining among lexicologists and commentators, means they repented or repented greatly; because, it is said, he who repents bites his hands in sorrow so that his hand is fallen upon by his teeth as the quarry is seized by a bird of prey (saqaṭa meaning it fell down) (Zj, Q, etc.—LL). The phrase is said not to have been known before the Qur-án (LL). Or nadm may be understood and the meaning may be, when regret was brought before them (Zj,-Rz). The Israelites' repentance, though mentioned first, was subsequent to Moses' return (2:54). In fact, the order here is not historical, but one connecting the repentance with the sin, mentioning the events which brought about that repentance afterwards.

946 According to Kf عجلتم امر ربكم is here equivalent to عجلتم عن امر ربكم and he explains عجل عن الامر as meaning he left it (i.e the affair) incomplete. But the meaning given to عجل منه by TA is he turned aside from him or it, and this is the meaning I adopt. It may be added, however, that 'ajila is also used as a transitive in the sense of sabaqa, and the meaning in that case would be, did you hasten (or hasten with regard to) the bidding of your Lord? The amr, or bidding, has in the latter case been explained variously as meaning the appointed time (I'Ab), or promise (Hasan), or wrath ('Ata); while Kalbi gives a long explanation, i.e. did you hasten with the worship of the calf before the bidding of your Lord should come to you? (Rz, AH).

947 Aaron's excuse and Moses' acceptance of it show clearly that Aaron was quite innocent, having had a share neither in making the calf nor in worshipping it. The Bible account which makes a righteous prophet of Allah guilty of the most heinous crime must be rejected as untrue. That forgiveness was not sought for any fault in connection with calf-worship is clear from the fact that Moses joins himself with Aaron in the prayer given in this verse. Forgiveness here, as frequently elsewhere in the Holy Qur-án, is equivalent to the Divine protection which every man should seek against the frailties and shortcomings of human nature. See 2194 for a full explanation of the word ghafr.

948 According to Exod. 32 : 19 Moses "brake them beneath the mountain" in his anger, and Exod. ch. 34 describes how the tablets were renewed. The Qur-án differs from this narrative. It does not state that the tablets were broken up or renewed, but mentions their being taken up by Moses after his anger had calmed and while the writing was still on them. It appears strange, indeed, that a prophet like Moses should have been so overpowered by wrath as to have broken the tablets upon which were written down Divine communications, therefore the Bible narrative must be rejected. Its absurdity is to be found in the fact that tablets of stone "written with the finger of God," by merely being cast out of his hand, as the Bible says, could not have been so broken as to make the writing illegible; therefore, the Quranic statement, which contradicts the Bible, is the correct one.

949 Exod. 24 : 1 speaks of Moses having taken up seventy elders of Israel along with him, though they were forbidden to "come near the Lord," and on this occasion Moses was in the mountain forty days and forty nights (Exod. 24 : 19). Although he is also spoken of in the Bible as having gone into the mountain after the incident of the calf-worship and to have remained there for forty days and forty nights (Exod. 34 : 28), the allusion in the Qur-án is to the first incident; Moses' second visit is not mentioned at all in the Qur-án.

949A No attribute of the Divine Being receives such prominence in the Holy Qur-án as the attribute of mercy. Evil there is in the world, and the evil-doers must receive their due, but mark the contrast: And My mercy encompasses all things. The truth is that even chastisement is a phase of Divine mercy, because it seeks not to punish, but to correct the evil-doer. Divine mercy is great indeed, but it is specially ordained for those who guard against evil and who believe in the Divine communications, the followers of the Holy Prophet in particular, as the concluding words of this verse read in conjunction with the next verse show.

950 For ummí, meaning one who neither writes nor reads a writing, see 117. Hence the Arabs are called an ummí people, and the ummí prophet is either the prophet of the ummí people (i.e. the Arabs) because he was like them (i.e. did not know reading and writing) or he was so called because he himself did not know reading and writing (Rgh). But according to some the Prophet is called ummí because he came from the umm-ul-Qurá, i.e. Mecca, which is the Metropolis of Arabia (MB, Rz under 3 : 74). Thus the ummí prophet conveys any one of the following three significances, viz. (1) one who knows not reading or writing; (2) one from among the Arabs; and (3) one coming from Mecca.

The suggestion of Rodwell that the word ummí means gentile in the sense of a non-Jewish or heathen people is not supported by any recognized authority. See 2 : 78, where the Jews are called Ummí: "And there are among them illiterates (Ar. ummís) who know not the book." LL, it is true, gives gentile as the signification of ummí, but a reference to the authorities he quotes clearly shows that if the word gentile expresses the meaning of ummí, it does so in the general sense of one belonging to a gens or clan; therefore Lane's conclusion that in a tropical and secondary sense ummí means heathen is entirely without foundation. Bḍ states in 3 : 21 that by ummí are meant a people not having a kitáb, but even if kitáb there means a Book or scripture and not writing, one not having a Book or a revealed scripture would mean an Arab, because all the people with whom the Arabs came in contact had their scriptures. Similarly, the contrast implied in Lane's statement that the Holy Prophet Muhammad is called an ummí, meaning a gentile, as distinguished from an Israelite, is that he was an Arab or an Ishmaelite as distinguished from an Israelite, and the reference in the adoption of this title is, no doubt, to "thy brethren" of Deut. 18 : 18. As for the fact that the Holy Prophet was unable to read or write before revelation came to him, there can be no two opinions. On this point the Qur-án is conclusive: "And you did not recite before it any book, nor did you transcribe one with your right hand" (29:48). There is a difference of opinion, however, as to whether he could read or write after revelation. Without entering into the details of this controversy I may remark that, while there is ground for believing that he could read, he still had his letters written by others. It should be remembered that this description of the Prophet occurs in a chapter which is undoubtedly entirely Meccan, and hence the suggestion that the word ummi relating to the Prophet does not occur in any Meccan Sura carries no weight, and there is no reason to believe that this verse was added at Medina.

951 There are many prophecies regarding the advent of the Holy Prophet both in the Old and the New Testaments. The Torah and the Gospel are specially mentioned here because Moses and Jesus were respectively the first and the last of the Israelite prophets. Deut. 18:15–18 speaks very clearly of the raising of a prophet (who shall be the like of Moses) from among the brethren of the Israelites, i.e. the Ishmaelites or the Arabs, while Deut. 33:2 speaks of the shining forth of the manifestation of the Lord, i.e. his coming in full glory "from Mount Paran." The Gospel is full of the prophecies of the advent of the Holy Prophet; Matt. 13:31, Matt. 21:34–40, Mark 12:1, Luke 20:9, where the Lord of the vineyard comes after the son (i.e. Jesus) is maltreated, John 1:22, John 14:16, John 14:26 all contain such prophecies.

952 Noldeke's supposition that there is a reference to the Anṣár, i.e. the helpers of Medina, here, and Rodwell's conclusion that hence the verse must have been added at Medina, are not entitled to serious consideration. See introduction to this chapter.

953 We are told here that the Divine kingdom, which is really one, shall have but one law, so that all men should again be one. The universality of the Holy Prophet's mission really dates from the first message he received, because in the opening chapter, which is undoubtedly one of the earliest revelations, Allah is spoken of, not as the Lord of Arabs, but as the Lord of the whole world and of all nations. In vain would any one search the pages of any other sacred book to discover a message of this nature by any other prophet in the world. In fact, every prophet was sent to one people, his mission being limited to the reformation and unification of one nation; but Muhammad (may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him) came to unite all nations into one and to blot out all limitations of nationality and colour. That he was successful in this mission the history of Islam amply testifies. As soon as a man enters the fold of Islam his particular nationality sinks into insignificance before the vaster conception of humanity for which Islam opens the mind. It may be said, in fact, that a Muslim's nationality is universal, and Islam is the religion of all Humanity—not the religion of a particular nation. The unlearned Arab mind could not entertain so vast a conception of religion; it was the word of God which caused a revolution in the history of religion, for no prophet before him had ever entertained the idea of a religion for all Humanity. Even Christ said to a non-Israelite woman that he was "not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. 15 : 24); and being pressed again, only answered that "It is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to dogs" (26). It is Muhammad's message alone that speaks of all men alike as the children of the heavenly father, the Lord of the worlds. The invidious distinction of children and dogs is not known to the religion of Islam.

And if the like good came to them, they would take it (too).[956] Was not a promise taken from them in the Book that they would not speak anything about Allah but the truth, and they have read what is in it; and the abode of the hereafter is better for those who guard (against evil). 955 Lexicologists recognize a difference between khalf and khalaf, the former being applied to evil and the latter to good, whether a son or a generation (Q, TA-LL). Sometimes the two words are interchangeable.

956 First they commit a crime for the frail good of this life, saying that they will be forgiven, then persist in their evil course, and when a similar occasion arises, they again return to the old crimes.

957 The stories built upon these simple words by some commentators must be rejected. The words simply relate the experience of the elders of Israel when they stood at the foot of the mountain which rose above them. There was a severe earthquake, which is referred to in v. 155, causing them to think that the mountain would fall down upon them. According to LA, the primary significance of natq is za'za', which means the moving, agitating, shaking, or putting a thing into a state of commotion; or any vehement moving, agitating, or

Man's Nature bears Evidence to the Truth of what Revelation upholds 172–174. Unity of Divine Being impressed on human nature. 175–178. A parable of those who reject. 179, 180. How nature is perverted. 181. A people on the right course.

Ar. thy.

172 And when your Lord brought forth from the children of Adam, from their backs, their descendants, and made them bear witness against their own souls: Am I not your Lord? they said: Yes! we bear witness. Lest you should say on the day of resurrection: Surely we were heedless of this,[958]

173 Or you should say: Only our fathers associated others (with Allah) before, and we were an offspring after them: wilt Thou then destroy us for what the vain-doers did?

174 And thus do We make clear the communications, and that haply they might return.

175 And recite to them the news of him whom We give Our communications, but he withdraws himself from them, so the devil overtakes[959] him, so he is of those who perish.[960] shaking (LL). Hence you say زعزعت الريح الشجرة meaning that the wind shook the tree (TA-LL). Thus the use of nataqnā instead of rafa'nā clearly explains that the mountain was shaken violently by an earthquake while the elders of Israel stood at its foot. IJ also notes this significance of the word, for he gives ḥarraka (meaning he shook violently) as the equivalent of nataqa, in the saying nataqa-nī. You also say ما نتق برجله meaning he does not shake his foot (IJ). Natq has also another meaning, viz. taking up from the roots. Even if that signification be accepted, the use of the word in reference to the mountain does not show that the whole of the mountain was taken up from the roots. You say امرأة ناتق i.e. a woman giving birth to many children, or throwing out child after child, and the use of the word natq in reference to the mountain seems to carry a similar significance, i.e. a volcanic eruption causing it to throw out stones and fiery matter, along with which there was an earthquake.

958 There is a report to the effect that the promise referred to was taken from all the descendants of Adam when he was first created (Rz). But a very large number of commentators have discredited this, because the verse does not mention the bringing forth of descendants from Adam, but from the children of Adam, and this seems clearly to refer to every human being as he comes into existence. The evidence is, therefore, that which human nature itself affords (Rz). It is, in fact, the same evidence which is elsewhere spoken of as being afforded by human nature as in "the nature made by Allah in which He has made men" (30:30).

176 And if We had pleased, We would certainly have exalted him thereby; but he clung to the earth[961] and followed his low desire, so his parable is as the parable of the dog: if 959 Atba'ahú (from tabi'a, meaning he followed, or went behind) signifies here he overtook him (TA-LL).

960 Balaam, Umayya bin Abi Salt, Abú 'Ámir, and all the hypocrites, have been respectively indicated as the persons to whom reference is made, but the best explanation is supplied by Qatada, who says: It speaks generally of every one to whom guidance is brought but he turns aside from it (Rz). This view is corroborated by what is stated at the conclusion of the parable in v. 176, this is the parable of the people who reject Our communications. Therefore the statement made in v. 175 and in the opening words of v. 176 is a general statement, and does not refer to any particular person.

961 Earth here stands for all that is earthly and mean.

962 The concluding words explain what goes before. Many men and jinn are created for hell, but they are none other than the heedless ones who do not care for what is said. They have been given hearts, but they do not use them to understand the truth; they have been given eyes, but they do not employ them to see the truth; they have been given ears, but they turn a deaf ear to truth. This has been stated to show that Allah has not created them differently from others, but they themselves do not use the faculties which Allah has granted them. It is the misuse of their faculties which brings them to hell.

Divine Being (Rz). These attributes are mentioned in the Holy Qur-án. By calling on Him thereby is not meant that these names are to be repeated on a rosary; this practice was never adopted by the Holy Prophet. All that is meant is that man should always keep the Divine attributes before his mind, endeavouring to possess those attributes.

964 Yulhidún is from alhada, meaning he deviated from the right course with respect to a thing; hence الحد فى الحرم means, he desecrated the haram and violated its sanctity (LL). This meaning also suits يلحدون فى اسمائه as in this verse. According to Rgh, الحاد فى اسماء الله means a deviation from the right course with respect to the names of Allah, or violation of the sanctity of His names, and it is of two kinds: firstly, giving Him an improper or inaccurate attribute; and secondly, to interpret His attributes in a manner which does not befit Him. Rz mentions three kinds: (1) giving the holy names of Allah to other beings; (2) giving Allah names which do not befit Him; (3) calling on Allah by names of which the meaning is unknown. Polytheism of every kind is, therefore, a violation of the sanctity of the Divine names.

965 The significance of the word kaid (translated here as scheme) is much misunderstood, like that of makr. According to LA, kaid indicates the exercising of art, ingenuity, cunning or skill in the management or ordering of affairs, with excellent consideration or deliberation, and ability to manage with subtilty according to his own free will (LL). Thus it is used in a good as well as in a bad sense. But the good signification of the word is made further clear. Thus LL has káda (infinitive noun kaid), meaning he contrived, devised or plotted a thing, whether good or bad (LA). And again káda (aorist yakídu) means he worked or laboured at or upon any thing; he laboured, took pains, exerted himself, strove or struggled to do, executed or accomplished any thing; he laboured, strove or struggled with any thing to prevail or overcome or to effect an object (S, LA-LL). The following verse of AL-Ajjaj, quoted by LL, under the word amr, throws a flood of light on the true meaning of kaid: اذ ردها بكيده فارتدت الى امار و امار مدتى which is thus translated: When He (meaning God) brings it (namely my soul) by His skilful ordering and His power and it is thus brought . . . to a set time and to the time of the end of my appointed period. Here the word kaid is, and must be rendered, 966 That is, the hour with which they are threatened as being the hour of their doom. The word sá'at or the hour is used in the Holy Qur-án to indicate both the doom of the guilty in this life and the time when a perfect manifestation of rewards and punishments will take place in the hereafter.

967 The simplicity and nobility of this statement as indicating the mission of a prophet is unsurpassed. He gives glad news of triumph to those who believe, warns the evil-doers of the evil consequences of their acts in this life as well as in the next, but he denies himself the possession of the Divine powers. The Arabs were a superstitious people, and if the Holy Prophet had so desired, as I have already pointed out, he could have claimed the possession of great supernatural powers. But truth stated in the simplest words is the essence of his message. Many anecdotes are related wherein people would ascribe to him Divine powers, but he destroyed all such vain suggestions by a plain denial. It is stated that on the day of the death of his son Abraham a total eclipse of the sun was witnessed. Some people began to whisper that the darkening of the sun was due to the death of the Prophet's son; but he was too sincere to allow men to remain under such a delusion, although it was calculated to enhance his dignity in the eyes of his followers. He ascended the pulpit and thus addressed the people: "Surely the sun and the moon are two signs of Allah; they do not get eclipsed in consequence of the death of anybody nor on account of any one's life, so when you see this then call on Allah, and magnify Him and pray to Him and give alms" (Bkh).

968 Sakn originally signifies being still, motionless, or quiet, but سكن اليه means he trusted to or relied upon it so as to be easy or quiet in mind (S, Q-LL), or he inclined to it, or he became familiar with it (Msb-LL). Kf and Bd also concur in this meaning.

969 The story that this verse refers to Adam and Eve and their naming their son as Abdul Ḥáriṡ, ḥáriṡ being a name of the devil, has been rejected by all reliable commentators (Rz). The strangest thing of all is that ḥáriṡ is a name which is said to be most true, according to a saying of the Holy Prophet in Abú Dáúd (Mishkat, Ch. Asámi), and therefore it cannot be a name of the devil. The words of the verse are too general to be transported into the story of Adam and Eve. It describes the condition of man in general and refers to the evidence of his nature, for when in distress he always turns to Allah, but when in ease he goes after other gods or the low desires of his own soul. The verse clearly blames the idolatrous Arabs for associating others with Allah, as is shown by the use of the plural number in v. 190 and the verses that follow.

970 Compare this with 2:6 and the conclusion is evident that both verses speak of the hard-hearted ones who are benefited neither by warning nor by admonition.

971 'Ibád is the plural of 'abd, which means a servant or a slave, and applies to the human being as being a bondman to his Creator. But as servants is not a designation properly applicable to idols, I render it as being in a state of subjugation.

972 There is a clear prophecy here that not only will the power of the opponents be frustrated in the coming struggles when they shall find no help from their gods, but those very gods, i.e. the idols, shall not be able to save themselves and will be annihilated.

973 The primary significance of nazaghahú is he censured him and charged him with a vice and spoke evil of him (TA). It also signifies the sowing of dissensions, and it is used in this sense in 12:100. According to Rgh the word signifies entering upon an affair with the object of corrupting it. It is also said to mean disquieting, disturbing or agitating (Rz). I prefer the first signification, taking nazgh as equivalent to false imputation, the devil in this case, as frequently in the Holy Qur-án, standing for the devilish enemies who spread all kinds of false reports concerning the Holy Prophet, against which he is told to seek refuge in Allah.

201 Surely those who guard (against evil), when a visitation[974] from the devil afflicts them they become mindful, then lo! they see.[975]

202 And their brethren[976] increase them in error, then they cease not.

203 And when you bring them not a sign, they say: Wherefore do you not demand it? Say: I only follow what is revealed to me from my Lord; these are clear proofs from your Lord and a guidance and a mercy for a people who believe.

Ar. thou bringest.
Ar. dost thou.
Or, forge.

204 And when the Qu-rán is recited, then listen to it and remain silent, that mercy may be shown to you.

205 And remember your Lord within yourself humbly and fearing and in a voice not loud in the morning and the evening, and be not of the heedless ones.[977]

Ar. thy.
Ar. thyself.

206 Surely those who are with your Lord are not too proud to serve Him, and they declare His glory and throw themselves down in humility before Him.[978]

This significance is quite in consonance with what is said in the previous verse, where the Prophet is enjoined to take to forgiveness and turn aside from the ignorant. Or, if agitation is taken to be the meaning, it may mean the agitation which upsets the mind when a man is in anger (Rz).

It should be added here that a saying of the Holy Prophet clearly speaks of the devil, who insinuates evil into the mind, as having submitted himself (Ar. aslama) in his case (Rz). Hence to interpret nazgh here as meaning the suggestion or the stirring of the devil is incorrect.

974 Táif means a visitation (TA-LL), originally going round. The visitation of the devil means the happening of any grievous incident or the coming of an affliction from the hands of the devil, or the wicked man acting in opposition to the righteous. Or the devil's visitation may signify anger which blinds a man, for táif signifies unsoundness of mind, anger or insinuation (Rz).

975 Being endowed with insight, they see their way out of the affliction, or the meaning is that anger does not blind them.

976 That is, the brethren of the devils, or the devil's human associates.

977 It is an error to suppose that the mention of the words morning and evening shows that the five times of prayer were not yet fixed. The times of prayer had long been settled. The direction is here given in general terms to continue to glorify the Lord at all times.

978 The recital of this verse is followed by an actual prostration, so that the physical state of the body may be in perfect agreement with the spiritual condition of the mind.

CHAPTER VIII

THE ACCESSIONS

(Al-Anfál)

REVEALED AT MEDINA

(10 sections and 75 verses)

Abstract:

Sec. 1, 2. The battle of Badr.
Sec. 3. The way to success.
Sec. 4. Muslims shall be made guardians of the sacred Mosque.
Sec. 5. The battle of Badr as a sign of the Prophet's truth.
Sec. 6. Success did not depend on numbers.
Sec. 7. Enemy's strength weakened.
Sec. 8. Peace to be secured by strength.
Sec. 9. Muslims should be prepared to meet overwhelming numbers.
Sec. 10. Relations between Muslims and non-Muslims.

Title and subject-matter.

As this chapter chiefly confines itself to the first battle of the Muslims, the question of what is acquired from the enemy in war is settled here, and hence this chapter goes under the name of Al-Anfál, which is improperly translated as meaning Spoils, but which really signifies accessions or additions; therefore I have adopted a different title from that which is in general use in English translations.

The chapter opens with certain statements necessary to a preparation for the battle, while the second section deals with the battle itself—i.e. the battle of Badr. The third section points out the way to success, the essence of which is obedience and faithfulness to the Holy Prophet, which the companions unwaveringly exhibited in this battle, under the most trying circumstances. The fourth section refers to the successful issue of the war. After pointing out the plans of the opponents against the Prophet, it states that the Muslims shall be made the guardians of the Sacred Mosque at Mecca, i.e. the Ka'ba, and that unbelievers shall no more have any access to it. The fifth refers to the great value of the success in the battle of Badr as a sign of the Prophet's truth; for, although the Muslims were only a third of the number of their opponents, they actually marched forth to victory without being armed, and the efficiency of their small force, which consisted mostly of old men and raw and inexperienced youths, was nothing as compared with the strong and sturdy Meccan warriors. The sixth indicates that success did not depend on numbers and weapons; while the seventh proceeds to show that the battle had completely undermined the enemy's strength, referring in conclusion to the treaties of peace which the Arab tribes now sought to establish with the Muslims, but which later on they frequently violated. The eighth section directs the Muslims to be ready to deal a blow and to be well equipped, because they could only hope to secure peace by strength and readiness. The ninth informs them that they will have to fight against even ten times their number, and thus really gives them to understand that they must be prepared to meet overwhelming numbers. The last section explains how far those Muslims Connection and date of revelation.

The battle of Badr, which forms the chief topic of this chapter, is frequently referred to as the furqán or the Distinction in the Holy Qur-án, and has already been referred to as such in the third chapter. In the historical order of events this chapter should have taken its place after the second chapter; but owing to its peculiar nature as affording proof of the truth of the Prophet's mission, it finds its proper place after a full discussion of prophethood in the last chapter, and thus affords an illustration in the Prophet's own life of that discomfiture which overtakes the opponents of prophets which is illustrated by reference to the histories of earlier prophets in the last chapter. It will thus be seen that in any rational arrangement of the Holy Qur-án there is no other place for this chapter, the major portion of which was undoubtedly revealed either immediately before or immediately after the battle of Badr, i.e. in the second year of Hejira; but the concluding verses of the seventh section and the eighth section, containing as they do clear references to the repeated violation of agreements by the unbelievers, must have been revealed during the period preceding the conquest of Mecca, or possibly in that immediately following, as these violations ultimately led to the declaration of immunity which finds expression in the chapter that follows. Verses 30–35, which are supposed by some to have been revealed at Mecca, are really references to past history, to which attention is called to encourage the Muslims under the new difficulties; moreover, there is no evidence that they were not revealed at Medina.

979 Anfál is the plural of nafl, which means an addition or accession to what is due (AH). According to Zuhri, nafl and náfilah indicate what accedes to or exceeds the original (Rz). TA gives the same significance. Hence it means a voluntary gift by way of alms or as a good work or a gift, or a deed beyond what is incumbent or obligatory (LL). There is much difference of opinion among the commentators as to what is meant by accessions (anfál) here. The most generally received opinion is that it means property acquired during the war, being in this sense synonymous with ghanimat (I'Ab, Mjd, 'Ik, Qt, Dk-AH). Some say that nafl is what is given to the warrior in addition to his share (LL), but even better than that is another explanation also traced to I'Ab, who says that by anfál is meant any thing that becomes separated from the polytheists (i.e. those who fought against the Muslims), falling into the hands of the Muslims without fighting, such as an animal, or a slave, or any property (Rz). This differs from fai, because, though fai is obtained without war, the condition there is that

2 Those only are believers whose hearts become full of fear when Allah is mentioned, and when His communications are recited to them they increase them in faith, and in their Lord do they trust,

إِنَّمَا الْمُؤْمِنُونَ الَّذِينَ إِذَا ذُكِرَ اللّٰهُ
وَجِلَتْ قُلُوبُهُمْ وَإِذَا تُلِيَتْ عَلَيْهِمْ

اُولٰٓئِكَ هُمُ الْمُؤْمِنُوْنَ حَقًّا لَهُمْ دَرَجٰتٌ
عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ وَمَغْفِرَةٌ وَّرِزْقٌ كَرِيْمٌ ۚ

Ar. thy.
Ar. thee.
Ar. thy.

5 Even as your Lord caused you to go forth from your house with the truth, though a party of the believers were surely averse;[980]

كَمَآ اَخْرَجَكَ رَبُّكَ مِنْ بَيْتِكَ بِالْحَقِّ
وَاِنَّ فَرِيْقًا مِّنَ الْمُؤْمِنِيْنَ لَكٰرِهُوْنَ ۚ

it must have been obtained after there has been preparation for fighting and the enemy has laid down his arms.

Now, the question is as to what is meant by accessions being for Allah and for the Apostle. According to Bḍ, the meaning is that the Apostle shall distribute them as Allah commands him. If therefore anfál is taken as synonymous with ghanímat, the command of Allah regarding its distribution is contained in v. 41. And if anfál is taken as meaning the additional share of a warrior, or property acquired in war without any fighting or even any preparation for fighting, the distribution of it would be effected by the Prophet as Allah directs him under the particular circumstances. And even if the words be taken to mean that such property was the property of Allah and His Apostle, the meaning would be that it was to be considered as public property, which could be used in the advancement of the public cause. Such property did not become the personal property of the Holy Prophet.

980 The particle kamá, meaning as, at the beginning of the verse has been explained variously by the commentators, one explanation being that it has reference to what is said in the opening words of the previous verse (Rz). But a reference to the concluding words of that verse makes the explanation simpler still. Exalted grades and honourable provision are promised there to believers, and here we are told that it was to bring about a fulfilment of that promise that the Prophet was made to go forth to battle.

The circumstances of the battle of Badr have been misunderstood, even by some Muslims. Christian opinion on the point is summed up in Palmer's note: "The occasion alluded to was one when Muhammad had made preparations for attacking an unarmed caravan on its way from Syria to Mecca, when Abú Sufian, who was in charge of it, sent to Mecca and obtained an escort of nearly a thousand men; many of Muhammad's followers wished to attack the caravan only, but the Prophet and his immediate followers were for throwing themselves on the escort."

While the several incidents mentioned here are separately true, there is a misconception as to their relation to each other. It is true that a caravan was returning from Syria, and an army had marched forth from Mecca; it is also true that some of the Muslims wished that they should encounter the caravan and not face the Meccan force. Had the Holy Prophet desired to plunder the caravan, he would have done it long before Abu Sufian could obtain succour from Mecca. Medina was situated at a distance of thirteen days' journey from Mecca, so that if the Holy Prophet had actually an idea of plundering the caravan when it approached Medina, succour could not have reached Abu Sufian in less than a month, even if he had been apprised of the Holy Prophet's intentions and had sent for aid from Mecca. And why should the Prophet have waited all this while and not plundered the caravan before the help reached Abu Sufian?

Badr, where the encounter took place, lies at a distance of three days' journey from Medina. Here, marching towards each other, the two armies met. This shows that the Meccan army had long been on its way to Medina, while the Muslims were as yet quite unprepared. The enemy had marched forth for ten days and the Muslims only for three days when the two forces encountered each other, which shows clearly that the Muslims had turned out to take the defensive against an invading force. The Prophet had never any design of plundering the caravan, for if he had any such design he could have carried it out long before the Meccan force had approached Medina, and his hands would thus have been strengthened to meet a powerful enemy. It is quite clear that the Holy Prophet only marched forth when the enemy had already travelled over three-fourths of the way to Medina, and the caravan had left Medina far behind. It is also known that a party of the believers were averse to fighting. They could not have been averse if they had had to encounter only an unarmed caravan. What is said in the next verse makes it clearer still, they went forth as if they were being driven to death, because they knew that they were going to meet an enemy not only treble in numbers, but also much more powerful and efficient.

981 The two parties referred to were the unarmed caravan of the Quraish going to Mecca and the armed force of the Quraish that had started from Mecca. Naturally, some of the Muslims desired that their encounter should take place with the unarmed Quraish caravan, which was now a long way from Medina, and not with the powerful army which was advancing against Medina.

982 By His words is meant here the fulfilment of His words, because the Prophet had declared at Mecca, long before the fight actually took place, that an encounter would take place between the Muslims and the Quraish, in which the former would be victorious. These prophecies had hitherto been laughed at by the Meccans, because they could never imagine that their power could be broken by such an insignificant community. Of the many prophecies which will be noted in their proper place, I may refer here to one which the Holy Prophet himself repeated aloud in the field. I'Ab says that the Holy Prophet prayed on the day of Badr, saying: "O Allah! I beseech Thee to fulfill Thy promise and Thy compact! O Allah! If Thou pleasest (to destroy this body) Thou shalt not be worshipped (on earth)!" On this Abu Bakr held his hand and said: "This is sufficient." Then the Holy Prophet came forth and he cried: "Soon shall the hosts be routed and they shall turn their backs" (Bkh). Now these concluding words occur in 54:45, which is one of the earliest Meccan revelations, and the incident shows that the importance of the battle of Badr lay in the many prophecies which by their fulfilment bore witness to the truth of the Holy Prophet.

A prophecy regarding this occurs also in Isaiah. Under the heading, The burden upon Arabia, in Isa. 21:13, we read: "The inhabitants of the land of Tema brought water to him that was thirsty; they prevented with their bread him that fled. For they fled from the swords, from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow and from the grievousness of war. For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail: and the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished" (Isa. 21:14–17). The one that fled, and whose Flight has become the most notable event in history, being the basis of an era, is no other than the Holy Prophet, and the battle of Badr, fought after the first year of Hejira, no doubt dealt a blow to the power of the Quraish and diminished the number of their archers. In the Holy Qur-án we have, instead of this, cutting off the root of the unbelievers; for here were slain the seven great leaders of the Quraish.

983 Compare 3:123, where the coming down of angels in the battle of Uhud is mentioned. Also see 495, which explains the object of the coming of the angels. It is nowhere stated in the Holy Qur-án that the angels actually fought, but here, as in 3:125, we are plainly told that the angels were sent down to bear good news of victory and to ease the hearts of the Muslims. Here, however, we are further told (v. 11) that, as a result of the coming of the angels, calm fell upon the Muslims, their hearts being strengthened and their footsteps being steadied, and (v. 12) that while the believers were thus made firm, terror was cast into the hearts of the unbelievers. Hence it is that the number of angels corresponds with the strength of the enemy force in each case, their number being one thousand in Badr, where the enemy had a like force. For the other two occasions see 495.

984 Compare 25:25, which is a prophecy about the events of this remarkable battle: "On the day when the heaven shall burst asunder with the clouds and the angels shall be sent down a sending." The rainfall brought many advantages to the Muslims, for which see next foot-note.

985 Before the rain fell the Muslim position was very weak. The enemy had the command of the water and the Muslims were in a low sandy place. Therefore there were some who had misgivings, which, as is said here, were due to the devil's uncleanness. The enemy having taken possession of the drinking-water, the Muslims feared being troubled by thirst, which is called the devil of the desert—Q, شيطان الفلا العطش The rain strengthened the position of the Muslims and consequently comforted their hearts. This was a purification, for after the rainfall they all became certain of the Divine help and so of their triumph over the enemy.

986 The last sentence is apparently addressed to the fighting believers. فوق الاعناق means above the necks, and striking above the necks is either the same as striking the necks, or it signifies the striking of the heads, because what is above the neck is the head. And the striking of the finger-tips indicates the striking of the hands which held weapons to kill the Muslims (Rz). The two phrases respectively signify the killing of the enemy and disabling him so as to render him unfit for taking further part in fighting.

987 That is, taste this torment in this life as an indication of the chastisement of fire in the next life.

988 Zaḥafa originally means he walked or marched little by little, and applies to the crawling along of a child when unable to walk. Then zaḥf came to mean an army or military force marching little by little towards the enemy, or heavily by reason of their multitude and force (TA-LL). It came to be applied generally to war, as in a report فر من الزحف quoted by TA, which means he fled from war (LL).

Ar. thou didst.
Ar. thou didst smite.

17 So you did not slay them, but it was Allah who slew them, and you did not smite when you smote (the enemy), but it was Allah who smote,[989] and that He might confer upon the believers a good gift from Himself; surely Allah is Hearing, Knowing.[990]

18 This,[991] and that Allah is the weakener of the struggle of the unbelievers.

19 If you demanded a judgment, the judgment has then indeed come to you;[992] and if you desist, it will be better for you; and if you turn back (to fight), We (too) shall turn back, and your forces shall avail you nothing, though they may be many, and (know) that Allah is with the believers.

989 Ram-y carries a number of significances, throwing, flinging, casting, assailing, smiting, shooting, going forth, etc. (LL). It is used in connection with fighting, and therefore I adopt smiting as its equivalent, which, like its original, makes the meaning clear without seeking an understood object. The first part of the verse refers to the Muslims generally—You did not slay them, but it was Allah who slew, the address being in the plural; and the second part being in the singular is understood as referring to the Holy Prophet. Otherwise there is no difference between the two passages. The Muslims slew the enemy, but it is affirmed that really they did not slay, but it was Allah who slew them; the meaning apparently being that Allah's hand was working in the battle, which is also clear from the fact that three hundred, mostly raw, young men, equipped with neither horses nor arms, prevailed against a thousand of the most renowned warriors. The same meaning must be attached to the other passage relating to the smiting of the enemy. Whether the Prophet actually cast a handful of pebbles at the enemy, which discomfited the latter, is a different question. It is sufficient to learn that a powerful enemy was discomfited by about a third of its number, while from the point of view of efficiency and equipment even ten men from among the Muslims were not equal to one of the enemy. It was Allah's hand that slew them, and it was His hand that smote them and ultimately put them to rout. That the Prophet actually cast a handful of dust at the enemy is in no way inconsistent with this explanation.

990 Iblá, though ordinarily meaning trying, and proving, like balá and ibtalá (two other verbs from the same root), means here, by the unanimous opinion of all commentators, the conferring of a favour (Rz). The lexicons also give it the same significance. Thus LL says: ابلاه ابلاء حسنا (TA), or بلاء حسنا (S), means God did to him a good deed (TA). And hence it is said in the Qur-án (8:17) وليبلي المؤمنين منه بلاء حسنا (TA), i.e. and that He might confer upon the believers a great benefit, or favour or blessing (Bd), or a good gift from Him. The good gift or the benefit spoken of here is a victory which strengthened the foundations of Islam and dealt a death-blow to the evil designs of those who were determined to exterminate it, as is plainly said in the next verse.

991 This here stands for a sentence, viz. this was the Divine purpose in bringing about this encounter.

992 It is related that when the Quraish left Mecca to attack the Muslims, they held to the curtains of the Ka'ba and prayed thus: "O Allah! assist the best of the two forces and the most rightly directed of the two parties and the most honoured of the two groups and the most excellent of the two religions." Others say that Abu Jahl prayed in the field of battle, saying: "O Allah! whoever of us is most actuated to cut the ties of relationship and most wicked, destroy him to-morrow morning" (Rz). Palmer's remark in this connection, that the Quraish prayed in the above-given words "when they were threatened with an attack from Muhammad," is opposed to historical facts. Indeed, it is utterly absurd to speak of Muhammad threatening the Quraish, when the Muslims did not constitute even a hundredth part of the whole population of Arabia, which was now up against them, and the Quraish were doing everything to deal a death-blow to the cause of Islam.

993 Dábbah means literally any thing that walks (or creeps or crawls) upon the earth (S-LL); hence any animal, or a beast, or any living thing. Note that the deaf and the dumb signify those who are spiritually deaf and dumb—those who do not understand.

994 Faith or submission to Allah is life and unbelief is death (Sudi-Rz). By the expression that which gives you life some understand the Qur-án is meant, others take it to mean jihad, or exertion in the cause of truth (Rz). All these explanations really signify one and the same thing.

995 By heart is meant the desires of the heart. The Divine intervention is the cutting off of those desires (Rz). The faithful are enjoined to be quick in responding to the call of the Prophet, and not to indulge in worldly desires, for these may soon be cut off. Or the meaning is that they must respond to the call of the Prophet lest, having deprived themselves of one occasion of doing good, the heart should be hardened, and as a punishment for the first rejection, Allah may so turn it that it may not turn to good at all, but take pleasure in wickedness.

25 And fear an affliction which may not smite those of you in particular who are unjust;[996] and know that Allah is severe in requiting (evil).

26 And remember when you were few, deemed weak in the land, fearing lest people might carry you off by force,[997] but He sheltered you and strengthened you with His aid and gave you of the good things that you may give thanks.

996 The reference is not to one particular incident, but generally to all afflictions that are of such a widespread nature as to overtake even others, in addition to those for whom they are primarily intended.

997 The revelation of this verse undoubtedly belongs to a somewhat later period, when the Muslims were comparatively secure, as it reminds them of an earlier state when they were perfectly insecure. Further reference to this condition is contained in v. 30.

998 The reference is to the final plans of the Quraish when, the companions having emigrated to Medina, the Prophet was left alone at Mecca. Various plans were suggested at a great meeting of the Quraish chiefs in their town hall; the plan ultimately adopted was that the Prophet should be slain, a number of youths belonging to different tribes thrusting their swords into his body at one and the same time, so that one man or tribe should not have the charge laid against him or it. It was with this object that the Prophet's house was surrounded, but he got away unnoticed (Ib Hsh). The Divine plan was that the unbelievers should see the downfall of their power at the hands of the Prophet.

999 That this was an empty boast is confirmed by the fact that, although the Holy Qur-án repeatedly challenged them to produce anything like it, they could not produce even the like of its shortest chapter.

1000 The punishment was to overtake them when the Holy Prophet was no more among them, i.e. after his flight from Mecca. But even then the punishment might be averted if they asked for forgiveness.

1001 The unbelievers are here declared not to be the true guardians of the Sacred Mosque, because while that Mosque was an emblem of the pure unity of the Divine Being, its name having been clearly associated with monotheism since the time of Abraham, the unbelievers who now posed as its guardians were idolaters. So they are told that they are unfit to hold its guardianship, which would henceforth be made over to a people who guard against evil, i.e. the Muslims. The words contain a prophecy not only as to the deprivation of the unbelieving Quraish of the guardianship of the Ka'ba, but also as to the passing of the guardianship into the hands of the Muslims.

The Battle of Badr as a Sign of the Prophet's Truth

38–40. Fighting necessary to establish freedom of religion. 41. One-fifth of what is acquired to be devoted to charitable purposes. 42–44. How the encounter served as a sign.

38 Say to those who disbelieve if they desist, that which is past shall be forgiven to them; and if they return,[1003] then what happened to the ancients has already passed.[1004]

39 And fight with them until there is no more persecution and religion should be only for Allah; but if they desist, then surely Allah sees what they do.[1005]

قُلْ لِّلَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا إِنْ يَّنْتَهُوا يُغْفَرْ

اللّٰهَ بِمَا يَعْمَلُونَ بَصِيرٌ ۝

1002 The meaning is either that the good men might be separated from the wicked, and then the wicked should all be cast into hell, or that the good property might be separated from the worthless property of the unbelievers and the latter should all be wasted in opposition to the Muslims without bringing any gain to its possessors (Rz, AH).

1003 Desisting and returning both relate to fighting against the Muslims, not to unbelief, because the unbelievers could not be said to return to unbelief. They had gone away from Badr quite discomfited, and they were told that if they desisted from fighting they would be forgiven, but if they returned to fighting they would meet with the doom of former peoples. Notwithstanding all that the Muslims had suffered, the Prophet was still told to forgive his enemies if they only desisted from fighting against his followers. This is the one and only condition of forgiveness.

1004 The meaning is that they could read their own doom in the doom of those with whom Allah had dealt previously in similar circumstances. Bd interprets سنة الاوّلين as being equivalent to سنتنا فى الاوّلين Compare 18 : 55, which states that the unbelievers only wait "that what happened to the ancients should overtake them."

1005 That is, if they desist from fighting, the Muslims must do the same, such being the significance of Allah sees what they do; for Allah rewards men according to their deeds.

40 And if they turn back, then know that Allah is your Patron; most excellent is the Patron and most excellent the Helper.[1006]

41 And know that whatever thing you acquire in war, a fifth of it is for Allah and for the Apostle and for the near of kin and the orphans and the needy and the wayfarer, if you believe in Allah and in that which We revealed to Our servant, on the day of distinction, the day on which the two parties met; and Allah has power over all things;[1007]

1006 If they return to fight, then Allah will protect the Muslim community, helping them against their enemy, as He is their Patron and Helper. Vv. 39 and 40 explain what is said in v. 38.

1007 الغنم الفوز بالشی i.e. ghunm means acquisition of a thing (Rz, AH). The latter quotes two verses in support of this as the true meaning:—

وقد طوفت فی الافاق حتی رضیت من الغنیمة بالایاب

in both of which ghanîmat and ghunm signify achievement, the meaning of the first verse being: "And I went about on all sides until the only achievement with which I was satisfied was coming back," and that of the second: "And the eating of what is acquired is on the day of achievement his food whither he goes, and he who is deprived is deprived." LL explains ghanama as meaning he acquired a thing without difficulty, and the same authority thus explains the verse اذا هبت ریاحك فاغتنمها i.e. when thy turn of good fortune comes, avail thyself of it (in art. rîḥ). Hence the original meaning of the word ghanîmat is simply acquisition or achievement, and the word is then applied to what is acquired in war after fighting with the enemy and vanquishing him, and ghanîmat is now a technical term for such property.

The division of what is thus acquired in the war is plainly given in the verse, but there has been a discussion as to what is meant by for Allah. The most generally accepted opinion is that one-fifth of the whole property acquired is to be divided again into five parts, the Prophet, the near of kin, the orphans, the poor, and the wayfarer being equal sharers. Thus the twenty-fifth part fell to the Prophet's share, an equal share was given over to the Prophet's near of kin, all individuals belonging to the tribes of Baní-Háshim and Baní-Abdul Muṭṭalib being sharers therein, and three twenty-fifths were given to the orphans, the poor, the needy, and the wayfarers, while four-fifths were divided among those who were considered as having taken part in the fight. As to the Prophet's twenty-fifth, it appears from certain anecdotes that it was also used for the benefit of the Muslims. Thus, Rz, having raised the question of the distribution of the fifth after the Prophet's death, gives the following answer from Sháfa'í's

42 When you were on the nearer side (of the valley) and they were on the farthest side, while the caravan was in a lower place than you;[1008] and if you had mutually made an appointment, you would certainly have broken away from the appointment,[1009] but[1010]—in order that Allah might bring about a matter which was to be done,[1011] that he who would perish might perish by clear proof, and he who would live might live by clear proof;[1012] and most surely Allah is Hearing, Knowing:

point of view: "It should be divided into five parts, one portion (the same twenty-fifth as in his lifetime) being for the Apostle of Allah, to be spent as he used to spend it, for the benefit of the Muslims, as the providing of the warriors with horses and weapons." Rz also relates a saying of the Holy Prophet on the occasion of the distribution of what was gained at Khaibar: مالى الا الخمس و الخمس مردود فيكم i.e. Out of what Allah has given to you nothing is mine but a fifth, and that fifth is given back to you. These two facts, combined with the fact of the utmost simplicity of the Prophet's domestic life, which is admitted on all hands, show clearly that the Holy Prophet spent even his own share for the good of the community.

1008 The position of the three parties, i.e. the party of the Muslims and two parties of the Quraish, is here made clear. The Muslims were on the nearer side, i.e. the side nearer to Medina, the main army of the Quraish was on the farthest side, i.e. the side which was nearer to Mecca and farthest from Medina, while the caravan was in a lower place, i.e. towards the sea-coast and farther away from Medina on its way to Mecca (Rz).

1009 The اختلاف فى الميعاد here means the failure to keep the appointment on the part of the Muslims on seeing the strength of the enemy and their own weakness (Rz, AH).

1010 The commentators say there is an ellipsis here, the meaning being, but an encounter was brought about without there being an appointment.

1011 The amr or affair is said to be already done, because Allah had decided to do it. The use of the past tense when the occurrence is certain is frequent in Arabic. The matter referred to is the vanquishment of the opponents of Islam, about which prophecies had been announced at the very commencement of the career of the Holy Prophet.

1012 The affair at Badr afforded a clear proof of the truth of the Holy Prophet's mission, because the unbelievers had been repeatedly told that as a proof of the truth which the Prophet brought to them a discomfiture of their power at the hands of the Holy Prophet would be brought about in this very life, and their forces and wealth would not then be of any use to them. As an instance of these prophecies see two of the earlier chapters: "And most certainly We will make them taste of the nearer chastisement before the greater chastisement, that haply they may turn" (32:21); "Such is the chastisement, and certainly the chastisement of the hereafter is greater, if they but know" (68:33).

1013 In the previous verse it is stated that the enemy were shown to the Prophet in a dream to be few, and here we are told that they were also shown to be few to the Muslims when the two armies met. The second point has been fully explained in 395. As regards the Prophet's seeing them few in a vision, it must no doubt be interpreted as signifying their moral weakness, notwithstanding their great number.

1014 The reference is clearly to the army of the Quraish, which had marched forth in great exultation to destroy Medina.

1017 It shows how the opponents of Islam disregarded their responsibility and violated their agreements. The use of the words every time with regard to these violations shows clearly that the Muslims never hesitated in making a new agreement when one was violated, but the unbelievers did not even then respect their engagements; hence, as a last resort, the Muslims are allowed to repudiate unrespected agreements (v. 58).

1018 That is, an exemplary punishment should be inflicted on them, so that a stop might be put to further fighting and bloodshed.

1019 If the other party does not remain faithful to the agreement of peace, the Muslims may also repudiate it. The use of the word fear does not indicate that a mere apprehension, unattended with any action on the part of the other party, is sufficient for repudiation. Read it along with v. 62 and 1021, and the meaning is clear. As Rz remarks under that verse, "the fear of treachery is to be entertained when this fear is strengthened by signs showing treachery."

1020 Force (Ar. quwwat), according to Rz, means all those things which shall be a source of strength, including all kinds of implements of war and other defensive and offensive operations. The Muslims had won a victory at Badr, though they were not even well

65, 66. Muslims should not hesitate in meeting double or tenfold numbers.
67–69. Warning against committing depredations.

65 O Prophet! urge the believers to war;[1022] if there are twenty patient ones of you they shall overcome two hundred, and if there are a hundred of you they shall overcome a thousand of those who disbelieve, because they are a people who do not understand.[1022A] equipped and had made no preparation for the war. But they are told that they must in future keep themselves well prepared and avail themselves of all sources of strength, so that the enemy should by their very preparations assume a peaceful attitude, for it was evident that the weakness of the Muslims was a temptation for their opponents to attack them. Peace was to be secured by preparing for war.

1021 The deceit is in relation to what has been said in the previous verse, the meaning being that if they intend to deceive you under cloak of peace, even in such a case peace is to be accepted, and the Muslims are not to reject peace simply for fear of being deceived, for surely Allah is sufficient.

1022 It should be noted that the war to which the Muslims were to be urged was the defensive war which the Muslims had to fight to save themselves and to protect the religion of Islam. The sword had been taken up against them and they were required to defend Islam. This is made clear elsewhere: "And fight in the way of Allah with those who fight with you and do not exceed the limits" (2 : 190). See 238, where this point is fully discussed.

1022A The Muslims were very few as compared to their enemies, and there was not even one Muslim to ten unbelievers. Thus there is a clear prophecy here that notwithstanding their fewer numbers the Muslims shall be victorious.

66 For the present Allah has made light your burden, and He knows that there is weakness in you; so if there are a hundred patient ones of you they shall overcome two hundred, and if there are a thousand they shall overcome two thousand by Allah's permission; and Allah is with the patient.[1023]

67 It is not fit for a prophet that he should take captives unless he has fought and triumphed in the land; you desire the frail goods of this world, while Allah desires (for you) the hereafter; and Allah is Mighty, Wise.[1024]

1023 This verse is supposed by some to abrogate the previous verse, where it is stated that twenty patient Muslims shall overcome two hundred unbelievers. This cannot be a correct view. Firstly, because only an injunction could be said to be abrogated, and not a statement; secondly, because the two statements relate to two different states of the Muslims. The time of the battle of Badr was one when the armies of the Muslims did not deserve to be called armies. There was no Muslim army in existence. Every man available, young or old, sick or healthy, had to fight so as to save the very life of the community. This is referred to in the words: He knows that there is weakness in you. So the Muslim forces as then constituted could at most be a match for double their numbers. But a time did come when they were a match for ten times their numbers. So both the statements in the Qur-án proved true in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet. In the field of Badr the Muslims overcame thrice their numbers; in the battle of the Confederates about a thousand Muslims put to rout ten thousand of the enemy. But even if the words may be taken as an injunction to the Muslims to overcome twice and afterwards ten times their numbers, there is no question of abrogation. There are two commandments, one in accordance with the circumstances of the Muslim society as it was then, another in accordance with a future state when great warriors like Khálid were to become Muslims. The great feats of Khálid and other Muslim warriors in the wars with Persia and the Roman Empire amply justified the statement. I may also add here that the two verses only require Muslims to overcome the superiority of the numbers of their foes by efficiency; exact numbers are not meant. For instance, in Badr, one Muslim soldier proved a match for more than three soldiers of the enemy, though he was required to overcome only two.

1024 On the authority of certain reports the commentators are of opinion that this verse and the next refer to releasing the prisoners of war taken at Badr after taking ransom from them, which act, it is said, is here disapproved. But various considerations show that these verses refer to some other incidents. Firstly, the condition laid down here for taking prisoners is that the Prophet should have fought against the enemy, and that had actually been done at Badr. In this connection it must be stated that Is-khán does not signify a general slaughter of the enemy; it simply means struggling hard against the enemy, or the making of a vehement fight, or overcoming the enemy after fighting has actually taken place. LL says: "As-khana-hú in its primary sense means he or it rendered it thick," and hence he or it (i.e. a man, a wound, or a disease) rendered him heavy or weakened him. Rz quotes Wáhidí, who says: "Is-khán, in anything, signifies its getting strong and severe; you say اثخنه المرض, when the grip of the disease has grown severe on a man, and therefore

68 Were it not for an ordinance from Allah that had already gone forth,[1025] surely there would have befallen you a great chastisement for what you had taken to.[1026]

69 Eat then of the lawful and good (things) which you have acquired in war, and be careful of (your duty to) Allah; surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

يثخن في الارض means he becomes strong and strengthened and overcomes"; and then adds that many commentators have taken the word to mean the making of a severe slaughter, on the ground that kingdom and rule become strong and strengthened with slaughter (Rz). Therefore, to attach the meaning of general or severe slaughter to the word is a mere conjecture. The use of this word on the only other occasion in the Qur-án also leads to the same conclusion; see 47:4, "Until when you have overcome them."

Secondly, the taking of prisoners and their release on this very occasion is justified in clear words only two verses farther on, "O Prophet! say to those of the captives who are in your hands: If Allah knows anything good in your hearts He will give to you better than that which has been taken away from you" (v. 70). This shows that these verses were revealed when the prisoners were still in the hands of the Muslims, and that which has been taken is clearly the ransom, which must have taken many days to reach Medina. If the verse had conveyed a Divine commandment to slay the prisoners and not to release them, that step could still have been taken. But the very fact that no such step was taken shows clearly that the verse conveyed no such Divine commandment.

The legality of the Holy Prophet's procedure on this occasion is clearly borne out by an earlier revelation: "So when you meet in battle those who disbelieve, then smite the necks until you have overcome them, then make them prisoners, and afterwards either set them free as a favour or let them ransom themselves" (47:4). And as the Holy Prophet did not slay those who were taken prisoners after fighting in a single war, it is clear that his action at Badr was never disapproved by Divine revelation.

The question is, what is then hinted at in this verse and in the one that follows? To me it seems quite clear that the reference is to the desire (mark the word desire used in the verse) —not to an action already completed—of a party of the Muslims referred to in v. 7, and you loved that the one not armed should be yours. They desired to attack and capture the unarmed caravan, but depredations like those, though committed by unbelievers upon the Muslims, were not fit for a prophet. He must fight a hard fight in his defence first, and then if he overcomes the enemy he may take prisoners. Thus this injunction also declares slavery to be illegal, and allows only the retaining of those who are taken prisoners in war. The frail goods of this life appropriately refer to the caravan and its merchandise, while the addition of the concluding words in v. 69, eat then of the lawful and good things which you have acquired in war, shows that the ransom received on account of the prisoners is among the lawful and good things.

1025 That ordinance from Allah is referred to in several places in this chapter; it was to bring about an encounter with the main army of the Quraish at Badr: "And when Allah promised you one of the two parties that it shall be yours . . . and Allah desired to manifest the truth of what was true" (v. 7); and again: "In order that Allah might bring about a matter which was to be done" (v. 42).

1026 You say اخذ في كذا meaning he took to a thing, or set about or commenced doing it (LA-LL).

1027 The guardianship alluded to in this verse has been a matter of much discussion among the commentators. The meaning seems to be clear. Those who believed, and having been persecuted fled from their homes, formed a community at Medina along with those who gave shelter and helped them, i.e. the Anṣár of Medina. But there were those who chose to remain in their homes. The Muslim community at Medina could not undertake to guard the interests of such persons, and this is what is meant by saying not yours is their guardianship. But if they sought help in the matter of religion, it was incumbent on the Muslim community to give them help, unless there existed a treaty of alliance with the people against whom such help was sought. This injunction prevents Muslims rebelling against their rulers, to whatever religion such rulers belong, because there exists an implied agreement of obedience with the rulers of a country.

74 And (as for) those who believed and fled and struggled hard in Allah's way, and those who gave shelter and helped, these are the believers truly; they shall have forgiveness and honourable provision.

75 And (as for) those who believed afterwards and fled and struggled hard along with you, they are of you; and the possessors of relationships are nearer to each other in the ordinance of Allah; surely Allah knows all things.[1029]

1028 If you do not help your brethren in the matter of religion, the unbelievers will become more daring in their persecutions, in causing mischief and disorder in the land.

1029 There is no such difficulty about the significance of this verse as some commentators have supposed. When even strangers who have accepted Islam and fled from their homes become "of you," those who have in addition ties of relationship, possess every title to have their interests guarded by the Muslim community.

CHAPTER IX

THE IMMUNITY

(Al-Bará'at)

REVEALED AT MEDINA

(16 sections and 129 verses)

Abstract:

Sec. 1, 2. Declaration of immunity and its reasons.
Sec. 3. Idolaters' pretensions to service of the Sacred House.
Sec. 4. The cause of Islam shall be made triumphant.
Sec. 5. Jews and Christians fall off from the truth.
Sec. 6. The Tabúk expedition.
Sec. 7–13. The Hypocrites.
Sec. 14, 15. The faithful and what they should do.
Sec. 16. The object effected by revelation.

The Title.

THE title of this chapter is taken from the opening statement, which contains a declaration of immunity from obligations with such of the idolatrous tribes as had repeatedly broken their engagements. This declaration is one of the most important events in the history of Islam, for hitherto the Muslims had constantly suffered from the hostility of the unscrupulous idolatrous tribes who had no regard for their treaties, dealing a blow at the Muslims whenever they had an opportunity of doing so. As the Muslims had, in the first instance, to suffer persecutions for a long time before they were allowed to take up the sword in their defence, so a second time they remained true to their agreements, notwithstanding the enemy's constant repudiation of their treaties, and immunity was given to them from their obligations only after the repeated violation of treaties by their foes had produced quite an impossible condition of things. The chapter is known under various other names, Repentance being the best known.

Connection with the preceding chapter.

This is not really a new chapter, and this accounts for Bismillah being omitted from the opening. It is admittedly a part of the last chapter, while a distinct name has been assigned to it by reason of the importance of the declaration of immunity from which it takes its name. A reference to the seventh and the eighth sections of the last chapter will show that the idolaters repeatedly broke the agreements which bound them to remain on peaceful terms with the Muslims. This frequent violation ultimately led to the declaration of immunity, because it was impossible that the Muslims should be bound for ever by the terms of those agreements, while their enemies could repudiate them with impunity. Such repudiations had frequently taken place, especially when the unbelievers considered the Muslim power at Medina to have been temporarily weakened as on the occasion of the great expedition to Tabúk.

Subject-matter and its arrangement.

The internal arrangement of the verses is too clear to need any lengthy comment. A declaration of immunity necessitated by the repeated treaty violations of the idolaters is made in the first section, with two clear exceptions, however; one in the case of those tribes who had remained true to their obligations, and a second in the case of idolaters who sought protection from the Muslims. These latter were to be conducted safely to their tribes, and were not to be molested in any way. These two exceptions are a sufficient condemnation of the hypothetical picture drawn of the Holy Prophet by Christian missionaries, in which he is accused of inviting people to Islam with the Qur-án in the one hand and the sword in the other. The second section gives the chief reason for freeing the Muslims from the liabilities of certain agreements, again stating expressly that the Muslims were to stand firm by their agreements so long as the other party adhered to their terms. In the third section the idolaters are told that their pretensions relating to the entertainment of the pilgrims and the repairing or building of the Sacred House could not now save them from the consequences of their own deeds, while the conclusion of that section calls attention to the sacrifices which the Muslims would now be required to make in the cause of truth. The next section naturally asserts the ultimate triumph of Islam, not only against the idolatrous tribes of Arabia, but also against the powerful Christian nation which had now stirred itself to humiliate the growing Muslim power. A reference to the Christians renders it necessary to deal in the next section with the falling off of both the Jews and the Christians from the pure monotheism of their great prophets, the section being closed with a reference to the evil influence which the Jews had exercised on the Arabs by making them violate the sanctity of the recognized sacred months. Thenceforward to the end, with the exception of the last three sections, are contained references to the Tabúk expedition, and particularly to those who had been intentionally guilty of a default in joining this expedition—thus the hypocrites are condemned, and spiritual and temporal connections with them are cut off. The hypocrites had made their presence clearly felt among the Muslims from the time of the battle of Uhud, in the third year of the Hejira, and they had been given a chance up to the close of the ninth year to mend their ways or to openly side with this or that party, and the final word with regard to them was now urgently needed.

The three concluding sections are a natural sequel to the subject of hypocrisy. What are the marks of the truly faithful, and what is expected of them, is stated respectively in the fourteenth and the fifteenth sections. Wars were not the aim and object of Islam, but had really been forced on it, and the faithful are told, at the end of a chapter which almost entirely deals with treaty obligations, ultimatums and wars, that they must make arrangements for the propagation of Islam, and that every Muslim community must contribute men for the noble object of spreading the truth, which was the real object of Islam. The last section shows what effect the revelation of the Qur-án had upon the Muslims and the great anxiety of the Prophet for their welfare.

Date of Revelation.

Almost a consensus of opinion exists on the point that the whole of this chapter was revealed at Medina, toward the close of the Holy Prophet's life. A careful consideration of the various verses shows that the whole of this chapter was revealed in the ninth year of the Hejira, the opening verses belonging to the close, and the major portion to about the middle of that year. The opening verses were revealed after the pilgrims had started for Mecca in the pilgrimage season of the ninth year, and as they contained an announcement which was to be made known to the pilgrims assembled at Mecca from the various quarters of Arabia, 'Ali was dispatched with this message after Abu Bakr, who headed the pilgrims. It would serve no useful purpose to endeavour to settle the exact dates of the various verses, as the attempt is often misleading; all that can be said about the main portion of the chapter is that vv. 29 to the end were revealed immediately before, during, or after the expedition to Tabúk, which occurred in the Rajab of the ninth year of the Hejira. It is asserted that the two concluding verses were revealed at Mecca, but the probability is that this happened in the last pilgrimage to Mecca. At any rate, there is insufficient evidence to warrant these two verses being disconnected from the rest of the chapter.

SECTION 1

Declaration of Immunity

1–4. Muslims freed from liability towards enemy idolaters, except those true to their engagements. 5. Those accepting Islam to be pardoned. 6. Idolaters to be given shelter.

1 (This is a declaration of) immunity by Allah and His Apostle towards those of the idolaters with whom you made an agreement.[1030]

2 So go about in the land for four months and know that you cannot weaken Allah and that Allah will bring disgrace to the unbelievers.

3 And an announcement from Allah and His Apostle to the people on the day of the greater pilgrimage[1031] that Allah and His Apostle are free from liability to the idolaters; therefore if you repent, it will be better for you, and if you turn back, then know that you will not weaken Allah; and announce painful chastisement to those who disbelieve—

4 Except those of the idolaters with whom you made an agreement, then they have not failed you in anything and have not backed up any one against you, so fulfil their agreement to the end of their term: surely

1030 This verse is to be read along with that which follows. The fourth verse makes it clear that the people meant are those with whom the Muslims made an agreement but they broke it, because those who did not fail in their agreements are clearly excepted in the fourth verse. It is a fact that the idolatrous tribes of Arabia broke their agreements with the Muslims again and again (8 : 56), yet the Muslims were enjoined to accept peace if the unbelievers consented to it, even after repeated violation (8 : 61). But this state of things could not long continue, for it was soon found that it was impossible to trust such neighbours. This repudiation of agreements especially took place when the Muslims were absent on the Tabúk expedition (Rz, AH). The first thirteen verses of this chapter were publicly proclaimed by 'Ali, on the occasion of the pilgrimage in the ninth year of Hejira, and the following announcements made as the result: (1) that no idolater shall approach the Sacred House after this year; (2) that no one shall go naked round the Ka'ba; and (3) that all agreements shall be fulfilled. The first and the last of these announcements are plainly contained in these verses. The attitude of the tribes to whom this ultimatum was given through 'Ali is well indicated in their reply: "O 'Ali! deliver this message to your cousin (i.e. the Prophet), that we have thrown the agreements behind our backs, and there is no agreement between him and us except smiting with spears and striking with swords" (Rz).

1031 By the day of the greater pilgrimage is meant either the ninth or the tenth of Zulhaj, being the day of the great assemblage of the pilgrimage in the plains of 'Arafát and Mina (Rz).

Allah loves those who are careful (of their duty).[1032]
5 So when the sacred months have passed away, then slay the idolaters[1033] wherever you find them, and take them captives and besiege them and lie in wait for them in every ambush, then if they repent and keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate, leave their way free to them; surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.[1034]
6 And if one of the idolaters seek protection from you, grant him protection till he hears the word of Allah, then make

Ar. thee.

1032 Only two tribes, the Banu Ḍamra and the Banu Kanana, are related to have adhered to their treaties (AH, Rz). One wonders why honest criticism of Islam is so rare among Christian authors. The exception given here makes it as clear as anything could be that the Muslims were not fighting with the idolaters on account of their religion, but on account of their having been untrue to their engagements. Yet the comment of a Christian critic on these verses is that "they are to be converted to Islam or destroyed by the sword" (Wh). If the Muslims had been fighting with the idolaters on account of their religion, why should there be an exception in favour of those idolaters who had been true to their engagements? The cause of the renewed fighting was political, i.e. the violation of treaties, and hence only those tribes were fought against who had broken their engagements. If idolatry had been the cause, all idolaters would have been fought against.

1033 The clear exception of the last verse shows that by the idolaters here are meant, not all idolaters or polytheists wherever they may be found in the world, nor even all idolaters of Arabia, but only those idolatrous tribes of Arabia assembled at the pilgrimage who had first made agreements with the Muslims and then violated them.

1034 The exception here has given rise to much misconception, and it has been made the basis of an attack upon Islam, it being supposed that it offers to the unbelievers the alternative of the sword or the Qur-án. Nothing is farther from the truth. The injunction contained in the first part of the verse establishes the fact that the whole verse relates to certain idolatrous Arab tribes who had broken their engagements with the Muslims and who had now been apprised of a similar repudiation by the Muslims. The essential fact to be borne in mind is that all the polytheists of the world, even all the idolaters of Arabia, are not spoken of in the verse. The persons spoken of are those who had repeatedly violated their agreements and inflicted severe losses upon the Muslims. They, therefore, deserved to be killed or besieged or taken prisoners. This punishment was a direct consequence of their previous actions. They had so often broken their word that they could no more be trusted and must now receive their punishment. Yet, if they joined the brotherhood of Islam, there was an absolute change in their condition, and hence the punishment which they otherwise deserved could be remitted. It was a case of forgiving a criminal who had entirely repented and regenerated, hence it is that the verse concludes with the words: "Allah is Forgiving, Merciful." It should also be noted that a mere confession of the faith is not required, because such a confession may be made to deceive, as were their treaties. What is required is an absolute change, so that the old criminal no longer remains, but an entirely changed man. Therefore, along with the confession of the faith, it is required that they should keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate. The subject is further clarified in the next verse and the following section.

him attain his place of safety; this is because they are a people who do not know.[1035]

أبلغه مأمنه ذلك بأنهم قوم لا يعلمون ۝

SECTION 2

Reasons for the Immunity

7–11. Idolaters break treaties. 12–16. Frequent violation necessitated punishment.

7 How can there be an agreement for the idolaters with Allah and with His Apostle, except those with whom you made an agreement at the sacred Mosque? so as long as they are true to you, be true to them; surely Allah loves those who are careful (of their duty).[1036]

كيف يكون للمشركين عهد عند الله وعند رسوله إلا الذين عاهدتم عند المسجد الحرام فما استقاموا لكم فاستقيموا لهم إن الله يحب المتقين ۝

8 How (can it be)! while if they prevail against you, they would not pay regard in your case to ties of relationship, nor those of covenant; they please you with their mouths while their hearts do not consent; and most of them are transgressors.

كيف وإن يظهروا عليكم لا يرقبوا فيكم إلا ولا ذمة يرضونكم بأفواههم وتأبى قلوبهم وأكثرهم فسقون ۝

9 They have taken a small price for the communications of Allah, so they turn away from His way; surely evil is it that they do.

اشتروا بآيت الله ثمنا قليلا فصدوا عن سبيله إنهم ساء ما كانوا يعملون ۝

10 They do not pay regard to ties of relationship nor those of covenant in the case of a believer; and these are they who go beyond the limits.[1037]

لا يرقبون في مؤمن إلا ولا ذمة وأولئك هم المعتدون ۝

1035 This verse leaves no doubt that the idolaters and the non-Muslims were not to be slain on account of their religion. Even Sale explains the meaning of this to be, "You shall give him a safe conduct that he may return home again securely in case he shall not think fit to embrace Muhammadanism." It is stated on the authority of I'Ab that after the proclamation by 'Ali an idolater asked him whether they would be killed if they went to the Prophet to get information about the religion of Islam or on some other business, and the reply was in the negative, in support of which 'Ali quoted this verse (Rz).

1036 Reason is given here why the Muslims were compelled to repudiate their treaty obligations. This reason, which is here only alluded to by drawing attention to the exception, is made plainer in the next verse, for when it is pointed out that the Muslims must remain true to their agreements as regards tribes that remained true to their compact, it is made obvious that treaty obligations were repudiated only in the case of tribes that had not remained true. The verses that follow throw full light on the subject.

1037 Note the repeated assertions of the Qur-án that the unbelievers who are to be fought against are those who, in the case of a believer on whom they can lay hands, pay no regard either to ties of relationship or to treaty obligations. No remedy was left for the covert mischief of these people, except that the agreements should be overtly repudiated and a period put to all their mischief.

11 But if they repent and keep up prayer and pay the poor-rate, they are your brethren in faith; and We make the communications clear for a people who know.

فَإِنْ تَابُوا وَأَقَامُوا الصَّلٰوةَ وَاٰتَوُا

1038 Note, again, that those leaders of unbelief are to be fought against who break their oaths after their agreement, and further than that, openly revile the religion of Islam; even among these, it is the leaders who are to be particularly punished in fighting. The subject has been made so clear that one doubts whether lack of honesty or lack of brains is the real defect of those who seem tot hink that th Qur-án is here offering the sword or Islam as alternatives.

1039 It is said to refer to the Khuzá'ah, who, having become Muslims, suffered severely at the hands of Baní Bakr, assisted by the Quraish; but the reference may as well be to the Muslims in general, who had suffered the severest persecutions at the hands of the unbelievers. The rage was no doubt due to persecutions, and the ultimate punishment of the persecutors would no doubt relieve their hearts.

Idolaters' Pretensions to Service of the Sacred House

17, 18. Idolaters cannot be servants of the Sacred Mosque. 19–22. Service of the Sacred House cannot compare with the struggle to propagate truth. 23, 24. Sacrifices required from the Muslims.

17 The idolaters have no right to visit the mosques of Allah while bearing witness to unbelief against themselves; these it is whose doings are null,[a] and in the fire shall they abide.[1040]

19 What! do you make (one who undertakes) the giving of drink to the pilgrims and the guarding of the Sacred Mosque[1041] like him who believes in Allah and the latter day and strives hard in Allah's way? They are not equal with Allah; and Allah does not guide the unjust people.

20 Those who believed and fled (their homes), and strove hard in Allah's way with their property and their souls, are much higher in rank with Allah; and those are they who are the achievers (of their objects).

1040 By the mosques of Allah is meant particularly the Sacred Mosque at Mecca, as being the centre of all the mosques of the world. This is made clear by the use of the words Sacred Mosque in v. 19 in the place of the mosques of Allah. It had long remained in the hands of the idolaters, who abode therein, visiting and repairing it, having placed a large number of idols within it. With the conquest of Mecca the Sacred Mosque was denuded of all idols, and was now as pure an emblem of monotheism as in the time of Abraham; there remained not a single vestige of idol-worship. Hence the idol-worshippers had nothing to do with it now, because the help which they sought from their idols could no longer be obtained there. Idol-worship having been abolished, the connection of idol-worshippers with it was entirely cut off so long as they bore witness to unbelief against themselves, i.e. remained idolaters.

1041 It is generally supposed to refer to 'Abbás, the Prophet's uncle, whose charge was giving drink to pilgrims and guarding the Sacred Mosque; but really a comparison is drawn between all such minor acts of charity and public utility and the great responsibility of every individual to exert himself to his utmost to establish the truth.

The Cause of Islam shall be made Triumphant

25-27. Victory on the day of Hunain. 28. Exclusion of idolaters from the Sacred House. 29. Fighting against the followers of the Book.

1042 A true Muslim may have wealth, may carry on trade, may have magnificent houses, but these should not be dearer to him than Allah and exerting himself in His path. In other words, he should be ready to sacrifice all these interests to another, before which all these sink into insignificance. The essential difference between the Gospel teachings and the teachings of the Holy Qur-án is, that while the former condemns wealth and the amassing of wealth outright, the latter does not require one to actually hate riches, but rather not to be obsessed by wealth to the neglect of one's higher duties and responsibilities. The acquisition of wealth is not harmful so long as it is not made the real aim in life, but has its proper place as the means to an end.

breasts of the Muslims on account of the idolatrous tribes, who were now likely to join hands against the believers, hence they are given an assurance of Divine assistance, amply justified by their previous experience.

The battle of Hunain, fought in the eighth year of Hejira in the valley of Hunain, at about three miles from Mecca, differed from the other battles inasmuch as the Muslims here outnumbered the enemy, the tribes of Hawazin and Saqeef being about 4,000 strong, while the Muslims are said to have been as many as ten or even twelve thousand. Their excess in number led them to vanity, with the result that they at first took to flight; the archers of the enemy being very good shooters, the Muslims could not at first face them. The Prophet, however, led the assault, at first alone, in face of the archers, but was soon joined by others and a victory was obtained, as the next verse shows.

1044 By the hosts which you did not see are meant the angels (Rz). This corroborates what has been said in the 3rd and the 8th chapters, as to the angels being sent to strengthen the hearts of the Muslims and to cast terror into the hearts of the enemy. Hence they are described as hosts which you did not see, because they made themselves felt in the hearts and were not visible to the eyes.

1045 The reference may be to the prisoners of the Hawazin, who numbered thousands, and who were all set free as an act of favour by the Holy Prophet.

1048 The importance of Mecca as a commercial centre lay in the fact that the whole of Arabia repaired to it in the season of the pilgrimage, and there carried out important commercial transactions. The prohibition referred to in the first part of the verse could have been easily foreseen as affecting the commerce and consequently the prosperity of Mecca, but worldly or business considerations never interfered with the carrying out of the moral reforms of Islam. The consideration of the diminution of the prosperity of Mecca, which was now wholly Muslim, was not to trouble the Muslims, for "Allah will enrich them out of His grace."

Jews and Christians fall off from the Truth

30, 31. Polytheistic beliefs of Jews and Christians. 32, 33. Their efforts against Islam doomed to failure. 34, 35. Worldliness of monks and priests. 36, 37. The change in sacred months (due to Jewish influence) declared illegal.

30 And the Jews say: Azra is the son of Allah; and the Christians say: The Messiah is the son of Allah; these are the words of their mouths;

وَقَالَتِ الْيَهُوْدُ عُزَيْرُ ٱبْنُ اللّٰهِ وَ
قَالَتِ النَّصٰرَى الْمَسِيْحُ ابْنُ اللّٰهِ
ذٰلِكَ قَوْلُهُمْ بِأَفْوَاهِهِمْ

1049 The last word on the wars with the idolaters of Arabia having been said, this verse introduces the subject of fighting with the followers of the Book. Though the Jews had for a long time assisted the idolatrous Arabians in their struggle to uproot Islam, the great Christian power of the Roman Empire had only just mobilized its forces for the subjection of the new religion, and the Tabúk expedition followed, which constitutes the subject-matter of a large portion of what follows in this chapter. As the object of this Christian power was simply the subjection of the Muslims, the words in which their final vanquishment by the Muslims is spoken of, are different from those dealing with the final vanquishment of the idolatrous Arabians. The Qur-án neither required the idolaters to be compelled to accept Islam, nor was it in any way its object to bring the Christians into subjection. They, on the other hand, had determined to compel the Muslims to give up Islam and to bring them under subjection. The fate of each was therefore according to what it proposed to do to the Muslims. The word jizyah is derived from jazá, meaning he gave satisfaction, and means, according to LL, the tax that is taken from the free non-Muslim subjects of the Muslim Government whereby they ratify the compact that ensures them protection; or, according to Sudi (AH), because it is a compensation for the protection which is guaranteed them, the non-Muslim subjects being free from military service. The phrase عن يد has been explained variously. The word yad (literally hand) stands for power or superiority, the use of the hand being the real source of the superiority of man to all other animals, and the apparent meaning of the phrase is in acknowledgment of your superiority in protecting their lives, etc. Other explanations are: for favour received in ready money, obediently, etc. (AH). The followers of the Book are described here as not believing in Allah and the latter day so long as they do not follow the religion of truth, i.e. Islam, because they do not ascribe to Allah the perfect attributes which belong to Him, and do not understand the real nature of the life after death. It may also be added that the permission to fight, as given to the Muslims, is subject to the condition that the enemy should first take up the sword, Fight in the way of Allah with those who fight with you (2 : 190); the Holy Prophet never overstepped this limit. He fought against the Arabs when they took up the sword to destroy the Muslims, and he led an expedition against the Christians when the Roman Empire first mobilized its forces with the object of subjugating the Muslims. And so scrupulous was he, that when he found that the enemy had not yet taken the initiative he did not attack the Roman Empire, but returned without fighting.

31 They have taken their doctors of law and their monks for Lords besides Allah, and (also) the Messiah son of Mary; and they were enjoined that they should serve one God only, there is no god but He; far from His glory be what they set up (with Him).[1052]

32 They desire to put out the light of Allah with their mouths, and Allah will not consent save to perfect His light, though the unbelievers are averse.[1053]

1050 That there was a sect among the Jews who raised Ezra to the dignity of godhead, or son of God, is shown by Muslim historians. Qastalani says, in the Kitáb-un-Nikáh, that there was a party of Jews who held this belief. Nor did the Jews deny this allegation. The Qur-án, too, mentions it only here in connection with the Christian doctrine, never blaming the Jews directly in the many controversies with them in the earlier chapters, and this shows that the Jewish nation as a whole was not guilty of entertaining this belief.

Another explanation of the statement made here is the free use of the word son. Elsewhere the Qur-án says of the Jews and the Christians that they call themselves the sons of Allah and His beloved ones (5 : 18), the meaning only being that they considered themselves special favourites of the Divine Being. Hence the belief regarding Ezra may be interpreted in the same light, for there is clear evidence that the Talmudists used very exaggerated language concerning him. Among the prophets of Israel, Ezra was specially honoured. In Rabbinical literature Ezra was considered "worthy of being the vehicle of the law, had it not been already given through Moses." "He is regarded and quoted as the type of person most competent and learned in the law. The Rabbis associate his name with several important institutions" (Jewish Encyclopædia).

1051 The words قَاتَلَهُم الله are understood by some to mean لعنهم الله being an imprecation meaning may Allah curse them. But Rgh favours قَتَلَهم الله as being the true interpretation, the meaning being Allah has slain or destroyed them, for he says that though the word qàtala is one of the measure of fá'ala, yet, as it refers to the Divine Being, it signifies qatala. The statement may thus either refer to the fate of previous people who were destroyed or it may be a prophetical statement.

1052 Most of the commentators agree that it does not mean that they took them actually for gods; the meaning is that they obeyed them in what they enjoined and what they forbade (Rz), and therefore they are described as having taken them for lords, on account of attaching to them a dignity which ought to have been attached only to Allah. Muslims who accord a similar position to their pirs or saints are guilty of the same error.

1053 This is a prophecy of the ultimate triumph of the principles of Islam in face of severe opposition from the Jews and Christians. Though the Jewish opposition died long ago, the Christian opposition has been growing stronger day by day. The gradual acceptance by the world of the principles of Islam is, however, a clear indication of the fulfilment of the prophecy.

33 He it is who sent His Apostle with guidance and the religion of truth, that He might cause it to prevail over all religions, though the polytheists may be averse.[1054]

34 O you who believe! most surely many of the doctors of law and the monks eat away the property of men falsely, and turn (them) from Allah's way; and (as for) those who hoard up gold and silver and do not spend it in Allah's way, announce to them a painful chastisement,[1055]

35 On the day when it shall be heated in the fire of hell, then their foreheads and their sides and their backs shall be branded with it: This is what you hoarded up for yourselves, therefore taste what you hoarded.[1056]

1054 Temporary political triumph of the followers of one religion over those of another does not mean the triumph of that religion; yet it is from the political predominance of Christian nations that some Christians argue the superiority of their religion. It is the gradual acceptance of the principles of Islam by the world at large that is bringing about the fulfilment of this prophecy. The advent of the Messiah and the Mahdi is specially regarded as the time of the prevalence of the Islamic principles (Rz), and the adoption of these principles by the most advanced Christian nations of the day, notwithstanding their strong prejudice against Islam itself, no doubt shows the inauguration of that happy era. The doctrine of atonement, and that of the Divinity of Jesus Christ, are dying a natural death, and monotheism is daily gaining ground, while other principles of Islam are equally advancing day by day.

1055 The acquisition of wealth is not disallowed, but the hoarding of it so as not to spend it in the cause of truth and for the welfare of humanity is denounced. Nations which have hoarded wealth, instead of spending it for the welfare of humanity, have never risen to a dignified position.

1056 The punishment of an evil is spoken of throughout the Holy Qur-án as similar to the evil. Even in this world, a man feels a torment similar to the nature of the evil in which he indulges. Being branded with the hoarded wealth is thus a fit description of the chastisement of the hoarders.

1057 The allusion here is to the Arab practice of postponing the pilgrimage to a month other than that in which it fell, for which see the next verse (Rz). Whether the object was intercalation, in order to make the solar and lunar year tally, or whether a continuous cessation of war for a fourth part of the year was too long, is a disputed point; but such postponement was undoubtedly a great hardship for a majority of the people. The word din here does not mean religion, but reckoning. For this significance of the word, see TA.

1058 Fighting is prohibited in the sacred months, but otherwise the Muslims were told to fight with the idolaters as the idolaters fought with them; i.e. since all idolaters united in fighting with the Muslims, the latter, too, must deal with them all as belligerents.

1059 According to most of the commentators, nasí means postponement, and refers to the practice of postponing observance of the sacred months, thus allowing an ordinary month to be observed as sacred and a sacred month to be treated as ordinary (Rz). This practice interfered with the security of life which was guaranteed in the sacred months, and is, therefore, denounced. According to others, nasí means addition (of a month), and refers to the practice of the intercalation of a month every fourth year. AH prefers the first, and says that the three successive months of Ẕiqa'd, Ẕilḥaj, and Muḥarram seemed too long to them to refrain from their depredations and bloodshed, and therefore they violated the last of these, keeping sacred instead the next, i.e. Ṣafar.

1060 The reference in what follows is to the expedition of Tabúk, which was undertaken in the middle of the ninth year of Hejira owing to the threatening attitude of the Roman Emperor. There were many hindrances for the raising of an army sufficient to meet the strong forces of the Roman Empire. The chief of these enumerated by Rz are: (1) a great drought; (2) the length of the journey to the confines of Syria; (3) the ripening of the fruits, 40 If you will not aid him, Allah certainly aided him when those who disbelieved expelled him, he being the second of the two, when they were both in the cave, when he said to his companion: Grieve not, surely Allah is with us.[1062] So Allah sent down His tranquility upon him and strengthened him with hosts which you did not see, and made lowest the word of those who disbelieved; and the word of Allah, that is the highest; and Allah is Mighty, Wise.

which were now ready to be gathered; (4) the intensity of the heat and (5) the organization and power of the Roman army. These difficulties hindered the hypocrites from joining the army, but the Muslims cared for none of them, and 30,000 men gathered round the Prophet's banner.

1061 The reference in this and the following verses is to certain men who, while professing belief, hesitated in accepting the Prophet's call to prepare themselves for the expedition.

Abú Bakr's devotion to the Holy Prophet was so great that he chose him to be his "sole companion," the second of the two, as he is called in the Qur-án, in that most critical hour of his life. The following account from Muir will explain the reference: "He himself went straightway to the house of Abú Bakr, and after a short consultation, ventured the plan for immediate flight. Abú Bakr shed tears of joy; the hour for emigration had at last arrived, and he was to be the companion of the Prophet's journey. . . . They crept in the shade of the evening through a back window, and escaped unobserved from the southern suburb. Pursuing their way south, and clambering in the dark up the bare and rugged ascent, they reached at last the lofty peak of Mount Saur, distant about an hour and a half from the city, and took refuge in a cavern near its summit. . . . The sole companion, or in Arabic phraseology the second of the two, became one of Abú Bakr's most honoured titles. . . . Muhammad and his companion felt it no doubt to be a time of jeopardy. Glancing upwards through a crevice through which the morning light began to break, Abú Bakr whispered: 'What if one were to look through the chink and see us underneath his very foot!' 'Think not thus, Abú Bakr!' said the Prophet. 'We are two, but God is in the midst a third.'" and your persons; this is better for you, if you know.

42 Had it been a near advantage and a short journey, they would certainly have followed you (Ar. thee.), but the tedious journey was too long for them;[1064] and they swear by Allah: If we had been able, we would certainly have gone forth with you; they cause their own souls to perish, and Allah knows that they are most surely liars.

1063 That is, whether it is easy or difficult for you to proceed, or whether you are unarmed or armed (Rz).

1064 Tabúk, for which the expedition was meant, was midway between Medina and Damascus. The Arabs were accustomed to fighting near home; hence, the distance was one of the chief considerations which held back those who were insincere in their professions of the faith of Islam.

1065 A misunderstanding of the Arabic idiom عفا الله عنك translated here as Allah pardon you, has led to some adverse criticism as to the sinlessness of the Prophet. Nothing of this kind is intended. There was no violation of any Divine commandment, and in all the previous battles, whenever the hypocrites refrained from joining the Muslim army, the Prophet passed over this attitude of theirs with forgiveness, and he was never reproved. The phrase is used here to show greater honour and respect to the person addressed (Rz): فلا يكون غرضه من هذا الكلام الا مزيد التبجيل و التعظيم Thus actual forgiveness of sins is not at all meant in the use of this phrase.

46 And if they had intended to go forth, they would certainly have provided equipment for it, but Allah did not like their going forth, so He withheld them, and it was said (to them): Hold back with those who hold back.

47 Had they gone forth with you, they would not have added to you aught save corruption, and they would certainly have hurried about among you seeking (to sow) dissension among you, and among you there are those who hearken for their sake; and Allah knows the unjust.[1066]

48 Certainly they sought (to sow) dissension before, and they meditated plots against you (Ar. thee.) until the truth came, and Allah's commandment prevailed although they were averse (from it).

49 And among them there is he who says: Allow me and do not try me. Surely into trial have they already tumbled down, and most surely hell encompasses the unbelievers.

1066 These verses were revealed during the journey to Tabúk, where most of the hypocrites themselves were not present. But a few had accompanied the expedition to inform others of their party of the happenings on the way.

1067 The two most excellent things are, the laying down of life in the cause of truth, or being sharer in the ultimate triumph of truth. The Muslims never thought that they could be defeated. They would either die defending the cause of truth or live and conquer.

The only punishment that the hypocrites received from the hands of the Muslims was, they were named and turned out of the mosque, and were henceforward known as being hypocrites. Otherwise their liberty was not interfered with. There is mention of one of them living in Medina to the time of Usman, the third Caliph, in full enjoyment of his rights as a citizen; the only distinctive treatment mentioned of him is that the poor-rate was not accepted from him by the Holy Prophet, or by his three immediate successors (Rz, v. 75).

1068 The hypocrites experienced earthly torture about their property and children for two reasons: (1) because, avowing their belief in Islam, they had to take some share in its defensive expeditions and thus spend part of their property, unwillingly though it was, in the cause of Islam; (2) the children of many of them were true believers, and they knew that after their death their property and their children were to become a source of strength to the very religion which they tried to extirpate.

Allah will soon give us (more) out of His grace and His Apostle too: surely to Allah do we make our petition.

61 And there are some of them who molest the Prophet and say, He is one who believes every thing that he hears;[1070] say: A hearer of good for you (who) believes in Allah and believes the faithful, and a mercy for those of you who believe; and (as for) those who molest the Apostle of Allah, they shall have a painful chastisement.

1069 That by alms is here meant the obligatory alms, called the poor-rate, and not voluntary alms, is shown by the concluding words of the verse, which calls it an ordinance from Allah. The verse defines the objects for which the poor-rate may be spent. Altogether eight heads of expenditure are recognized. The recognition of paying the wages of collectors and other servants employed in connection with the poor-rate from that fund shows that the institution was meant for raising a public fund, whose management should entirely be in the hands of a public body. It is sad to note that, as the Qur-án would have it, the institution of Zakát is entirely neglected by the Muslims.

المؤلفة قلوبهم lit. means those whose hearts are made to incline or conciliated. With respect to the preaching of a religion there is always a class which is ready to listen. Expenses in connection with the arrangements to convey the truth to them are recognized here as a part of the necessary expenditure of the poor-rate. I'Ab's suggestion that some Arab chiefs are meant is rejected by Rz. The incident he relates does not at all refer to the expenditure of the poor-rate, but to the distribution of what was acquired in the battle of Hunain.

Some limit the significance of في سبيل الله to warriors (fighting in the defence of faith and the community), or those who are engaged in propagating the Islamic doctrines, while others think that the words are general and include every charitable purpose (Rz).

1070 The word uzun, lit. an ear, is applied to one who hears and believes everything that is said to him, "as though by reason of the excess of his listening he were altogether the organ of hearing, like as a spy is termed 'ain" (lit. eye) (LL). The hypocrites made various derogatory remarks concerning the Prophet, saying among other things that he was a man who believed everything that he heard, and they were therefore sure that they would make him believe their hypocritical professions; or they called him an ear for the reason that he was careful about what was said, as if a prophet should not care about what others said and did. Rodwell is wrong when he says in his note on this word that uzun means injure. Palmer has also made a mistake here. The error is due to the confusion of the word uzun with azā, the latter, with a tanwīn, sounding as azan.

1071 Though Allah and His Apostle are both mentioned together, yet the duty of the faithful is here said to be to please Him, i.e. Allah, alone. This shows the sublimity of the idea of Divine Unity in Islam.

1072 History shows that most of the hypocrites ultimately repented and sincerely joined the ranks of the faithful.

مَأْوٰىهُمْ جَهَنَّمُ ۖ وَبِئْسَ الْمَصِيرُ ۝

1073 Jahada signifies he strove or exerted himself, and jihád is the using one's utmost power in contending with an object of disapprobation (Rgh, TA-LL). It is in a secondary sense that the word signifies fighting, but it is repeatedly used in the Holy Qur-án in its primary significance, and this is one of the occasions which establishes the truth of this beyond all doubt, because those who professed Islam were never fought against, even though their professions may have manifestly been insincere—as on this occasion and on the occasion of the battle of Uhud. Rz's comment on this verse is similar: "The correct rendering is that jihád signifies striving, or exerting oneself, and there is nothing in the word to indicate that this striving is to be effected by the sword or by the tongue or by any other method."

It shows an utter ignorance of the Arabic language to take the word jáhid here as meaning fight with sword. See a similar statement in the 25th chapter, which was revealed long before fighting was permitted to Muslims: "And strive against them a mighty striving with it" (25:52), where it stands for the Qur-án. Hence there is no change of attitude towards the opponents, no intolerance; all that is meant is that the Prophet must continue to preach forcibly both against the unbelievers and the hypocrites. It is a fact, as is shown in 1075 and 1076, that none of the hypocrites were punished with death, or indeed with any other punishment, except that their connections with the Muslims, both temporal and spiritual, were entirely cut off. Some of the known hypocrites lived in Medina as late as the reign of Usman.

اغلظ عليهم properly means be firm or hard or invincible against them, from غلظ الزرع i.e. the seed-produce became thick or strong (LL). Thus in the interpretation of وليجدوا فيكم غلظة occurring further on, LL says, on the authority of TA: And let them find in you hardness or strength or vehemence and superiority in fight. So that the Prophet is, on the one hand, enjoined to preach forcibly against the unbelievers and the hypocrites, and on the other to be unyielding to them, so as not to be under their influence.

74 They swear by Allah that they did not speak, and certainly they did speak, the word of unbelief, and disbelieved after their Islam, and they had determined upon what they have not been able to effect,[1074] and they did not find fault except because Allah and His Apostle enriched them out of His grace;[1075] therefore if they repent, it will be good for them; and if they turn back, Allah will chastise them with a painful chastisement in this world and the hereafter, and they shall not have in the
Ar. nor. land any guardian or a helper.

75 And there are those of them who made a covenant with Allah: If He give us out of His grace, we will certainly give alms and we will certainly be of the good.

76 But when He gave them out of His grace, they became niggardly of it and they turned back, and they withdrew.

77 So He made hypocrisy to follow as a consequence into their hearts till the day when they shall meet Him because they failed to perform towards Allah what they had promised with Him and because they told lies.

78 Do they not know that Allah knows their hidden thoughts and their secret counsels, and that Allah is the great Knower of the unseen things?

79 Those who taunt the free givers of alms among the believers and them who cannot find but to the extent of their power, so they scoff at them; Allah will pay them back their scoffing, and they shall have a painful chastisement.[1076]

1074 This is the slaying of the Prophet and the extirpation of Islam. In fact, the hypocrites failed in every object they set out to accomplish.

1075 The advent of the Muslims in Medina had enriched its inhabitants. Was it not, then, a matter for wonder that those men who had gained by Islam should turn against their very benefactors?

1076 When subscriptions were solicited for the expedition to Tabúk, the wealthier members of the Muslim community gave large donations, while the poorer ones also paid their mite. The hypocrites taunted both, the former as making a show of their wealth, the latter as bringing in their small subscriptions only to be counted among the subscribers (Rz, AH). The word sakhira, in this verse, carries exactly the same significance as the word yastahzi'u in 2 : 15. See 27.

1077 The spiritual relations with the hypocrites are henceforth cut off. The mention of seventy may not indicate the specific number here. For this use of the word sab'a and sab'ún, see 47. Bkh, however, records the report of an incident here which shows that the Holy Prophet took it literally at the burial service of 'Abdulla bin Ubayy, the recognized leader of the hypocrites. This report, which comes through Náfi' bin 'Umar, and through 'Umar himself, filtering through various channels, and must therefore be accepted as true, is to the following effect: "When 'Abdulla bin Ubayy died, his son came to the Holy Prophet and requested him to grant him his shirt, so that he might use it as a wrapping-cloth for the dead body of his father. The Prophet granted his request. Then he asked him to conduct the burial ceremony. The Holy Prophet got up, but 'Umar took hold of his garment and objected on the ground that 'Abdulla was a hypocrite and that Allah had forbidden the Holy Prophet to offer prayer for him. The Holy Prophet replied that Allah had given him a choice (referring to the words of this verse: ask forgiveness for them or do not ask forgiveness for them), and that he would ask forgiveness for him for over seventy times, if only by his doing so forgiveness could be extended to the dead man. Then he offered prayers for him. Verse 84 is said to have been revealed to stop the offering of prayers for those who were known to be hypocrites.

The incident shows how kind and forgiving the Holy Prophet was to his severest enemies. 'Abdulla bin Ubayy was the man who had led the hypocritical movement against him the 1078 فليضحكوا and وليبكوا would literally mean let them laugh and let them weep, but, as the context shows, these words describe the condition to which they were to be reduced.

1079 Thus temporal connections with the hypocrites were cut off. It should be noted that this is the only punishment given to the hypocrites, viz. that they were not allowed to take part in future expeditions against the enemies of the Muslims. It is also related that from one of them, Sa'lba, whose story is referred to by the commentators under v. 75, the Holy Prophet and the three Caliphs who followed him refused to accept the poor-rate until the man died in Usman's caliphate. V. 103 leads us to the same conclusion. See 1092. These were the only disadvantages, if it is right to call them so, which the hypocrites suffered. They were not looked upon as members of the Muslim community, but as citizens they enjoyed all the rights of other citizens.

1080 The commentators generally relate here the story of 'Abdulla bin Ubayy, who was the chief of the Medina hypocrites. There are some reports to the effect that when he lay on his death-bed he requested the Holy Prophet to send him his shirt, so that he might be buried in it, and to conduct his burial service. The Prophet accepted the first of these requests and sent him his shirt, but refused the other as being opposed to this Divine injunction (Rz). But see 1077, which shows that the Holy Prophet conducted his burial ceremony and that the revelation of this verse was later. Some who shut their eyes to all historical facts would find fault with the Holy Prophet for his refusal, if he actually refused: but reliable testimony is opposed to this. On the other hand, the sending of the shirt to one who had led a secret movement against the Holy Prophet all his life, and had left no stone unturned to bring the Muslim community to discomfiture and disgrace, was an act of magnanimity unparalleled in the life of any great man. As for the injunction not to offer prayers for hypocrites, the reason is given along with the injunction in the verse: Surely they disbelieve in Allah and His Apostle. Thus the Holy Prophet had been informed that they were unbelievers in heart, and therefore should not be treated as Muslims; the burial service of Islam was only for Muslims and not for unbelievers. It is, further, clear from the words of this verse that those who were known to be hypocrites were not punished with death or killed in fighting, but lived to die a natural death. The case of 'Abdulla bin Ubayy, who died in the lifetime of the Holy Prophet, and that of Sa'lba, who died in the reign of Usman, are sufficient to prove this, while there is not a single case on record of any one of them having been put to death.

Standing by the grave refers to the Prophet's practice of praying for the deceased standing by his grave after the burial (Zj–Rz).

The words, therefore, do not prohibit mere standing on the grave, but praying is here really forbidden. 1081, 1082, see next page.

1081 The tribes of Asad and Ghatfan, according to some, and the family of Amr-ibn-ut-Tufail, according to others, are meant here. The word mu'azzir is either the noun form of 'azzara, meaning he was remiss, wanting, deficient in an affair, setting up an excuse for it, or is a variation of mu'tazir, from i'tazara, meaning he excused himself or had an excuse. In the former case the excuse would be necessarily false, and in the latter it may be either true or false (Rz, Kf).

1082 Al-A'ráb is a collective general noun (said by Az to be plural of a'rábí, LL) signifying the dwellers of the desert (of Arabia), who move from place to place in search of herbage and water, whether of Arabs or their freemen, as distinguished from 'Arab, which signifies those whose descent can be traced to Arabs (Az-LA). And the same authority adds: "It is not permissible to call the Muhajirs (those companions of the Prophet who fled from Mecca on account of persecution) and the Ansár (those companions who helped the Prophet at Medina) A'ráb: they are Arabs because they made their homes in the Arabian towns and settled in cities.

1083 Apparently, what they wanted to join the expedition, and what the Prophet could not find for them, were beasts to ride upon and to carry their provisions and necessaries (AH). But some commentators suggest that they asked for provisions, while others say that they wanted "patched boots and soled shoes" for the long journey (AH).

1084 Evidently these verses were revealed when the Prophet was away from Medina, and the statements made in them are therefore prophetical, being exactly fulfilled on his return to Medina.

1085 Muqátil says that 'Abdulla, son of Ubayy, and the son of Abi Sarh swore that they would not remain behind in any future expedition (AH).

Their object in begging the Muslims to turn aside from them was that they should not reprove them for their misconduct (Rz, AH), and the Muslims are enjoined to turn aside from them in the sense of severing their connection with them (I'Ab-Rz). It is related that on his return from Tabúk the Holy Prophet forbade the Muslims to have any intercourse with the hypocrites. This injunction was in obedience to the revelation which he had received during the journey, as is clearly shown in vv. 83, 84.

1086 Maghram and gharm (a thing that must be paid, LL) mean, according to Rgh, damage or loss that befalls a man in his property, but not for any injurious action of his. The hypocrites had to contribute something for the sake of appearance, though they considered such contributions to be no more than a loss. According to some, spending here refers to the payment of the poor-rate. The tribes of Asad, Ghatfan, and Tameem used to give contributions and pay the poor-rate (AH).

Dáirah means primarily the circuit, and a calamity is so called because it encompasses a man on all sides, or it signifies a turn of fortune, from dára, meaning it turned. Dáirat us sau is the calamity which befalls and destroys (Msb-LL). It is a prophetical announcement.

99 And of the dwellers of the desert are those who believe in Allah and the latter day and take what they spend to be (means of) the nearness of Allah and the Apostle's prayers; surely it shall be means of nearness for them; Allah will make them enter into His mercy; surely Allah is Forgiving, Merciful.

1087 Muhájirín is plural of muhájir, meaning literally one who flies from or forsakes his home, and anṣár is plural of náṣir, meaning one who helps. In the history of Islam, the former word came to signify all those companions of the Holy Prophet who, having embraced Islam at Mecca, had to fly from their homes either to Abyssinia or to Medina; the latter flight, including about all the Meccan Muslims, is known as the Flight, and the Muslim era dates from it; the latter word signifies the Medina Muslims who, having accepted Islam before the Flight, gave shelter to those who fled from Mecca. But there is a slight difference of opinion; Abú Músá and several others say the description given here includes all those who prayed towards the two Qiblahs (i.e. those who became Muslims before the change of Qiblah took place, which happened sixteen months after the Flight). 'Atá makes it include all those who witnessed the battle of Badr, which took place about the same time as the change of Qiblah, while Shi'bí considers that all those who took part in the Bai'at-ir-Riḍwán, the pledge taken at Hudiabiyya in the sixth year of the Flight, are meant (AH, Rz). The opinion generally favoured is that all the companions of the Holy Prophet are meant, while by "those who followed them in goodness" are meant the Muslims who came after the companions and followed their good deeds (Rz).

1088 The tribes of Juhaina, Aslam, Ashja', and Ghafar were encamping about Medina at this time (Kf).

1089 The insincerity of the heart could not be known to a mortal, but the secrets of the heart are known to Allah. Events had, however, come to pass which ultimately separated the hypocrites from the Muslims after they had been mingled with them for a long time.

1090 The hypocrites were punished twice in this life. They had to take part in all contributions for the defence of the Muslim community and more or less in the defence itself, and had to pay the poor-rate, all this against their conviction and unwillingly, and this was, no doubt, a source of great torment to them. After having suffered all this torment for the sake of being reckoned Muslims, they were ultimately separated from the Muslims, for it is reported that the Holy Prophet named them while addressing a congregation in the Juma' prayers, and they had to leave the assembly in the sight of the whole congregation, and this exposure to public shame was no doubt a great punishment for them (IJ).

1091 According to different reports, the number of these men varied from three to ten. They were sincere and confessed their fault.

1092 Because they showed sincerity in confessing their faults they are dealt with leniently. Their alms are not to be rejected, and the Prophet is commanded to take a part of their property for charitable purposes. The Prophet's acceptance of alms from them is here spoken of as purifying them of evil, while his prayer for them is described as bringing peace and quiet to them, and this is an example of the effectiveness of the Holy Prophet's intercession for his followers. It also shows that poor-rate was not accepted from the hypocrites, as has already been stated.

106 And others are made to await Allah's command, whether He chastise them or whether He turn to them (mercifully); and Allah is Knowing, Wise.[1093]

107 And those who built a mosque to cause harm and for unbelief and to cause disunion among the believers and an ambush to him who made war against Allah and His Apostle before; and they will certainly swear: We did not desire aught but good; and Allah bears witness that they are most surely liars.[1094]

108 Never stand in it; certainly a mosque founded on piety from the very first day is more deserving that you should stand in it; in it are men who love that they should be purified; and Allah loves those who purify themselves.[1095]

1093 On the authority of I'Ab, and several others, this is generally supposed to refer to three of the believers who held back from the expedition, viz. Ka'b-bin-Málik, Halál-bin-Umayya, and Marárah-bin-Rabi'. But some think that it refers to the hypocrites generally; others consider the reference to be to the hypocrites who built the mosque spoken of in the next verse, or to a tribe of the hypocrites regarding whom no orders were given at the time (AH).

1094 According to I'Ab and other commentators, twelve men from among the hypocrites (Rz) of the tribe of Bani Ghanam built a mosque at the instigation of Abú 'Ámir in the neighbourhood of the mosque of Quba, with the object of causing harm to that mosque. Abú 'Ámir, who, after fighting against the Holy Prophet for a long time, had fled to Syria after the battle of Hunain, had written to his friends at Medina that he was coming with a formidable army to crush the Prophet, and that they should build a mosque for him. But Abú 'Ámir died in Syria, and the founders desired the Holy Prophet to give it a blessing by his presence, which he was forbidden to do by Divine revelation, and the mosque was demolished (AH, Rz, Kf). By him who made war against Allah and His Apostle is meant not only Abú 'Ámir, but all those who answered this description, for it was built with the object of promoting opposition against Islam.

1095 Some commentators understand by this the mosque at Quba, while the greater number regard the Prophet's mosque at Medina as meant here, while others still consider that both mosques may be meant (Rz). But the words are so general that every mosque raised for the service of Allah may be included in this description.

110 The building which they have built will ever continue to be a source of disquiet in their hearts, except that their hearts get cut into pieces; and Allah is Knowing, Wise.[1096]

1096 Their hearts could be cut into pieces either by severe regret or by sincere repentance (Rz).

1097 The Christian critics declare this to be untrue. Wherry quotes Brinkman's Notes on Islam, declaring this verse "the greatest untruth in the whole of the Qur-án," and himself adds in his comment on the verse that it has not only "no foundation in truth," but the teaching is diametrically opposed to all the doctrines of the Bible. What particular doctrine the reverend gentleman was thinking of when he made this comment is difficult to say. The promise which is said to be binding on Allah, as laid down in the Qur-án, as well as in the previous books, is this, that Allah will grant the believers His blessings if they exert themselves with their persons as well as their property in His way: Allah has bought of the believers their persons and their property for this, that they shall have the garden. Is not the same principle, in different words, no doubt, laid down in the Torah and the Gospel, and still found there, notwithstanding the alterations they have undergone? "If thou wilt be perfect," said Jesus to a wealthy man, "go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me" (Matt. 19:21). And when Peter said: "Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" Jesus gave them the promise that they should sit upon "twelve thrones," and added, "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or land, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold and shall inherit everlasting life." Moses' teaching contains similar promises. For instance, the promise of God, "that ye may increase mightily in land that floweth with milk and honey," is made conditional on "thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and all thy soul and with all thy might" (Deut. 6:3 and 5), which is the same as exerting oneself to one's utmost power in the way of 112 They who turn (to Allah), who serve (Him), who praise (Him), who fast, who bow down, who prostrate themselves, who enjoin what is good and forbid what is evil, and who keep the limits of Allah: and give good news to the believers.

113 It is not (fit) for the Prophet and those who believe that they should ask forgiveness for the polytheists, even though they should be near relatives, after it has become clear to them that they are inmates of the flaming fire.[1098]

114 And Abraham's asking forgiveness for his sire was only owing to a promise which he had made to him; but when it became clear to him that he was an enemy of Allah, he declared himself to be clear of him; most surely Abraham was very tender-hearted, forbearing.

God with one's person and property. It should be borne in mind that the words they fight in Allah's way, so they slay and are slain, are not a part of the promise, but are expressive of the condition of the companions, which showed that they were true to their promise. The promise to spend one's person and property may be carried out in various ways under different circumstances, and the companions of the Holy Prophet were as true to this promise during the thirteen years at Mecca as during the ten years at Medina.

1098 It should be noted that this verse does not prohibit praying for the forgiveness of the unbelievers in general, but only such unbelievers about whom it has become clear that they are inmates of the flaming fire, and in the next verse it is made clear that even Abraham continued to pray for his idolatrous sire until he clearly saw that he had become an enemy of Allah. The question is, when is a man to be considered to have become an open enemy of Allah, or an inmate of the flaming fire? The commentators are generally of opinion that either a revelation from Allah with regard to a person or his death in unbelief or idolatry alone settles the point. In 16:61 and 35:45 we find in almost identical words that Allah's punishment is not severe to the extent of the blackness of man's deeds; "and if Allah had destroyed men for their iniquities, He would not leave on it a single creature." In numerous other places Allah's lenient dealings with His creatures are spoken of in plain words. And in 42:5 it is said of the angels that they continue to "ask forgiveness for those on earth," where both the believers and the non-believers are included. But when a prophet is raised to uproot errors and establish the truth, there rises in opposition to him a class of men who exert themselves to their utmost in extirpating the truth. Thus Abraham's sire became an enemy of Allah, not on the first occasion when he refused to forsake idolatry, but when he had spent every effort to destroy the preacher of truth. So also about the idolaters of Arabia, the sentence of incorrigibility did not go forth even while they persecuted the Holy Prophet at Mecca, but when it became clear that they massed all their forces to sweep away all traces of Islam. Their doom was then settled, and it was useless to pray for their forgiveness. All spiritual relations with men of this type had then to be cut off, as they on their part had cut them off long before. Under this verse, prayers would not be offered for those who die in unbelief.

1099 If the idolaters had chosen a wrong course and gone to such extremes against the Muslims that the latter were now compelled to cut off even their spiritual relations with them, their error was not ascribable to Allah, for He had not only sent His guidance, but even pointed out what they should guard against. The verse establishes in clear words that Allah never leads a people astray; and how should He lead astray, says the Holy Qur-án, when He goes to the extent of making clear to them what evil they should guard against?

1100 Ibn-i-'Atiyya thus explains the meaning of tába in this verse: "Taubah on the part of Allah means His turning to His servant from one state to another which is higher than it." Therefore, Allah's turning mercifully does not indicate that there has been any disobedience. The context, in fact, throws clear light upon this meaning of taubah, for whereas only a small part of the Ansár (Helpers) are stated to have, not actually swerved, but to have only thought of swerving, Allah's turning mercifully is in relation to the Prophet and those sincere believers who are plainly stated to have followed the Prophet in the hour of straitness, thus showing that it was in relation to those who were obedient under the severest difficulties, and not to those who were disobedient; the latter being dealt with in the next verse. The ساعة العسرة is generally explained as meaning the expedition to Tabúk, which is also known as the غزوة العسرة or the expedition of straitness, because of the excessive heat, and scarcity of food and water, so that sometimes only a single date had to be divided between two men, and men being parched with thirst slaughtering camels to quench it; there was also a scarcity of animals, so that ten men had but a single camel (AH); but really, the whole period of about twenty-one years from the preaching of the Prophet had been one of the severest difficulties for the Muslims.

their souls were also straitened to them; and they knew it for certain that there was no refuge from Allah but in Him; then He turned to them (mercifully) that they might turn (to Him); surely Allah is the Oft-returning (to mercy), the Merciful.[1101]

What the Faithful should do

119–121. The faithful should remain true to the Prophet. 122. A certain part from each class should study religion and instruct others.

119 O you who believe! be careful of (your duty to) Allah and be with the true ones.

120 It did not beseem the people of Medina and those round about them of the dwellers of the desert to remain behind the Apostle of Allah, nor should they desire (any thing) for themselves in preference to him;[1102] this is because there afflicts them not thirst or fatigue or hunger in Allah's way, nor do they tread a path which enrages the unbelievers, nor do they attain from the enemy what they 1101 The three men were from among the Anṣár, whose names have already been given in 1093. The words were left behind are explained as meaning either left behind at the time of the expedition or left behind with respect to the commandment of Allah concerning them, being, it is said, the persons referred to in v. 106, "And others are made to await Allah's command, whether He chastise them or whether He turn to them (mercifully)." The latter explanation was given by Ka'b himself, one of the three men (AH). They remained cut off from all intercourse with Muslims, including their wives, for fifty days. Ka'b was a man of importance, and when he received a letter from the king of Ghassan offering him a position under him if he deserted the Holy Prophet, he burned the letter, showing his contempt for the offer, and gave no reply (Ibn-i-Hisham).

1102 The meaning is that they should neither desire rest for themselves, comfort, nor protection, in preference to the Prophet; in other words, they should accompany him in difficulty and distress. The ordinary rendering of this phrase—nor should they prefer their lives to his life—does not carry the true sense of the original. When the Holy Prophet set out on the expedition to Tabúk, various considerations withheld some men from joining him, but the true believers among these soon saw their error, and joined the expedition on its way to Tabúk. Among the last of these was Abú Khaismah, who, sitting in his garden in the shade, thus argued within himself: A cool shade, and ripe dates, and cool drink, and a beautiful wife —and the Apostle of Allah exposed to heat and air; this is not good; and he at once joined the Holy Prophet.

attain, but a good work is written down to them on account of it; surely Allah does not waste the reward of the doers of good;[1103]

121 Nor do they spend any thing that may be spent, small or great, nor do they traverse a valley, but it is written down to their credit, that Allah may reward them with the best of what they have done.

122 And it does not beseem the believers that they should go forth all together; why should not then a company from every party from among them go forth that they may apply themselves to obtain understanding in religion,[1104] and that they may warn their people when they come back to them that they may be cautious?

The Object effected by Revelation

123–125. Revelation strengthens the faithful and weakens the hypocrites. 126, 127. The trials. 128, 129. The Prophet's zeal and reliance on Allah.

123 O you who believe! fight those of the unbelievers who are near to you[1105] and let them find in you hardness;[1106] and know that Allah is with those who guard (against evil).

يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا قَاتِلُوا الَّذِينَ
يَلُونَكُم مِّنَ الْكُفَّارِ وَلْيَجِدُوا فِيكُمْ
غِلْظَةً وَاعْلَمُوا أَنَّ اللَّهَ مَعَ الْمُتَّقِينَ ۝

1103 Slaying, imprisoning, or defeating the enemy is meant by attaining from the enemy what they attain (Rz, Bḍ). نال منه means he harmed him, and so نال من عدوه means he attained the object of his desire from the enemy (Msb-LL).

1104 The introduction here of this subject of the study of religion shows the aim which the Qur-án has in view. In the midst of the ordinances relating to fighting, it introduces the subject of the preparation of a missionary force, thus showing that this was the greatest necessity of Islam. It was only by means of a missionary propaganda that truth could be spread, and the ultimate object was not to be lost sight of, even when the community was engaged in a life-and-death struggle against overwhelming forces of the enemy. This is the reason why the subject is introduced here.

1105 Here there is a plain injunction to fight only against those unbelievers who are near to you, because it was they who persecuted the Muslims. The commandment is not general, and gives us a rule of guidance in interpreting other commandments relating to fighting, for one part of the Qur-án explains another. 1106, see next page.

124 And whenever a chapter is revealed, there are some of them who say: Which of you has it strengthened in faith? Then as for those who believe, it strengthens them in faith and they rejoice.

126 Do they not see that they are tried once or twice in every year, yet they do not turn (to Allah) nor do they mind.[1108]

127 And whenever a chapter is revealed, they cast glances at one another: Does any one see you? Then they turn away: Allah has turned away their hearts because they are a people who do not understand.

128 Certainly an Apostle has come to you from among yourselves, grievous to him is your falling into distress, excessively solicitous respecting you, to the believers (he is) compassionate, merciful.[1108A]

1106 So that you do not yield to them or regard them as your well-wishers, which they would persuade you to do.

1107 The uncleanness of their hearts increased with new revelation, because it increased them in stubbornness, and their hearts were more and more hardened against truth. The new revelation became the occasion of their increased infidelity, and was not the effective cause; see 24.

1108 The various misfortunes which befell them or their vanquishment may be meant if unbelievers are taken as addressed here. If the hypocrites are addressed, the trials would then mean the incidents which distinguished the sincere believers from the hypocrites in the Prophet's lifetime.

1108A This is the true picture of the heart which grieved, not for his followers alone, not for one tribe or country, but for all humanity. He grieves for the burdens of all, and he is solicitous for the welfare of all, but there is a special relation he bears to those who follow him; to them he is, in addition, compassionate and merciful.

CHAPTER X

JONAH

REVEALED AT MECCA

(11 sections and 109 verses)

Abstract:

Sec. 1, 2. Truth of the Revelation.
Sec. 3. Merciful dealing.
Sec. 4. Uniqueness of Divine gifts.
Sec. 5. The reprobate and their punishment.
Sec. 6. Mercy takes precedence of punishment.
Sec. 7. Believers and unbelievers.
Sec. 8, 9. A reference to sacred history.
Sec. 10. Those who heed warning will benefit.
Sec. 11. All good is controlled by Allah.

The Title.

ALL that is said in this chapter of Jonah, after whom it is named, is an incidental reference to his people having benefited by the warning: "And wherefore was there not a town which should believe so that their belief should have profited them but the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the chastisement of disgrace in this world's life and We gave them provision till a time" (v. 98). There are more detailed references to Noah and Moses, but as the subject-matter of the chapter deals chiefly with the precedence of mercy over punishment, it is more in accord with Jonah's history; the name, therefore, of that prophet has been fitly chosen as a title.

Subject-matter.

The chief feature of this chapter is that while it asserts the truth of revelation, it also lays stress on the merciful dealing of the Divine Being with men. It opens with a statement of the truth of Divine revelation in the Holy Qur-án, proceeding to a disquisition on its truth in the first two sections. The second section closes with a demand for a sign on the part of unbelievers, and they are told that judgment is deferred for a while; the reason being given in the third section, where it is shown that Divine dealing with men is characterized by mercy, and therefore He does not hasten punishment, but first shows mercy. The fourth section tells us that evidence of His mercy exists in nature, for He grants gifts which it is not in the power of any one else to grant, and as material gifts from Him are characterized by uniqueness, so is His gift of revelation, and the like of it cannot be produced by any one else. The fifth section states that the reprobate must ultimately meet with their punishment, while the sixth again calls attention to the preponderance of the quality of mercy in the Divine Being, while the seventh contrasts the believers with the unbelievers. The eighth and ninth sections refer briefly to the histories of Noah and Moses. The tenth states, by a brief allusion to Jonah, that those who heed the warning will benefit, and the last section shows that all good is controlled by the Divine Being, hence man must turn to Him.

SECTION 1

Truth of Revelation

1–6. Revelation and arguments of its truth. 7–10. Reward and punishment and their nature.

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

1 I am Allah the Seeing.[1109] These are the verses of the wise Book.[1110]

2 What! is it a wonder to the people that We revealed to a man from among themselves, saying: Warn the people and give good news to those who believe that theirs is a footing of firmness with their Lord. The unbelievers say: This is most surely a manifest enchanter.

Or, high dignity.

عِنْدَ رَبِّهِمْ ؕ قَالَ الْكٰفِرُوْنَ اِنَّ هٰذَا
لَسٰحِرٌ مُّبِيْنٌ ۝

Connection with the preceding Chapter.

The last chapter deals chiefly with the punishment of the guilty, and thus reveals the sterner side of Islam. But the circumstances which necessitated such punishment were brought about by the enemies themselves. While there is no inherent severity in the doctrines of Islam, there is, on the other hand, the Divine attribute to which the Holy Qur-án gives the greatest prominence—the attribute of mercy and compassion in the Divine Being. Hence a chapter dealing with the punishment of the guilty is immediately followed by one having for its theme the quality of mercy in the Divine Being, which takes precedence of all other attributes. Moreover, while the last section of the last chapter deals with the effect of revelation upon the faithful, this opens with the truth of that revelation.

Date of Revelation.

The weight of testimony is on the side of the chapter Jonah being entirely a Meccan revelation. Suggestions, however, have been made on the basis of internal testimony that vv. 94–97 belong to Medina (I'Ab-AH), because these refer to the Jews. But one authority rejects this opinion and holds v. 40 only to have been revealed at Medina, as, in his opinion, that verse speaks of the Jews (Kalbi-AH). Another suggestion is that from v. 40 to the end was revealed at Medina (AH). All these are, however, mere conjectures. It would be absurd to deny that references to the Jews and Jewish history are contained in the Meccan revelation, and as the entire chapter deals with one subject, the whole is undoubtedly of Meccan origin and belongs to the last Meccan period.

1109 Alif, lám, and rá are the three letters which stand at the head of this chapter and four other chapters, viz. 11th, 12th, 14th, and 15th, while the 13th chapter has alif, lám, mím, rá. The abbreviation is of the same form as alif, lám, mím, except that rá stands for Ráee, i.e. the seeing, or ará, i.e. I see, as the mím stands for a'lam, i.e. the best knower (see 11), which also explains the abbreviation at the commencement of the 13th chapter.

1110 The kitáb, or the Qur-án, is called ḥakím (wise) here either because it possesses wisdom, i.e. the quality which discriminates between truth and falsehood and right and wrong, or because it is muḥkam, i.e. free from all incongruity or unsoundness, or because it possesses both these qualities (Rgh).

1111 Ḍau, or ḍiá, is often considered synonymous with núr, but according to some authorities it has a more intensive significance than light (LL); while others maintain that ḍau, or ḍiá, signifies that light which subsists by itself, and núr, that which subsists through some other thing (Mf. TA-LL). It is in this last sense that the moon is called a light, because its light is borrowed, as contrasted with the sun, which is called a ḍiá.

1112 The whole of creation is, notwithstanding its variety, subject to one law, and clearly bears witness to the unity of its Maker. And just as the visible universe is subject to a law, there is also a law working in the spiritual and moral worlds.

Truth of the Revelation

11, 12. Mercy is shown and evil removed. 13, 14. A lesson. 15–17. Truth of revelation impressed. 18–20. Judgment deferred.

11 And if Allah should hasten the evil to men as they desire the hastening on of good, their doom should certainly have been decreed for them; but We leave those alone who hope not for Our meeting in their inordinacy, blindly wandering on.[1115]

12 And when affliction touches a man, he calls on Us, whether lying on his side or sitting or standing; but when We remove his affliction from him, he passes on as though he had never called on Us on account of an affliction that touched him; thus that which they do is made fairseeming

1113 The light of faith, which is even here a guiding principle of man's actions, will assume a more palpable form in the life after death. Compare 57:12, where it is called the light running before them.

1114 Their first cry is the glorification of the Divine Being and their last His praise, and their talk with one another is nothing but "peace"; as is elsewhere said: "They shall not hear therein vain or sinful discourse, except the word Peace, peace" (56:25, 26). This is the Muslim paradise, and this description is sufficient to put those to shame who say that the picture of the Muslim paradise drawn in Meccan revelation is characterized by sensuality.

1115 People desire and pray for good things to be hastened on to them, and Allah does hasten on to them those things in His mercy; but the opponents of the Holy Prophet were foolish enough to pray for the hastening on to them of evil, because they said: "O Allah! if this is the truth from Thee, then rain upon us stones from heaven, or inflict on us a painful chastisement" (8:32); which, because of His great mercy, He did not hasten on to them, for if He had done so He would have at once destroyed them all.

13 And certainly We did destroy generations before you when they were unjust, and their apostles had come to them with clear arguments, and they would not believe; thus do We recompense the guilty people.

وَلَقَدْ أَهْلَكْنَا الْقُرُونَ مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ لَمَّا
ظَلَمُوا وَجَاءَتْهُمْ رُسُلُهُمْ بِالْبَيِّنٰتِ
وَمَا كَانُوا لِيُؤْمِنُوا كَذٰلِكَ نَجْزِي
الْقَوْمَ الْمُجْرِمِينَ ٥

14 Then We made you (their) successors in the land after them so that We may see how you act.

ثُمَّ جَعَلْنٰكُمْ خَلٰٓئِفَ فِي الْأَرْضِ مِنْ بَعْدِهِمْ
لِنَنْظُرَ كَيْفَ تَعْمَلُونَ ٥

15 And when Our clear communications are recited to them, those who hope not for Our meeting say: Bring a Qur-án other than this or change it.[1116] Say: It does not beseem me that I should change it of myself; I follow naught but what is revealed to me: surely I fear, if I disobey my Lord, the chastisement of a mighty day.[1117]

وَإِذَا تُتْلٰى عَلَيْهِمْ اٰيَاتُنَا بَيِّنٰتٍ قَالَ
الَّذِينَ لَا يَرْجُونَ لِقَاءَنَا ائْتِ
بِقُرْاٰنٍ غَيْرِ هٰذَا أَوْ بَدِّلْهُ قُلْ مَا يَكُونُ
لِي أَنْ أُبَدِّلَهُ مِنْ تِلْقَاءِ نَفْسِي إِنْ
أَتَّبِعُ إِلَّا مَا يُوحٰى إِلَيَّ إِنِّي أَخَافُ إِنْ
عَصَيْتُ رَبِّي عَذَابَ يَوْمٍ عَظِيمٍ ٥

16 Say: If Allah had desired (otherwise) I would not have recited it to you, nor would I have taught it to you: indeed I have lived a lifetime among you before it: do you not then understand? [1118]

قُلْ لَوْ شَاءَ اللّٰهُ مَا تَلَوْتُهُ عَلَيْكُمْ وَ
لَا أَدْرٰىكُمْ بِهِ فَقَدْ لَبِثْتُ فِيكُمْ عُمُرًا
مِنْ قَبْلِهِ أَفَلَا تَعْقِلُونَ ٥

1116 They desire a revelation which should not condemn their evil ways and their idol-worship, nor contain any threats of their coming doom.

1117 When I fear the befalling of punishment to me if I should disobey my Lord, why should I not warn you who have rebelled against your Lord? The words do not imply that the Prophet meant to say that he did not change the Qur-án for fear of punishment. They show how true he himself was to revelation, translating every one of its precepts into practice.

1118 The Prophet's truthfulness and honesty before he received the Divine revelation were undisputed, and he had earned such renown for these qualities that he was known in the land as Al-Amín, i.e. the faithful one. The argument is that if, as they admitted, he had never told a lie in his lifetime, even for the sake of a personal advantage, how could he, now that he had passed the age of youth and passions, speak falsely, and that to his own detriment? Because he was not the gainer, but a sufferer thereby, on account of the persecutions which his preaching had brought about for him. It is related that, standing upon the mount Safá, he summoned one family after another of his people and asked them, when they had all assembled, if they had ever known him to have spoken a lie; and the answer being in the negative, he told them that if they did not mend their ways their doom would soon overtake them, at which Abú Lahab uttered a curse and they all went away; moreover, a man who had so long refrained from showing any interest in their lives and their modes of worship, and had all but lived the silent life of a recluse among them, could not, of his own accord, be imagined to have suddenly changed the course of his life.

17 Who is then more unjust than he who forges a lie against Allah or (who) gives the lie to His communications? surely the guilty shall not be successful.

فَانتَظِرُوا إِنِّي مَعَكُم مِّنَ الْمُنتَظِرِينَ ○

1119 The opponents of the Holy Prophet also disagreed with him or refused to accept him, just as previous people had rejected their prophets, for all people are but a single nation.

1120 The word that had gone forth is referred to in many places. I may refer the reader to the following: "And they say, When will this threat come to pass, if you are truthful? Say: Maybe there may have drawn near to you somewhat of that which you seek to hasten on" (27:71, 72). And again: "Say: You have the appointment of a day from which you cannot hold back any while, nor can you bring it on (before its time)" (34:30) (see 2037).

1121 It is clear from the context that their demand is for the punishment with which they are threatened, because they would recognize no other sign; and the reply is that they must look forward to it, for even the particular sign which they demanded must come. The superficial reader may think there is a refusal here to show a sign, but the concluding words are too clear to warrant such a conclusion; they are told to wait for the sign to come.

Merciful Dealing

21–24. Divine mercy follows afflictions. 25, 26. The righteous shall remain in peace. 27–30. The wicked must be punished.

21 And when We make people taste of mercy after an affliction touches them,[1122] lo! they devise plans against Our communications. Say: Allah is quicker to plan; surely Our messengers write down what you plan.

22 He it is who makes you travel by land and sea; until when you are in the ships, and they sail on with them in a pleasant breeze, and they rejoice at it, a violent wind overtakes them and the billows surge in on them from all sides, and they become certain that they are encompassed about, they pray to Allah, being sincere to Him in obedience: If Thou dost deliver us from this, we will most certainly be of the grateful ones.

23 But when He delivers them, lo! they are unjustly rebellious in the earth. O men! your rebellion is against your own souls—a provision (only) of this world's life—then to Us shall be your return, so We will inform you of what you did.

24 The likeness of this world's life is only as water which We send down from the cloud, then the herbage of the earth of which men and cattle eat grows luxuriantly thereby; until when the earth puts on its golden raiment and it becomes garnished, and its people think that they have power over it, Our command comes to it, by night or by day, so We 1122 Some think that there is a reference here to the famine which prevailed for seven years at Mecca (Rz). For the famine itself see 1915. The statement here may only be a general description of ordinary afflictions which befall man, an instance of which is given in the next verse.

1123 This is another description of the Muslim paradise, which is called the dárussalám, or the abode of peace, as opposed to the place of the wicked, which is fire. The word salám is from the same root as Islám. Islám, in fact, makes even this world an abode of peace for a true Muslim. Even in this life he makes his peace with his Lord, and he lives at peace with his fellow-men. So prominent is this idea of perfect peace in Islam that the Holy Prophet gave the following definition of a true Muslim: "The Muslim is he whose tongue or hand does not injure any Muslim." The peace of the next life, which is again and again called a garden or paradise, is, in fact, a continuation of the peace of mind which a Muslim finds in this very life.

1124 Throughout the Holy Qur-án the reward of virtue is spoken of as being much more than actual recompense, while evil is either spoken of as being forgiven or as being punished only with a like punishment. Thus in 42:25 and 26: "And He it is who accepts repentance from His servants and pardons the evil deeds, and He knows what you do. And He answers those who believe and do good, and gives them more out of His grace." And in 6:161: "Whoever brings a good deed he shall have ten like it, and whoever brings an evil deed he shall be recompensed only with the like of it" (see 849).

29 Therefore Allah is sufficient as a witness between us and you that we were quite unaware of your serving (us).

Ar. between you.

SECTION 4

Uniqueness of Divine Gifts

31–34. Uniqueness of Divine gifts in physical nature. 35, 36. Guidance is given by Allah. 37–40. Uniqueness of revelation.

31 Say: Who gives you sustenance from the heaven and the earth? or who controls the hearing and the sight? and who brings forth the living from the dead, and brings forth the dead from the living? And who regulates the affair? Then they will say: Allah. Say then: Will you not then guard (against evil)?

قُلْ مَنْ يَّرْزُقُكُمْ مِّنَ السَّمَآءِ وَالْاَرْضِ

39 Nay: they reject that of which they have no comprehensive knowledge, and the final sequel of it has not yet come to them;[1127] even thus did those before them reject (the truth); see then what was the end of the unjust.

بَلْ كَذَّبُوا بِمَا لَمْ يُحِيطُوا بِعِلْمِهِ وَلَمَّا يَأْتِهِمْ تَأْوِيلُهُ كَذَٰلِكَ كَذَّبَ الَّذِينَ مِن قَبْلِهِمْ فَانظُرْ كَيْفَ كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الظَّالِمِينَ ۝

1126 The Qur-án explains in clear words many of the most important principles of religion which are left ambiguous or obscure in the previous books. For instance, the Bible is obscure on the important principle of resurrection or life after death; Jesus himself when questioned by the Sadducees had to resort to an argument instead of quoting chapter and verse (Matt. 22:23, etc.). Similarly, the attributes of the Divine Being are not explained in clear words, and the result is the doctrine of the Divinity of Jesus Christ. The Qur-án fully explains all such points and finally settles all these questions.

1127 For the two significances of ta'wíl see 594. By the final sequel here is meant the consequence of the rejection of the truth. This is clear from what is said in 7:53: "Do they wait for aught but its final sequel? on the day when its final sequel comes about, those who neglected it before will say . . . Are there for us then any intercessors so that they should intercede on our behalf?"

1128 Compare 7:179: "They have hearts with which they do not understand, and they have eyes with which they do not see, and they have ears with which they do not hear." See 962.

1129 They will either recognize each other as they were in the world, or some of them will recognize the others who remained in unbelief and error (Rz).

1130 The significance of the words "to Us is their return" is that those who are warned shall be dealt with by Allah as they deserve, and the warning shall prove true. In the first part of the verse they are told that it is no concern of theirs whether the Prophet lives to punish them with his own hands or that punishment is executed by Allah in some other way. The verse, therefore, only lays stress on their approaching doom, and warns them that they must suffer for their evil ways. That a part of the punishment must come about in the lifetime of the Prophet is made clear by the next verse.

47 And every nation had an apostle;[1131] so when their apostle came, the matter was decided between them with justice and they shall not be dealt with unjustly.[1132]

48 And they say: When will this threat come about, if you are truthful?

49 Say: I do not control for
Ar. nor. myself any harm, or any benefit except what Allah pleases;[1133] every nation has a term; when their term comes, they shall not then remain behind for an hour, nor can they go before (their time).[1134]

50 Say: Tell me if His chastisement overtakes you by night or by day! what then is there of it that the guilty would hasten on?[1135]

51 And when it comes to pass, will you believe in it? What! now (you believe)! and already you wished to have it hastened on.

52 Then it shall be said to those who were unjust: Taste abiding chastisement;

وَلِكُلِّ أُمَّةٍ رَّسُولٌ ۖ فَإِذَا جَاءَ

قَدْ كُنتُم بِهِ تَسْتَعْجِلُونَ ○
ثُمَّ قِيلَ لِلَّذِينَ ظَلَمُوا ذُوقُوا
عَذَابَ الْخُلْدِ

1131 Compare 35:24, "And there is not a people but a warner has gone among them." This is one of the noblest lessons that the Qur-án has taught, and for which humanity will always be under the deepest obligation to the Holy Prophet. See 2055.

1132 The warning that their doom must overtake the opponents of the Holy Prophet is reasserted in these words. By "between them" must be understood the Apostle and those who charge him with falsehood, because when an apostle has preached the truth and that has been rejected by the people, the issue then is between the preacher and the rejecters.

1133 These are not the words which a pretender would utter. The words are those of an honest man who, without assuming any personal pretensions, preaches truth in all sincerity. The Holy Prophet is repeatedly made to disclaim any control of good and evil, so that he offers no low temptation to his followers. Truth must be accepted for its own sake, not for any hope of worldly gain or fear of worldly loss.

1134 The verse does not teach fatalism. It lays down a truth which no historian can deny. To every nation, as to every individual, is granted a term of life, and nations live and die like individuals. What are the circumstances which play a part in the lengthening out or shortening of that term is a different question, but that every nation must live its term of life, and die when that term is finished, is an undoubted truth.

1135 The coming of the doom by night or by day signifies its coming at a time when people are engaged in their revelries or occupied with their business transactions, so as to be utterly inattentive to the most vital questions on which depends the life of a nation. There is a gentle remonstrance conveyed in the words, "What then is there of it that the guilty would hasten on?" The doom approaches; why then should a people hasten on its approach by their guiltiness? It also indicates the Prophet's sorrow for their hastening on their doom.

you are not requited except for what you earned!

Ar. thee.

53 And they ask you: Is that true? Say: Aye! by my Lord! it is most surely the truth, and you will not escape.

SECTION 6

Mercy takes Precedence of Punishment

54–56. Redemption cannot be bought. 57, 58. The Qur-án is a mercy and a grace. 59, 60. Grace and mercy are always sent first.

Or, conceal.
Ar. it.

54 And if every soul that has done injustice had all that is in the earth, it would offer it for ransom, and they will manifest[1136] regret when they see the chastisement, and the matter shall be decided between them with justice and they shall not be dealt with unjustly.

55 Now surely Allah's is what is in the heavens and the earth; now surely Allah's promise is true, but most of them do not know.

56 He gives life and causes death, and to Him you shall be brought back.

57 O men! there has come to you indeed an admonition from your Lord and a healing for what is in the breasts and a guidance and a mercy for the believers.[1137]

58 Say: In the grace of Allah and in His mercy, in that they should rejoice; it is better than that which they gather.[1138]

1136 Asarra is one of the words which have contrary meanings. It means he concealed it as well as he manifested it.

1137 This verse and the next show how the Prophet was a mercy to them. They demanded punishment again and again, but they are told that Allah has sent to them first that in which they will find a healing and a guidance and a mercy for them, viz. the Holy Qur-án. Compare 29 : 51, where, in answer to a demand for a sign which should destroy them, the unbelievers are told: "Is it not enough for them that we have revealed to you the Book which is recited to them? Most surely there is mercy in this and a reminder for a people who believe." The Qur-án places mercy before punishment.

1138 They courted punishment and gathered everything that was evil for themselves, and they are told that instead of this they should rejoice in the grace and mercy of Allah which was vouchsafed to them through the Holy Qur-án; or the meaning may be that they reject

59 Say: Tell me what Allah has sent down for you of sustenance, then you make (a part) of it unlawful and (a part) lawful. Say: Has Allah commanded you or you forge a lie against Allah?[1139]

60 And what will be the thought of those who forge lies against Allah on the day of resurrection? Most surely Allah is the Lord of grace towards men, but most of them do not give thanks.

قُلْ أَرَءَيْتُم مَّآ أَنزَلَ ٱللَّهُ لَكُم مِّن

Protection of the Prophet and the Faithful

61-65. Good news for the faithful. 66-70. Unbelievers follow conjectures and tell lies.

Ar. thou art.
Ar. dost thou.

61 And you are not (engaged) in any affair, nor do you recite concerning it any portion of the Qur-án, nor do you do any work but We are witnesses over you when you enter into it, and there does not lie concealed from your Lord the weight of an atom in the earth or in the heaven, nor any thing less than that nor greater, but it is in a clear book.[1140]

62 Now surely the friends of Allah—they shall have no fear nor shall they grieve.[1141] what is for their spiritual and moral welfare and gather worldly goods which would be of no use to them in the life after death.

1139 Just as Allah gave them the means of their physical sustenance, He has also sent His grace and mercy for their spiritual welfare through revelation, yet they discard the latter as unlawful for themselves; or the reference may be to their declaring certain things to be unlawful for them, out of reverence for their idols.

1140 The clear book mentioned here is not, of course, a collection of written or printed sheets bound together. It is the book of the Divine law which makes every deed, good or evil, great or small, bring its reward.

1141 They shall have no fear regarding the future, nor shall they grieve for what they have already done. It is a prophecy regarding the future triumph of Islam, for when a man attains his object he does not grieve for the sacrifices he has made in a cause. As regards fear, there is no doubt that the condition of Muslims at the time of this revelation was one in which they feared utter extinction, and there is a promise here that an entire change would be brought about in this condition.

63 Those who believe and guarded (against evil).

64 They shall have good news[1142] in this world's life and in the hereafter; there is no changing the words of Allah;[1143] that is the mighty achievement.

65 And let not their speech grieve you; surely might is wholly Allah's; He is the Hearing, the Knowing.

Ar. thee.

66 Now, surely, whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is Allah's;[1144] and they do not (really) follow any associates who call on others besides Allah; they do not follow (any thing) but conjectures, and they only lie.

67 He it is who made for you the night that you might rest in it, and the day giving light; most surely there are signs in it for a people who would hear.

68 They say: Allah has taken a son (to Himself)! Glory be to Him; He is the Self-sufficient; His is what is in the heavens and what is in the earth; you have no authority for this; do you say against Allah what you do not know?

69 Say: Those who forge a lie against Allah shall not be successful.

1142 The Holy Prophet said: "Al-bushrá, or the good news, signifies good visions which the Muslim sees or which are shown to others regarding him" (Rz). Bkh also records a saying of the Holy Prophet to the same effect: "There has remained nothing of prophethood except mubashsharát. Asked what is meant by mubashsharát, he replied, The good visions."

1143 The words there is no changing the words of Allah, read with the context, show clearly that the words of Allah here signify the prophecies. It is the prophecy of the good reward for the faithful that is mentioned immediately before these words, and the meaning of there being no change is that the prophetic word must be fulfilled. Compare similar words used in 6 : 34 and 116 and 18 : 27, and the context in each case shows clearly that no other significance can be attached to the words.

1144 These words explain what is said in the previous verse. The Prophet is there told not to be grieved at what the unbelievers said regarding the suppression of his mission, for "surely might is wholly Allah's," and therefore the Divine cause could not be brought to naught. The same idea is expressed in the words "Whatever is in the heavens and whatever is in the earth is Allah's."

70 (It is only) a provision in this world, then to Us shall be their return, then We shall make them taste severe chastisement because they disbelieved.

مَتَاعٌ فِي الدُّنْيَا ثُمَّ إِلَيْنَا مَرْجِعُهُمْ ثُمَّ نُذِيقُهُمُ الْعَذَابَ الشَّدِيدَ بِمَا كَانُوا يَكْفُرُونَ ۝

71–73. Noah and his enemies. 74. Other prophets follow. 75–82. Moses' warning to Pharaoh.

71 And recite to them the a 901. story of Noah[a] when he said to his people: O my people! if my stay and my reminding (you) by the communications of Allah is hard on you—yet on Allah do I rely—then resolve upon your affair and (gather) your associates, then let not your affair remain dubious to you, then have it executed against me and give me no respite:[1145]

وَاتْلُ عَلَيْهِمْ نَبَأَ نُوحٍ إِذْ قَالَ لِقَوْمِهِ يٰقَوْمِ إِنْ كَانَ كَبُرَ عَلَيْكُمْ مَقَامِي وَتَذْكِيرِي بِآيٰتِ اللّٰهِ فَعَلَى اللّٰهِ تَوَكَّلْتُ فَأَجْمِعُوا أَمْرَكُمْ وَشُرَكَاءَكُمْ ثُمَّ لَا يَكُنْ أَمْرُكُمْ عَلَيْكُمْ غُمَّةً ثُمَّ اقْضُوا إِلَيَّ وَلَا تُنْظِرُونِ ۝

72 But if you turn back, I did not ask for any reward from you; my reward is only with Allah, and I am commanded that I should be of those who submit.

فَإِنْ تَوَلَّيْتُمْ فَمَا سَأَلْتُكُمْ مِنْ أَجْرٍ إِنْ أَجْرِيَ إِلَّا عَلَى اللّٰهِ وَأُمِرْتُ أَنْ أَكُونَ مِنَ الْمُسْلِمِينَ ۝

73 But they rejected him, so We delivered him and those with him in the ark, and We made them rulers and drowned those who rejected Our comb 902. munications;[b] see then what was the end of the (people) warned.

فَكَذَّبُوهُ فَنَجَّيْنٰهُ وَمَنْ مَعَهُ فِي الْفُلْكِ وَجَعَلْنٰهُمْ خَلٰٓئِفَ وَأَغْرَقْنَا الَّذِينَ كَذَّبُوا بِآيٰتِنَا فَانْظُرْ كَيْفَ كَانَ عَاقِبَةُ الْمُنْذَرِينَ ۝

74 Then did We raise up after him apostles to their people, so they came to them with clear arguments, but they would not believe in what they had rejected before; thus it is that We set seals upon the hearts of those who exceed the limits.[1146]

ثُمَّ بَعَثْنَا مِنْ بَعْدِهِ رُسُلًا إِلٰى قَوْمِهِمْ فَجَاءُوهُمْ بِالْبَيِّنٰتِ فَمَا كَانُوا لِيُؤْمِنُوا بِمَا كَذَّبُوا بِهِ مِنْ قَبْلُ كَذٰلِكَ نَطْبَعُ عَلٰى قُلُوبِ الْمُعْتَدِينَ ۝

1145 The words of Noah no doubt convey a challenge similar to that thrown out to the opponents of the Holy Prophet, who are told that their most energetic plans could not do him the least harm.

1146 This verse explains how seals are set upon the hearts. It is not that a seal is set upon the hearts first, and people thereafter refuse to accept the truth owing to their hearts being already sealed; they first reject, then grow persistent in the rejection of the truth.

75 Then did We send up after them Moses and Aaron to Pharaoh and his chiefs[a] with Our signs,[b] but they showed pride and they were a guilty people.

76 So when the truth came to them from Us they said: This is most surely clear enchantment!

77 Moses said: Do you say (this) of the truth when it has come to you? Is it enchantment? And the enchanters are not successful.

Ar. hast thou.

78 They said: Have you come to us to turn us away from what we found our fathers upon, and (that) greatness in the land should be for you two? and we are not going to believe in you.

79 And Pharaoh said: Bring to me every skilful enchanter.

80 And when the enchanters came, Moses said to them: Cast down what you have to cast.

81 So when they cast down, Moses said to them: What you have brought is deception; surely Allah will make it naught;[c] surely Allah does not make the work of mischief-makers to thrive.

82 And Allah will show the truth to be the truth by His words, though the guilty may be averse (to it).

They do not ponder over the truth, but having rejected once, go on opposing its progress without ever reflecting on it. This condition is described as the setting of the seal on the heart, because the heart, being made for reflection, would no doubt be fitly described as being sealed when it ceases to reflect. Hence it is that the seal is said to be set upon the hearts of those who exceed the limits. The setting of the seal is thus the consequence of some previous deeds.

83–87. Moses encourages his people and directs them to pray. 88, 89. Pharaoh's heart is hardened. 90–92. He is drowned.

83 But none believed in Moses except the offspring of his people, on account of the fear of Pharaoh and their chiefs, lest he should persecute them; and most surely Pharaoh was lofty in the land; and most surely he was of the extravagant.[1147]

84 And Moses said: O my people! if you believe in Allah, then rely on Him (alone) if you submit (to Allah).

85 So they said: On Allah we rely: O our Lord! make us not subject to the persecution of the unjust people:[1148]

Or, a trial for.

86 And do Thou deliver us by Thy mercy from the unbelieving people.

87 And We revealed to Moses and his brother, saying: Take for your people houses to abide in Egypt and make your houses places of worship[1149] and keep up prayer, and give good news to the believers.

88 And Moses said: Our Lord! surely Thou hast given to Pharaoh and his chiefs finery and riches in this world's life, to this end,[1150] our Lord, 1147 Moses was no doubt a prophet to the Israelites, and by his people are apparently meant the Israelites. The meaning is that at first even his own people would not believe in him, on account of Pharaoh's fear, which was quite natural. Some think that his refers to Pharaoh, because some of Pharaoh's people, such as his wife (66:11), and a believer (40:28) and the enchanters had believed in Moses.

1148 The word fitnah here means an occasion of persecution (Kf, JB). If we take the alternative significance, the meaning of the passage would still be the same, for make us not a trial for the unjust people would mean that their punishment at the hands of Pharaoh's people may not harden the hearts of the latter, "for they would say: Had these people followed the truth they would not have been thus subject to disgrace at our hands" (Kf).

1149 Qiblah here means a place of worship (S, Kf), because the qiblah is that facing which one prays, and therefore it indicates a place of worship. The Israelites were obliged to pray in their houses because they did not enjoy full religious liberty in Egypt and had no public places of worship.

1150 The lám here is the lám used to indicate the consequence of a thing (Rz), and hence I translate it as such.

that they lead (people) astray from Thy way: our Lord! destroy their riches and harden their hearts[1151] so that they believe not until they see the painful chastisement.

89 He said: The prayer of you both has indeed been accepted, therefore continue in the right way and do not follow the path of those who do not know.

90 And We made the children of Israel to pass through the sea,[a] then Pharaoh and his hosts followed them for oppression and tyranny; until when drowning overtook him, he said: I believe that there is no god but He in whom the children of Israel believe and I am of those who submit.[1152]

91 What! now! and indeed you disobeyed before and you were of the mischief-makers.

92 But We will this day deliver you with your body that you may be a sign to those after you, and most surely the majority of the people are heedless to Our communications.[1153]

1151 شدّ عليه means he made an assault upon him in war, and shadda-hū also means he strengthened him or bound it (a thing) firmly or fastly. The phrase اشدد على قلوبهم is generally taken as meaning harden, or bind their hearts so as to set a seal upon them. The adoption of the alternative significance makes the two parallel phrases اطمس على اموالهم and اشدد على قلوبهم carry a similar significance, the assaulting of their hearts being equivalent to the destruction of the things which were nearest to their hearts—the finery and riches of this life.

1152 Commenting on Exod. 9 : 16, "And in very deed for this cause have I raised thee up for to show in thee my power," the Talmud says: "Recognize the power of repentance in the case of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, who rebelled excessively against the Most High: Who is God that I should hearken to His voice? (Exod. 5 : 2). But with the same that sinned he did penance: Who is like Thee, O Lord, among the gods? " (Rodwell). Whether the comment is strange, as Rodwell thinks, or otherwise, there appears to be no doubt that in the agonies of death pronounced atheists have sometimes recognized the existence of God.

1153 That the body was really cast ashore, though the Bible does not mention it, is clear from the fact that the body of Rameses II, who is regarded as the Pharaoh of Moses, has been discovered as preserved among the mummies in Egypt (*Enc. been known to the Holy Prophet, and here we have a clear example of the supernatural knowledge contained in the Holy Qur-án.

1154 The occurrence of this passage in a Meccan sura, when the Holy Prophet had not as yet occasion to address the Jews directly nor had they shown their disagreement, is a prophetical announcement as to their later attitude towards him, when knowledge of the Prophet's advent in accordance with the prophecies and tests found in their books came to them. The first part of this passage is taken by some to refer to the Israelites who were with, and came after, Moses, and by others, among whom is I'Ab, to the Medina Jews (Rz). But to whomsoever the reference in that passage may be, the disagreement must be taken to be the disagreement with respect to the Holy Prophet.

1155 It should be noted that the person addressed in the Holy Qur-án is not always the Holy Prophet, though the form may be singular, as here. It is very often the reader. Nor does the form revealed to you (literally thee) show that the Prophet is meant, for the Holy Qur-án is in many places spoken of as being revealed to all the people, as, for instance, in what has been revealed to us (2 : 136), and in "We have revealed to you a Book" (21 : 10). And the opening words of the next section make it clear that the reader is addressed, because there we have: "Say, O people! if you are in doubt as to my religion." Throughout the Holy Qur-án the Holy Prophet appears as having the greatest certainty about the word which was revealed to him, so much so that he never entertained the slightest doubt about the truth of the promises of future success and triumph when to the material eye there appeared nothing around but failure and disappointment.

1156 That is, ask them whether previous revelation does not contain clear prophecies of the advent of the Prophet.

97 Though every sign should come to them, until they witness the painful chastisement.

98 And wherefore was there not a town which should believe so that their belief should have profited them but the people of Jonah? When they believed, We removed from them the chastisement of disgrace in this world's life and We gave them provision till a time.[1157]

Ar. thy. 99 And if your Lord had pleased, surely all those who are in the earth would have believed, all of them; will you (Ar. wilt thou.) then force men till they become believers?[1158]

100 And it is not for a soul to believe except by Allah's permission; and He casts uncleanness on those who will not understand.[1159]

101 Say: Consider what is it that is in the heavens and the earth; and signs and warners do not avail a people who would not believe.[1160]

102 What do they wait for then but the like of the days of those who passed away before them? Say: Wait then; surely I too am with you of those who wait.

1157 Compare Jonah 3:10: "And God saw their works that they turned from their evil way, and God repented of the evil that He had said that He would do unto them, and He did it not." References to Jonah are contained in the Holy Qur-án in 6:87, 10:98, 21:87, 39:139–148, 68:48–50. He bears a resemblance to the Holy Prophet in that his people benefited by the warning, as did the Arabs by the warning of the Holy Prophet, though after much opposition. Jonah is thus the type of a prophet whose people were dealt with mercifully. It was in reference to this aspect of his character that the Holy Prophet is reported to have said: "Do not give me preference over Jonah."

1158 Compare 2:256: "There is no compulsion in religion." The reference is to the great zeal of the Holy Prophet and his over-exerting himself in preaching the truth. Compare "Maybe you will kill yourself with grief, sorrowing after them, if they believe not in this announcement" (18:6).

1159 Those who will not understand the truth will find uncleanness cast on them. That is only natural. The word rijs also means punishment (LL), and adopting this significance, the meaning of the passage is equally clear, viz. those who will not care for the warning and guard themselves against it must receive the punishment.

1160 That is, there is an abundance of signs in nature itself for the direction of man.

103 Then We deliver Our apostles and those who believe —even so (now), it is binding on Us (that) We deliver the believers.

107 And if Allah should afflict you with harm, then there is none to remove it but He; and if He intends good to you there is none to repel His grace; He brings it to whom He pleases of His servants; and He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

وَإِنْ يَمْسَسْكَ اللَّهُ بِضُرٍّ فَلَا كَاشِفَ لَهُ إِلَّا هُوَ وَإِنْ يُرِدْكَ بِخَيْرٍ فَلَا رَادَّ لِفَضْلِهِ يُصِيبُ بِهِ مَنْ يَشَاءُ مِنْ عِبَادِهِ وَهُوَ الْغَفُورُ الرَّحِيمُ

108 Say: O people! indeed there has come to you the truth from your Lord, therefore whoever goes aright, he goes aright only for the good of his own soul, and whoever goes astray, he goes astray only to the detriment of it, and I am not a custodian over you.

قُلْ يَا أَيُّهَا النَّاسُ قَدْ جَاءَكُمُ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَبِّكُمْ فَمَنِ اهْتَدَىٰ فَإِنَّمَا يَهْتَدِي لِنَفْسِهِ وَمَنْ ضَلَّ فَإِنَّمَا يَضِلُّ عَلَيْهَا وَمَا أَنَا عَلَيْكُمْ بِوَكِيلٍ

CHAPTER XI

HÚD

REVEALED AT MECCA

(10 sections and 123 verses)

Abstract:

Sec. 1. A warning.
Sec. 2. Truth of revelation.
Sec. 3–8. Histories of Noah, Húd, Sálih, Lot, and Shu'aib.
Sec. 9. Punishment of the wicked is a Divine law.
Sec. 10. The believers should shun evil.

The Title.

THE name of this chapter is taken from that of the Prophet Húd, whose history is referred to herein, because he seems to have been the first prophet to a people living within the Arabian peninsula.

Subject-matter.

I need not dilate upon its subject-matter. The opponents are warned first, and the truth of the revelation is most forcibly asserted in the second section by challenging them to produce ten chapters like it, and by showing that the truth of the Qur-án is borne witness to by previous prophets. A cruel and persecuting enemy is then warned of the evil fate of previous people who opposed the well-known prophets Noah, Húd, Sálih, Lot, and Shu'aib. Moses is only briefly referred to in the ninth section, which really demonstrates the Divine law that evil must be followed by evil consequences. The last section requires the Holy Prophet and his followers to maintain the firmest attitude in the cause of righteousness and truth.

Context and date of revelation.

The chapter seems to be a complement to the last, which deals mostly with abstract questions relating to the truth of revelation, while this illustrates the truth of those questions by referring to the histories of former prophets. It is wholly a Meccan revelation, and must be placed at about the same period as the last chapter. Its connection with the previous chapter is thus also clear.

SECTION 1

A Warning

1–4. Mercy and punishment. 5. Concealed enmity. 6, 7. Providence of Allah. 8. Punishment is deferred.

In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

2 That you shall not serve (any) but Allah, surely I am a warner for you from Him and a giver of good news,

3 And that ask forgiveness of your Lord, then turn to Him; He will provide you with a goodly provision to an appointed term and bestow His grace on every one endowed with grace,[1161] and if you turn back, then surely I fear for you the chastisement of a great day.

4 To Allah is your return, and He has power over all things.

5 Now surely they fold up their breasts[1162] that they may conceal (their enmity) from Him: now surely, when they put their garments as a covering,[1163] He knows what they conceal and what they make public; surely He knows what is in the breasts.

1161 The zī-faḍl, lit. a possessor of grace, signifies one on whom Allah bestows His grace, so that the meaning is that every one on whom grace is bestowed has that grace bestowed upon him by Allah. Or the zī-faḍl is one whose good is in excess of his evil, because faḍl also signifies excess.

1162 ثنى صدره (lit. he folded his breast or bosom) means he concealed enmity in his breast or bosom) TA-LL), and hence the meaning of يثنون صدورهم is they conceal in their breasts enmity and hatred for the Prophet (JB), or the meaning may be, they bend or turn their breasts from the truth (Kf).

1163 استغشى ثوبه means he covered himself with his garment in order that he might not see nor hear (Q-LL). According to Rgh استغشوا ثيابهم means they made their garments a covering over their ears, and this signifies their holding back from lending an ear, or it is an allusion to their running away.

PART XII

6 And there is no animal in the earth but on Allah is the sustenance of it, and He knows its resting-place and its depository; all (things) are in a manifest book.

7 And He it is Who created the heavens and the earth in six periods[a]—and His dominion[b] (extends) on the water[1164]—that He might manifest you, which of you is best in action,[1165] and if you say, Surely you shall be raised up after death, those who disbelieve would certainly say: This is nothing but clear deceit.[1166]

8 And if We hold back from them the chastisement until a stated period of time, they will certainly say: What prevents it? Now surely on the day when it will come to them, it shall not be averted from them and that which they scoffed at shall beset them.[1167]

1164 The meaning of 'arsh has been explained in 895. As all life is produced from water, hence the special mention of the extension of Allah's dominion on the water along with the creation of heaven and earth, because without water life would have been impossible. Compare 21 : 30, " And We have made of water every thing living."

1165 The object of the creation of man and all that has been brought into existence for him is that he should do good, because it is goodness that Allah loves. The two words balá and ibtilá are synonymous according to TA, and signify the manifestation of good qualities and mean qualities.

1166 The use of the word siḥr here is a clear indication that this word is used in the Holy Qur-án in the sense of deceit or falsehood. Rz gives three explanations of the word siḥr, under this verse, and all three corroborate this statement. The first explanation is that of Qaffál, and that is that it is here equivalent to khadí'at, or deceit, the significance of the passage being that by talking of a life after death the Prophet only deceived men so that they should not enjoy the good things of this life as they desire. The second explanation is that it means báṭil, i.e. falsehood. The third is that the life after death is called siḥr, because it is a doctrine upheld by the Qur-án, which was called siḥr, because it fascinated men and was, as it were, an enchantment.

1167 The stated period of time is thus referred to in 8 : 33 : " But Allah was not going to chastise them while you were among them."

SECTION 2

Truth of Revelation

9–12. Mercy predominates. 13, 14. Uniqueness of revelation. 15, 16. But only those benefit who act on it. 17. Witnesses to the truth of the Qur-án. 18–24. The opponents and the faithful.

9 And if We make man taste mercy from Us, then take it off from him, most surely he is despairing, ungrateful.

10 And if We make him taste a favour after distress has afflicted him, he will certainly say: The evils are gone away from me. Most surely he is exulting, boasting;

11 Except those who are patient and do good, they shall have forgiveness and a great reward.

12 Then, may it be that you will give up part of what is revealed to you and your breast will become straitened by it because they say: Why has not a treasure been sent down upon him or an angel come with him? You are only a warner; and Allah is custodian over all things.[1167A]

13 Or, do they say: He has forged it. Say: Then bring ten forged chapters like it and call upon whom you can besides Allah, if you are truthful.[1168]

مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ إِنْ كُنْتُمْ صَادِقِينَ ۝

1167A It should be noted that this passage does not signify, as may be supposed, that the Prophet intended to give up any part of the revelation: on the other hand, it is a strong statement indicating that he could not do it. It is a peculiar use of the word la'alla. Rz says: "You say of a person when you intend to show his remoteness from a thing: Maybe (Ar. la'allaka) you have power to do such a thing."

1168 This challenge is contained in four different chapters of the Holy Qur-án. (1) In 17:88: "Say: If men and jinn should combine together to bring the like of this Qur-án, they could not bring the like of it though some of them were aiders of others," where the like of the whole of the Qur-án is required to be produced. Then in the verse under discussion the demand is reduced to ten chapters, and lastly in 10:38 and 2:23 they are required to produce a single chapter like the Qur-án. Another point worth noting is that while in some chapters men and jinn are challenged, in others shuhadá, which means their great or learned men, is substituted for jinn, thus showing that jinn in such places means only their great men. The Qur-án does not call for a like in any particular qualification, but for a like in every characteristic and every qualification of the Holy Book. See 36.

14 But if they do not answer you, then know that it is revealed by Allah's knowledge and that there is no god but He: will you then submit?[1169]

15 Whoever desire this world's life and its finery, We will pay them in full their deeds therein, and they shall not be made to suffer loss in respect of them.

16 These are they for whom there is nothing but fire in the hereafter, and what they wrought in it shall go for nothing, and vain is what they do.[1170]

17 Is he then who has with him clear proof from his Lord, and a witness from Him recites it and before it (is) the Book of Moses, a guide and a mercy? These believe in it: and whoever of the (different) parties disbelieves in it, the fire is his promised place; so be not in doubt about it, surely it is the truth from your Lord, but most men do not believe.[1171]

هَٰؤُلَاءِ الَّذِينَ كَذَبُوا عَلَىٰ رَبِّهِمْ أَلَا لَعْنَةُ
اللَّهِ عَلَى الظَّالِمِينَ ۝

1169 The unbelievers are addressed here, the meaning being that if the false gods or the leaders should not answer their devotees when they call on them to assist them in producing a like of the Qur-án, then at least no doubt should be left in their minds that the Qur-án is not the work of the Prophet, but a revelation from the Divine Being.

1170 That is, their opposition to the Holy Prophet shall be fruitless.

1171 The several statements made in this verse require to be explained. He who has with him clear proof from his Lord applies to every believer in the truth of the Holy Qur-án, the words these believe in it, occurring farther on, making this clear. The witness from Allah who recites it is the Holy Prophet, who is called a witness elsewhere, as being an exemplar for the believers. Besides being a clear proof in itself, the Holy Qur-án has a further evidence of its truth in the book of Moses, which is, therefore, called a guide and a mercy, because it contains clear prophecies of the truth of the Holy Prophet. The meaning of the whole passage is: He who, being a believer in the truth of the Holy Qur-án, has clear proof from his Lord; who has an exemplar for him in the person of the Holy Prophet, and has additional testimony of his truth in the book of Moses: is he like him who loves this world and does not care for the truth? The latter statement, being included in the previous verses, is omitted here.

19 Who turn away from the path of Allah and desire to make it crooked; and they are disbelievers in the hereafter.

20 These shall not escape in the earth,[1173] nor shall they have any guardians besides Allah; the chastisement shall be doubled for them; they could not bear to hear and they did not see.[1174]

21 These are they who have lost their souls, and what they forged is gone from them.

22 Truly in the hereafter they are the greatest losers.

23 Surely (as to) those who believe and do good and humble themselves to their Lord, these are the dwellers of the garden, in it they will abide.

24 The likeness of the two parties is as the blind and the deaf, and the seeing and the hearing; are they equal in condition? Will you not then mind?

SECTION 3

History of Noah

25–34. Noah preaches, is opposed and warns. 35. Opponents of the Holy Prophet given a similar warning.

25 And certainly We sent a 901 Noah[a] to his people: Surely I am a plain warner for you:[1175]

26 That you shall not serve any but Allah, surely I fear for you the chastisement of a painful day.

ولقد أرسلنا نوحا إلى قومه إني لكم نذير مبين ۝
أن لا تعبدوا إلا الله إني أخاف عليكم عذاب يوم أليم ۝

1172 The witnesses are according to some the angels, according to others the prophets, according to others still the believers (Rz).

1173 They would not escape the chastisement if Allah intended to punish them in this world (Kf). A'jaza-hû, of which mu'jiz is a noun-form, may also be translated as he found him without strength or ability, or he frustrated his power.

1174 The phrase ما كانوا يستطيعون السمع does not signify that they were not gifted with the organs of hearing, nor that they were utterly deprived of the power to accept. It is only to show their great hatred of the truth, so that they could not bear even to hear what the Prophet said, and ran away when he spoke.

1175 In every Prophet's message to his people, the chief points to which attention is called, are always to believe in the Unity of the Divine Being and to mend their ways. It is those very points on which stress is laid in the message of the Holy Prophet. This has led

27 But the chiefs of those who disbelieved from among his people said: We do not

28 He said: O my people! tell me if I have with me clear proof from my Lord, and He has granted me mercy from Himself and it has been made obscure to you; shall we constrain you to (accept) it while you are averse from it?
29 And, O my people! I ask you not for wealth in return for it; my reward is only with Allah and I am not going to drive away those who believe; surely they shall meet their Lord, but I consider you a people who are ignorant:
30 And, O my people! who will help me against Allah if I drive them away? Will you not then mind?
31 And I do not say to you that I have the treasures of Allah; and I do not know the unseen, nor do I say that I am an angel; nor do I say about those whom your eyes hold in mean estimation (that) Allah will never grant them (any) good—Allah knows best what is in their souls—for then some Christian critics to think that the Holy Prophet was putting his own experience into the mouth of others. The fact is, however, whatever may have been the details of the messages of the prophets of different nations to their people, the broad principles of the preachings of all of them have always been the Unity of Allah and the brotherhood of man: and as the Holy Qur-án is not concerned with details, it simply lays stress upon the broad doctrines which are common to their preaching, because it was on these two principles that the first message of Islam was given to the world, and during the whole of the Meccan period the Qur-án mainly dealt with only these broad principles. Similarly, the Holy Qur-án does not enter into details of how each prophet was received by his people, for its object is to illustrate in the life of each of them the prophesied final triumph of the Holy Prophet and the utter discomfiture of his enemies, and therefore prominence is given only to these two points. The Qur-án is not a book of history, hence there is no reason why it should enter into all the details of history.

History of Noah

36–48. Noah's opponents are drowned. 49. A like fate awaits the Holy Prophet's opponents.

36 And it was revealed to Noah: That none of your people will believe except those who have already believed, therefore do not grieve at what they do:

Ar thy.

وَأُوحِيَ إِلٰى نُوحٍ أَنَّهُ لَنْ يُّؤْمِنَ مِنْ قَوْمِكَ

37 And make the ark before Our eyes and (according to) Our revelation, and do not speak to Me in respect of those who are unjust: surely they shall be drowned.

38 And he began to make the ark; and whenever the chiefs from among his people passed by him they laughed at him. He said: If you laugh at us, surely we too laugh at you as you laugh (at us).[1177]

وَيَصْنَعُ الْفُلْكَ وَكُلَّمَا مَرَّ عَلَيْهِ

تَسْخَرُوا مِنَّا فَإِنَّا نَسْخَرُ مِنْكُمْ كَمَا تَسْخَرُونَ ۝

1176 The change shows positively that the unbelievers of Mecca are meant, and the reference is to their calling the Qur-án a forgery.

This shows that the histories of prophets are referred to in the Holy Qur-án, not for the purpose of those histories, but as representing the history of the Holy Prophet himself.

1177 Rodwell quotes Midr Tauchuma: "They laughed and jeered at him in their words." It was only natural that they should have laughed; it is the gravest error to think that anything relating to these patriarchs could not have happened that is not found in the Bible. The laughing of the righteous at the wicked is not to be taken literally. You laugh at a thing to show your contempt for it; even as the unbelieving people showed their contempt for the making of the ark, the believer in Divine promise shows his contempt for the unbelief of the others; the reason is given in the words as you laugh at us. Kf gives another significance: If you think us ignorant on account of what we are doing, we consider you ignorant on account of your unbelief . . . because your thinking us ignorant is due really to your own ignorance.

39 So shall you know who it is on whom will come a chastisement which will disgrace him, and on whom will lasting chastisement come down.

1178 فار التنور is translated by Sale as meaning the oven poured forth water, by Palmer the oven boiled, and by Rodwell the earth's surface boiled up, all three at the same time adding a note that the word tannúr also signifies a reservoir (Palmer), or a reservoir of water (Rodwell), or a place whence waters spring forth or where they are collected (Sale). It is therefore strange to find the words translated as they are, in spite of the translators' knowledge that the word has another significance better suited to the context. But it is, I think, more a misconception of the word fára which has led to the error, than that of the word tannúr. Fára means it (the water) boiled, or it (the fire) raged, but neither of these significances is applicable here, as the oven could not boil, nor could it rage, because tannúr does not mean fire. But fára has another significance. LL says: "Fára, said of water, signifies also it welled or came forth from the earth or ground (Mgh); it appeared, spouting forth from the spring or source (TA)." Hence also fawwárah signifies a spring or source of water. And tannúr, according to the same authority, means the highest part of the earth or ground . . . (TA); any place from which water pours forth (M, Q); a place where the water of a valley collects (M, Q). Now these two significances of the two words fára and tannúr so suit each other, and each so suits the context, that they would appeal even to a man of ordinary intelligence. We know, from v. 43, where Noah's son is made to say: "I will betake myself for refuge to a mountain," that there must have been a valley, and hence, in my opinion, it is the only reasonable interpretation of the words. Another interpretation is that given by the Caliph 'Ali, who is said to have interpreted these words as meaning the daybreak rose. The word tannúr, which also means an oven, has given rise to a number of ridiculous stories which must be rejected.

1179 Each of a pair is called in Arabic a zauj, and hence the dual form zaujain means only a pair, and زوجين اثنين accordingly signifies one male and one female of each pair (Rz). By all things are apparently meant all things needed by Noah, and not all things existing in the world, which was too extensive for Noah to travel over the whole of it.

sailing and its anchoring; most surely my Lord is Forgiving, Merciful.

42 And it moved on with them amid waves like mountains;[1180] and Noah called out to his son, and he was aloof: O my son! embark with us and be not with the unbelievers.[1181]

43 He said: I will betake myself for refuge to a mountain that shall protect me from the water. He said: There is no protector to day from Allah's punishment but He Who has mercy;[1182] and a wave intervened between them, so he was of the drowned.

Ar. amr (lit., commandment).

44 And it was said: O earth, swallow down your water, and O cloud, clear away; and the water was made to abate and the affair was decided, and the ark rested on the Judi,[1183] and it was said: Away with the unjust people.

1180 It should be borne in mind that the Qur-án does not give any countenance to the story that the deluge covered the whole surface of the earth. On the other hand, it repeatedly speaks of Noah as having been sent to his people, i.e. to a single tribe, and according to the Divine law the punishment must have overtaken merely his people, who not only rejected the truth, but also sought to destroy Noah and his followers. The mention of the water flowing from the valley also shows that it was only a tract of land that was deluged, and not the entire earth. The taking in of a pair of all things does not mean that Noah had travelled over the whole earth and taken a pair of every living animal wherever it could be found: in that case he would have spent perhaps a thousand years in collecting pairs of all living creatures on earth, and then without success. The order is clearly to take in pairs of all those things that he considered necessary for himself and those who were with him in the ark. The Bible narrative, which makes God "bring a flood of water upon the earth to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life from under heaven," and then makes Noah collect and lodge in an ark a pair of each of the thousands of animals and birds, cannot be accepted by any reasonable person.

1181 The son referred to here is said to have been the son of Noah's wife by a former husband. This is corroborated by a second reading, according to which 'Ali read ibna-há, i.e. her son (Rz). Most of the early Muslims held that view (JB). The mention of the same person in v. 44 lends further support to this conviction, as there he is called min ahlí, which may be translated as meaning from my wife. Some have held him to be a grandson of Noah, Can'aan by name, the word ibn being equally applicable to a son and a grandson.

1182 Man rahima may either mean He who has mercy, referring to Allah, the significance being that only the Merciful One can save from the punishment, or the phrase may mean he on whom He has mercy; the meaning of the passage in this case is: no one can protect from the chastisement sent by Allah, but he only shall be protected on whom Allah has mercy.

1183 The Greek name of this mountain is said to be Gordyoei, being "one of those mountains which divide Armenia on the south from Mesopotamia" (Sale). According to the same authority, "the tradition which affirms the ark to have rested on those mountains must have been very ancient, since it is a tradition of the Chaldeans themselves (Berosus, apud Joseph); the Chaldee paraphrasts consent to their opinion, which obtained very much formerly, especially among the Eastern Christians. To confirm it we are told that the remainders of the ark were to be seen on the Gordyœan mountains. Berosus and Abydenus both declare there was such a report in their time, the first observing that several of the inhabitants thereabout scraped the pitch off the planks as a rarity, and carried it about them for an amulet; and the latter saying that they used the wood of the vessel against many diseases with wonderful success. The relics of the ark were also to be seen in the time of Epiphanius, if we are to believe him (Epiph. Hæres, 18); we are also told that the Emperor Heraclias went from the town of Thamanin up to the mountain Al-judi, and saw the place of the ark (Elmacin, I. i. c. 1.). Formerly there also existed a famous monastery, called the monastery of the ark, on some of those mountains." But the word as it stands in Arabic may simply be a derivative of júd, meaning excellence or approval, the yá being added to denote the relation.

1184 The meaning of انه عمل غير صالح is made clear by the parallel phrase انه ليس من اهلك the personal pronoun hú referring in both cases to the same person. It should be borne in mind that when it is meant to speak of a person as the very embodiment of a certain quality, he is designated not as the possessor of that quality, but as that quality itself. Thus you say of a person انه كرم i.e. surely he is excellence, or انه جود i.e. surely he is charity, meaning he is the very embodiment of excellence or charity. In the Qur-án we have البر من امن i.e. righteousness is he who believes, etc. (2 : 177), the meaning apparently being that such a person is the embodiment of righteousness. Therefore انه عمل غير صالح means surely he is the embodiment of other than good deeds. A second reading which uses the preterite 'amila, meaning he did, instead of the infinitive 'amalun, meaning deed, also corroborates this significance.

History of Húd

50–57. Húd preaches, is rejected and warns. 58–60. His opponents are destroyed.

a 903. b 905.

50 And to 'Ad[a] (We sent) their brother Húd.[b] He said: O my people! serve Allah, you have no god other than He; you are nothing but forgers (of lies):

51 O my people! I do not ask of you any reward for it; my reward is only with Him who created me: do you not then understand?

52 And, O my people! ask forgiveness of your Lord, then turn to Him, He will send on you clouds pouring down abundance of rain and add strength to your strength, and do not turn back guilty.

Ar. thou hast. Ar. thy. Ar. thee.

53 They said: O Húd! you have not brought to us any clear argument and we are not going to desert our gods for your word, and we are not believers in you:

يَا قَوْمِ لَا أَسْأَلُكُمْ عَلَيْهِ أَجْرًا ۖ إِنْ

لَكَ بِمُؤْمِنِينَ ۝

1185 The announcement relating to the unseen is not the history of Noah, but the fate of the Meccans opposed to the Holy Prophet, as read in that history. The words that follow—be patient—are a clear indication of what the announcement relating to the unseen was, for patient waiting was needed for the fate of the Holy Prophet's opponents, not for anything relating to Noah's history. At the end of the last section there was also a similar reference to the opponents of the Holy Prophet; compare also the 26th chapter, in which the history of every prophet is concluded with the words: "Most surely there is a sign in this, but most of them will not believe," where the fate of the opponents of the Holy Prophet is indicated as being identical with the fate of those who opposed earlier prophets.

54 We cannot say aught but that some of our gods have smitten you with evil. He said : Surely I call Allah to witness, and do you bear witness too, that I am clear of what you associate (with Allah)

Ar. thee.

55 Besides Him, therefore scheme against me all together ; then give me no respite :

Ar. holds it by its forelock.

57 But if you turn back, then indeed I have delivered to you the message with which I have been sent to you, and my Lord will bring another people in your place, and you cannot do Him any harm : surely my Lord is the Preserver of all things.

58 And when Our decree came to pass, We delivered Húd and those who believed with him with mercy from Us, and We delivered them from a hard chastisement.

59 And this was 'Ád ; they denied the communications of their Lord, and disobeyed His apostles and followed the bidding of every insolent opposer (of truth).

60 And they were overtaken by curse in this world[a] and on the resurrection day ; now surely 'Ád disbelieved in their Lord ; now surely, away with 'Ád, the people of Húd.

63 He said: O my people! tell me if I have clear proof from my Lord and He has granted to me mercy from Himself—who will then help me against Allah if I disobey Him? Therefore you do not add to me other than loss:

64 And, O my people! this will be (as) Allah's she-camel for you,[c] a sign, therefore leave her to pasture on Allah's earth and do not touch her with evil, for then a near chastisement will overtake you.

History of Lot

69 And certainly Our messengers[1187] came to Abraham with good news. They said: Peace. Peace, said he, and he made no delay in bringing a roasted calf.

70 But when he saw that their hands were not extended towards it,[1188] he deemed them strange and conceived fear of them. They said: Fear not, surely we are sent to Lot's people.

إِنَّا أُرْسِلْنَا إِلَىٰ قَوْمِ لُوطٍ ۝

71 And his wife was standing (by), so she laughed, then We gave her the good news of Isaac and after Isaac of (a son's son) Jacob.[1189]

وَامْرَأَتُهُ قَائِمَةٌ فَضَحِكَتْ فَبَشَّرْنَاهَا

72 She said: O wonder![1190] shall I bear a son when I am an extremely old woman and this my husband an extremely old man? most surely this is a wonderful thing.

قَالَتْ يَا وَيْلَتَىٰ أَأَلِدُ وَأَنَا عَجُوزٌ وَهَٰذَا
بَعْلِي شَيْخًا ۖ إِنَّ هَٰذَا لَشَيْءٌ
عَجِيبٌ ۝

1187 Compare Gen. 18 : 1–7. The Qur-án does not expressly say that they were angels.

1188 This, however, contradicts the Bible statement (Gen. 18 : 8), which says that they ate the roasted calf and other food provided by Abraham. But the contrary, as Rodwell notes, was maintained by the Rabbins, and he directs attention to Is. Baba Mezia, fol. 86 : "They made as though they ate."

1189 Compare Gen. 18 : 10–12. The mention of a son's son (Jacob) was to show that that son should have progeny. It should be borne in mind that wará, which ordinarily signifies behind or before, also means a son's son—TA: الوراء ولد الولد Hence I have translated it as such. And elsewhere the Holy Qur-án says و يعقوب نافلة where the addition of the word náfilah to Jacob's name is clearly to show that he was a grandson.

1190 The original words are yá wailatá, and as wail means ordinarily woe, the meaning would appear to be Woe is me! But as these words are expressive of grief and sorrow, while the occasion on which they are spoken is one of joy, I render them differently. It should be remembered, however, that, according to the best authorities, wail is used to express wonder, whether the occasion be one of weal or woe. Thus we have in TA: "And wail does occur

Ar. dost thou.

73 They said: Do you wonder at Allah's bidding? the mercy of Allah and His blessings are on you, O people of the house,[1191] surely He is Praised, Glorious.

77 And when Our messengers came to Lot,[a] he was grieved for them, and he lacked strength to protect them,[1193] and said: This is a hard day.

in the sense of wonder." The commentators consider this to be the meaning here (Kf, Bd). According to AH it is a word which is frequently used by women when anything causing wonder occurs to them.

1191 اهل البيت includes the wife of a person: in fact, it is Abraham's wife that is primarily addressed here. The same phrase in the case of the Holy Prophet (33 : 33) includes his wives as well as his children.

1192 Compare Gen. 18 : 21-23.

1193 Zar', which primarily signifies the stretching forth the arm (LL), is used in the sense of power or ability (TA, TH, Kf, JB), and hence the phrase ضاق بالامر ذرعا means he was unable to do the thing, or he lacked strength to accomplish the affair (Q-LL).

1194 Lot, it appears from Gen. 19 : 9, was a stranger in the city: "This one fellow came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge," and the messengers being strangers, the townsmen would not allow him to keep them. Lot offered his daughters as hostages so that he might be allowed to keep his guests with him, for according to 15 : 70 he had not the permission to allow any stranger under his roof: "Have we not forbidden you from other people?" i.e. from giving shelter to them, this no doubt being due to the constant danger of tribal 79 They said: Certainly you know that we have no claim on your daughters, and most surely you know what we desire.

80 He said: Ah! that I had power to repel you, rather I shall have recourse to a strong support.[1194A]

81 They said: O Lot! we are the messengers of your Lord; they shall by no means reach you; so remove your followers[a] in a part of the night—and let none of you turn back—except your wife,[1195] for surely whatsoever befalls them shall befall her; surely their appointed time is the morning; is not the morning nigh?

fighting. It may also be noted that the more generally received opinion among the commentators is that Lot did not point to his real daughters, but to women of the tribe, because a prophet would speak of the women of his tribe as his daughters (Rz, JB), and in that case he did no more than point to the natural relation of man and woman. The answer of his people seems, however, to relate to his daughters.

1194A Allah is the strong support to whom the righteous have recourse when they are in trouble. The particle au signifies or, as well as rather, in the latter case being the equivalent of bal (Mgh-LL).

1195 Compare Gen. 19:26.

1196 It was a severe earthquake, which so utterly demolished the cities as to have turned them upside down. In 15:73 it is called ṣaiḥah, i.e. the rumbling that precedes an earthquake. See 918. The stories of Gabriel taking up the cities to heaven and then throwing them down are entirely baseless.

1197 The raining down of stones might have been the result of a volcanic eruption which was accompanied by an earthquake. See 918.

1198 The word sijjîl is a pure Arabic word and not a corruption of the Persian sang-i-gil, as thought by some lexicologists. It is derived from the root sajala, meaning he poured forth (water), from which a large number of derivatives has followed, as usual in Arabic: for instance, the verb forms sajjala, i.e. he wrote a paper or a scroll, or decided judicially, sajala-hû, i.e. he vied with him for superiority in anything, originally in the drawing of water, asjala-hû, i.e. he gave him a bucketful, insajala, i.e. it (water) poured forth, and nouns such as sijill, meaning a writing, or a scroll, sajl, meaning a full bucket, etc. (LL). In consonance with the original meaning of writing, sijjîl means what had been written or decreed for them (Q-LL), or according to AO many and hard (LL).

1199 As in the previous instances, the concluding words show a reversion to the subject of the punishment of the Meccan opponents of the Holy Prophet.

84-93. Shu'aib preaches, is opposed and warns. 94, 95. Punishment overtakes the people.

84 And to Midian (We sent) their brother Shu'aib.[a] He said: O my people! serve Allah, you have no god other than He, and do not give short measure and weight; surely I see you in prosperity and surely I fear for you the chastisement of an all-encompassing day:

وَإِلَىٰ مَدْيَنَ أَخَاهُمْ شُعَيْبًا ۚ قَالَ يَٰقَوْمِ ٱعْبُدُوا۟ ٱللَّهَ مَا لَكُم مِّنْ إِلَٰهٍ غَيْرُهُۥ ۖ وَلَا تَنقُصُوا۟ ٱلْمِكْيَالَ وَٱلْمِيزَانَ ۚ إِنِّىٓ أَرَىٰكُم بِخَيْرٍ وَإِنِّىٓ أَخَافُ عَلَيْكُمْ عَذَابَ يَوْمٍ مُّحِيطٍ ۝

85 And, O my people! give full measure and weight fairly, and defraud not men of their things, and do not act corruptly in the land, making mischief:

وَيَٰقَوْمِ أَوْفُوا۟ ٱلْمِكْيَالَ وَٱلْمِيزَانَ بِٱلْقِسْطِ ۖ وَلَا تَبْخَسُوا۟ ٱلنَّاسَ أَشْيَآءَهُمْ وَلَا تَعْثَوْا۟ فِى ٱلْأَرْضِ مُفْسِدِينَ ۝

86 What remains with Allah is better for you if you are believers, and I am not a keeper over you.[1200]

بَقِيَّتُ ٱللَّهِ خَيْرٌ لَّكُمْ إِن كُنتُم مُّؤْمِنِينَ ۚ وَمَآ أَنَا۠ عَلَيْكُم بِحَفِيظٍ ۝

87 They said: O Shu'aib! does your prayer enjoin you that we should forsake what our fathers worshipped or that we should not do what we please with regard to our property? forsooth you are the forbearing, the right-directing one.

قَالُوا۟ يَٰشُعَيْبُ أَصَلَوٰتُكَ تَأْمُرُكَ أَن نَّتْرُكَ مَا يَعْبُدُ ءَابَآؤُنَآ أَوْ أَن نَّفْعَلَ فِىٓ أَمْوَٰلِنَا مَا نَشَٰٓؤُا۟ ۖ إِنَّكَ لَأَنتَ ٱلْحَلِيمُ ٱلرَّشِيدُ ۝

88 He said: O my people! have you considered if I have a clear proof from my Lord and He has given me a goodly sustenance from Himself; and I do not desire that in opposition to you I should betake myself to that which I forbid you: I desire nothing but reform so far as I am able, and with none but Allah is the direction of my affair to a right issue: on Him do I rely and to Him do I turn:

قَالَ يَٰقَوْمِ أَرَءَيْتُمْ إِن كُنتُ عَلَىٰ بَيِّنَةٍ مِّن رَّبِّى وَرَزَقَنِى مِنْهُ رِزْقًا حَسَنًا ۚ وَمَآ أُرِيدُ أَنْ أُخَالِفَكُمْ إِلَىٰ مَآ أَنْهَىٰكُمْ عَنْهُ ۚ إِنْ أُرِيدُ إِلَّا ٱلْإِصْلَٰحَ مَا ٱسْتَطَعْتُ ۚ وَمَا تَوْفِيقِىٓ إِلَّا بِٱللَّهِ ۚ عَلَيْهِ تَوَكَّلْتُ وَإِلَيْهِ أُنِيبُ ۝

89 And, O my people! let not opposition to me make you guilty so that there may befall you the like of what befell

وَيَٰقَوْمِ لَا يَجْرِمَنَّكُمْ شِقَاقِىٓ أَن يُصِيبَكُم مِّثْلُ مَآ أَصَابَ

1200 Baqiyyat-ullāh would properly signify that part of man's doings which remains with Allah, i.e. the righteous or good works of which the recompense remains, the word conveying the same significance as bāqiyāt in 18 : 46 and 19 : 79. Rgh and TA prefer this significance. But it may also mean what Allah leaves to you after you have paid the dues of others.

91 They said: O Shu'aib! we do not understand much of what you say and most surely we see you to be weak among us, and were it not for your family we would surely stone you, and you are not mighty against us.

Ar. thou sayest. Ar. thee. Ar. thy. Ar. thee. Ar. thou art.

93 And, O my people! act according to your ability, I too am acting: you will come to know soon who it is on whom will light the punishment that will disgrace him and who it is that is a liar: and watch, surely I too am watching with you.

94 And when Our decree came to pass We delivered Shu'aib and those who believed with him by mercy from Us, and the rumbling overtook those who were unjust so they became motionless bodies in their abodes,[e]

Punishment of the Wicked is a Divine Law

96–102. Iniquity draws punishment on Pharaoh. 103–105. A like fate for the opponents of the Prophet. 106, 107. Punishment is only remedial and not everlasting. 108. Reward of the righteous is unceasing. 109. The Meccans shall receive punishment.

96 And certainly We sent Moses with Our communications and a clear authority,

وَلَقَدْ أَرْسَلْنَا مُوسَىٰ بِآيَاتِنَا وَسُلْطَانٍ
مُّبِينٍ ۝

97 To Pharaoh and his chiefs, but they followed the bidding of Pharaoh, and Pharaoh's bidding was not right-directing.

إِلَىٰ فِرْعَوْنَ وَمَلَئِهِ فَاتَّبَعُوا أَمْرَ
فِرْعَوْنَ ۖ وَمَا أَمْرُ فِرْعَوْنَ
بِرَشِيدٍ ۝

98 He shall lead his people on the resurrection day, and bring them down to the fire: and evil the company brought down.

Or, place to which they are brought.

يَقْدُمُ قَوْمَهُ يَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ فَأَوْرَدَهُمُ
النَّارَ ۖ وَبِئْسَ الْوِرْدُ الْمَوْرُودُ ۝

99 And they are overtaken by curse in this (world), and on the resurrection day: evil the gift which shall be given.

وَأُتْبِعُوا فِي هَٰذِهِ لَعْنَةً وَيَوْمَ الْقِيَامَةِ ۚ
بِئْسَ الرِّفْدُ الْمَرْفُودُ ۝

100 This is an account of (the fate of) the towns which we relate to you: of them are some that stand and (others) mown down.

Ar. thee.

ذَٰلِكَ مِنْ أَنْبَاءِ الْقُرَىٰ نَقُصُّهُ عَلَيْكَ ۖ
مِنْهَا قَائِمٌ وَحَصِيدٌ ۝

101 And We did not do them injustice, but they were unjust to themselves, so their gods whom they called upon besides Allah did not avail them aught when the decree of your Lord came to pass; and they added but to their ruin.

Ar. thy.

Ar. increased them in nothing but.

وَمَا ظَلَمْنَاهُمْ وَلَٰكِنْ ظَلَمُوا أَنْفُسَهُمْ ۖ
فَمَا أَغْنَتْ عَنْهُمْ آلِهَتُهُمُ الَّتِي يَدْعُونَ
مِنْ دُونِ اللَّهِ مِنْ شَيْءٍ لَمَّا جَاءَ أَمْرُ
رَبِّكَ ۖ وَمَا زَادُوهُمْ غَيْرَ تَتْبِيبٍ ۝

102 And such is the punishment of your Lord when He punishes the towns while they are unjust; surely His punishment is painful, severe.

Ar. thy.

وَكَذَٰلِكَ أَخْذُ رَبِّكَ إِذَا أَخَذَ الْقُرَىٰ
وَهِيَ ظَالِمَةٌ ۚ إِنَّ أَخْذَهُ أَلِيمٌ شَدِيدٌ ۝

103 Most surely there is a sign in this for him who fears the chastisement of the hereafter; this is a day on which the people shall be gathered together and this is a day that shall be witnessed.

إِنَّ فِي ذَٰلِكَ لَآيَةً لِمَنْ خَافَ عَذَابَ
الْآخِرَةِ ۚ ذَٰلِكَ يَوْمٌ مَجْمُوعٌ لَهُ النَّاسُ
وَذَٰلِكَ يَوْمٌ مَشْهُودٌ ۝

104 And We do not delay it but to an appointed term.

وَمَا نُؤَخِّرُهُ إِلَّا لِأَجَلٍ مَعْدُودٍ ۝

105 On the day when it shall come, no soul shall speak except with His permission, then (some) of them shall be unhappy and (others) happy.

يَوْمَ يَأْتِ لَا تَكَلَّمُ نَفْسٌ إِلَّا بِإِذْنِهِ ۚ
فَمِنْهُمْ شَقِيٌّ وَسَعِيدٌ ۝

106 So as to those who are unhappy, they shall be in the fire; for them shall be sighing and groaning in it:

107 Abiding therein so long as the heavens and the earth
Ar. thy. endure, except as your Lord
Ar. thy. please; surely your Lord is the mighty doer of what He intends.[1201]

108 And as to those who are made happy, they shall be in the garden, abiding in it as long as the heavens and the earth
Ar. thy. endure, except as your Lord please: a gift which shall never be cut off.[1202]

فَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ شَقُوا فَفِي النَّارِ لَهُمْ فِيهَا زَفِيرٌ وَشَهِيقٌ ۝
خٰلِدِينَ فِيهَا مَا دَامَتِ السَّمٰوٰتُ وَالْأَرْضُ إِلَّا مَا شَآءَ رَبُّكَ إِنَّ رَبَّكَ فَعَّالٌ لِّمَا يُرِيدُ ۝
وَأَمَّا الَّذِينَ سُعِدُوا فَفِي الْجَنَّةِ خٰلِدِينَ فِيهَا مَا دَامَتِ السَّمٰوٰتُ وَالْأَرْضُ إِلَّا مَا شَآءَ رَبُّكَ عَطَآءً غَيْرَ مَجْذُوذٍ ۝

1201 This limitation on the duration of abiding in hell—except as your Lord please—is given twice in the Holy Qur-án, here and in 6:129, and it shows clearly that the punishment of hell is not everlasting. A comparison with the verse that follows makes it clearer. There, too, we have that those in paradise shall abide there as long as the heaven and the earth endure, but the statement is immediately followed by another: a gift which shall never be cut off, thus showing that in fact there is no limitation upon the eternity of paradise, and the words except as your Lord please have been used only to express the unbounded power and greatness of the Divine Being. In the case of hell, however, the words except as your Lord please are followed by a statement which corroborates the limitation thus placed, for the word fa'ál, as an attribute of the Divine Being, indicates that He does even those things which seem impossible to others, the word being an intensive form of fá'il, meaning doer. The same words are in the two cases followed by entirely different statements, showing that the same sense is not to be attached to the words الا ماشاء ربك in both cases. In the case of hell it is an actual limitation, because Allah is the great doer, who does what He intends even though it may appear impossible to men, while in the case of heaven it is not a limitation on its eternity—for that is a gift never to be cut off, but an expression of Divine greatness.

Various sayings of the Holy Prophet corroborate the statement made above. For instance, the concluding portion of one of these which is met with in one of the most reliable collections runs thus: "Then will Allah say: The angels and the prophets and the faithful have all in their turn interceded for the sinners, and now there remains none to intercede for them except the most Merciful of all merciful ones. So He will take out a handful from fire and bring out a people who never worked any good" (Mus). There are also other sayings in the Kanz-ul-'Ummál: "Surely a day will come over hell when it will be like a field of corn that has dried up after flourishing for a while"; and again, "Surely a day will come over hell when there shall not be a single human being in it" (vol. vii. p. 245). There is also a saying of 'Umar on record (see Fat-ḥ-ul-Bayán, Fat-ḥ-ul-Barí, Durr-i-Mansoor, and the Hád-il-Arwah of Ibn-i-Qayyum): "Even if the dwellers in hell may be numberless as the sands of the desert a day will surely come when they will be taken out of it."

One question, however, remains to be answered, and that is the use of the word abad (which is generally considered as meaning for ever). This abiding in hell (abadan) is mentioned thrice in the Holy Qur-án, in 4:169, 33:65, and 72:23. On all these three occasions I render the words as meaning for a long time, and this significance appears to be correct, in the light of what has been stated above. It must be borne in mind that abad signifies a long time (LL), being synonymous with دهر طويل (Mgh), or as TA says الدهر الطويل الذى ليس محدود i.e. a long time which is not limited; it also signifies time (in an absolute sense) or time without end; hence eternity. But the other significance of the word has its use in Arabic literature, and hence its plural ābād, which would be meaningless if the word signified nothing but eternity. Rgh also gives us a clue to the other significance (i.e. abad being equivalent to a long time), for he says تأبد الشيء means the thing remained for abad, adding و يعبر به عما يبقى مدة طويلة i.e. it is also used to signify that which remains for a long time. The Qur-án makes this use of the word clear by stating in 78:23 that the unbelievers shall remain in hell for aḥqāb, i.e. long ages, the word being plural of ḥuqbah, which means seventy or eighty years (see 2645). If abad in the case of hell signified eternity, the word aḥqāb could not have been used. Hence a long time is the correct rendering of the word. Thus the Qur-án rejects the doctrine of the eternity of hell.

The Believers should shun Evil

110–113. Believers should not incline towards the unjust. 114–117. Evil to be shunned because it must have an evil consequence. 118, 119. Differences cannot be obliterated. 120. Histories of former prophets are given for consolation. 121–123. The end must be waited for.

1202 See note on the preceding verse, where the words except as your Lord please are fully explained. In accordance with what is said here in connection with the heavenly life, that it is a gift which shall never be cut off, we have in 15:48, "Nor shall they be ever ejected from it."

1203 Ikhtalafa means also khālafa, i.e. he acted in opposition to, or disagreed with (see 212A for full explanation).

113 And do not incline to those who are unjust, lest the fire touch you, and you have no guardians besides Allah, then you shall not be helped.[1204]

114 And keep up prayer in the two parts of the day and in the first hours of the night; surely good deeds take away evil deeds; this is a reminder to the mindful.[1205]

115 And be patient, for surely Allah does not waste the reward of the good-doers.

116 But why were there not among the generations before you those possessing understanding,[1206] who should have forbidden the making of mischief in the earth, except a few of those whom we delivered from among them? and those who were unjust went after what they were made to enjoy of plenty, and they were guilty.

117 And it did not beseem your Lord to have destroyed the towns on account of wrong belief, while their people acted well.[1207]

1204 Not only is it forbidden to man to commit any injustice himself, but he should also refrain from leaning towards those who are guilty of injustice—a very hard rule of conduct to carry out, no doubt, but the only one that can keep him upright.

1205 The times of prayer are clearly indicated in this verse, and it is not true that it was revealed before any time was fixed for prayer. The prayer is to be said in the two parts of the day and the first hours of the night. In the first part of the day is the fajr, or the morning prayer before sunrise, and in the second part of the day the ẓuhr, or the early afternoon, and the 'aṣr, or the later afternoon, prayers. In the first hours of the night we have the maghrib, or the after sunset prayer, and the 'ishá, or the night prayer, just before going to bed. It is a remarkable fact that the two afternoon prayers and the two sunset prayers, which are spoken of together, may under exceptional circumstances be said together. It should also be noted that though ṭarf means an end or extremity, it also means a quarter, or a portion, or a part (synonym ṭáifah) of a thing (S, O, Q-LL), and it is used in relation to bodies or material things and to times, etc. (Rgh, TA-LL). Hence I prefer the rendering two parts (of the day) to two ends, which is not applicable here.

1206 In the phrase ulú baqiyyah, the word baqiyyah is interpreted in a number of ways. LL collects all of these in the article on baqy. Some of these are: persons possessed of excellence, or possessing a relic of judgment and intelligence (Bḍ), or persons of understanding (Q, TA) and discrimination (TA), or persons of obedience (TA), or having the quality of preserving themselves (Az, Bḍ, Q) from punishment.

1207 Ẓulm here signifies wrong belief as distinct from guilty conduct. The commentators almost agree in giving it here the significance of shirk or polytheism (Rz, Bḍ, JB). The Holy Qur-án generally speaks of Divine punishment and Divine wrath overtaking men in this world for their inordinacy, or transgression, or grossly immoral conduct, and not for wrong or erroneous beliefs, which may be compatible with good conduct. Here this is asserted very plainly. It should be noted that the word ẓulm, which I have generally translated as injustice, is very broad in its significance. Rgh deals with all the shades of its meaning, saying that ẓulm is of three kinds: (1) as between man and Allah, the greatest of which is kufr or unbelief, and shirk or polytheism; this would, of course, include all wrong beliefs with regard to the Divine Being; (2) as between man and man, which would include all kinds of immoralities and transgressions involving a violation of the rights of others; (3) as between man and his own self, which would include all kinds of guilty action injurious not to others but to man's own self. The other meaning is given in the margin.

1208 The meaning is that if it were a Divine law to force men to one particular belief, they would have become a single nation, but as it is, He has so created them that they shall continue to differ, hence some of them accept the truth and others reject it.

1209 Here it is clearly stated that Allah created all men to have mercy on them. By His mercy He guides some to the right path, while to others, who go over to evil and make themselves deserving of hell, mercy shall come only after punishment. It is by their own hands that they get into distress and difficulty, while Allah has mercy on them in extricating them from it.

1210 Because they went against the ways which Allah had mercifully shown to them, therefore they must pass through another ordeal, so that they may be purged of evil and made fit for spiritual progress.

Title and Subject-matter.

This chapter receives its title from the story with which it deals. The entire chapter gives a continuous account of the history of Joseph, the first three verses and the concluding section both pointing to the purpose which underlies the story. It is not, in fact, a mere narrative, but foretells the ultimate triumph of the Holy Prophet, who was being turned out of his native city, and also the final submission of those who were plotting against his very life.

The chapter deals with three kinds of visions, viz. the vision of a prophet (Joseph), which pointed to his ultimate triumph and the triumph of the truth which he preached (vv. 4 and 100); the vision of a king, relating to the measures of the material welfare of those under his care (vv. 43–49), and the visions of ordinary men, relating to their own adversity or prosperity (vv. 36–41). The grander the purpose, the longer it takes for its due fulfilment; Joseph's vision took a whole lifetime, the king's vision fourteen years, while the visions of ordinary men come to immediate fulfilment. The Holy Prophet doubtless obtained consolation from these facts, and as he had before him a very grand object—the reformation first of the Arabs and then of the whole world—he patiently awaited the realization of these noble ideals, knowing that it would surely take some time.

Context.

In the arrangement of the chapters, the connection of this chapter with the one preceding it is clear. That chapter deals with the histories of several well-known prophets and the fate of their opponents. This prophetically states that the dealings of the enemies towards the Holy Prophet, and those of the Holy Prophet towards his enemies, were more in the nature of the mutual dealings of Joseph and his brothers, there being strict persecution on one side and entire forgiveness and merciful dealing on the other. It will be further seen that the concluding words of the last chapter speak of the accounts of the apostles to strengthen your heart therewith (11 : 120), and as this chapter is expressly mentioned to have been revealed to give solace to the Holy Prophet in his persecution by his enemies (AH) and to comfort him at a time when that most critical moment of his life was approaching which led to his flight to Medina, it is a fitting sequel to the eleventh chapter.

Date of revelation.

As to the place of its revelation, there is almost a consensus of opinion that the whole of it was revealed at Mecca. The conjecture that the first three verses were revealed at Medina does not deserve attention, because these are clearly necessary as a preliminary to the chapter which, there is good ground for believing, was revealed on the eve of the Holy Prophet's flight to Medina. Such is the opinion of Sayooti; Weil, among the European critics, holds the same opinion. It is an undisputed fact that when the Holy Prophet conquered Mecca he repeated the very words, when forgiving his bitterest enemies, that Joseph had spoken when forgiving his brothers. Thus no doubt s left that the revelation of the chapter belongs to the period when the Holy Prophet's enemies were actively plotting against him, there being a clear reference to this in v. 7.

1211 احسن القصص does not mean the best of the stories, nor does it here refer to the story of Joseph. Qaṣaṣ is an infinitive noun, from qaṣṣa, meaning he related or explained (LL). And نحن نقص عليك احسن القصص is explained in Q and TA as meaning we explain to you with the best explanation. It should be noted that the plural of qiṣṣah, meaning a story, is qiṣaṣ, and not qaṣaṣ (LL). See also the commentators (Kf, Rz, JB), who consider it as an infinitive noun. The meaning of the passage is that the revelation of the Qur-án affords the best explanation in regard to the spiritual and moral needs of man, and also regarding the future events of the life of the Holy Prophet.

1212 The Prophet's "unawareness" relates to his own future, of which this chapter gives a clear indication in the incidents of Joseph's life, viz. that he shall be expelled from

Plot against Joseph by his Brothers

7. A sign as to the Prophet's future. 8–20. Plot of Joseph's brothers and their casting Joseph into a pit.

7 Certainly in Joseph and his brothers there are signs for the inquirers.[1214]

8 When they said: Certainly Joseph and his brother[1215] are dearer to our father than we, though we are a (stronger) company: most surely our father is in manifest error:

لَقَدْ كَانَ فِي يُوسُفَ وَإِخْوَتِهِ آيَاتٌ لِلسَّائِلِينَ ۝
إِذْ قَالُوا لَيُوسُفُ وَأَخُوهُ أَحَبُّ إِلَىٰ أَبِينَا

ضَلَالٍ مُبِينٍ ۝

his home as Joseph was expelled, but that his countrymen shall ultimately come to him in submission, asking pardon for their faults, as Joseph's brothers had done. The Holy Prophet's reference to the reply of Joseph to his brothers لا تثريب عليكم اليوم (v. 92), after the conquest of Mecca, when the Quraish came to him asking pardon for their crimes, shows clearly that the story of Joseph was understood to convey this meaning from the first. But "unawareness" here may also refer to all those things that are related in the Qur-án, because the Prophet knew nothing of them before the revelation. This is also stated in 42:52: "And thus did We reveal to you an inspired Book by Our command; you did not know what the Book was, nor what the faith was, but We made it a light, guiding thereby whom We please of Our servants."

1213 Compare Gen. 37:9: "And behold the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me." It should be noted that there is nothing in this verse to show that it was a vision.

1214 What was hinted at in the first section is now made clearer. At the time of this revelation the Prophet was in the greatest difficulty, for the chief men of Mecca conspired against his life, and therefore people no doubt inquired about his fate. In answer they are told that their treatment of him and his treatment of them would be similar to that which Joseph experienced at the hands of his brothers, and that which they met with from him.

1215 Benjamin, his brother by the same mother, is meant here.

9 Slay Joseph or cast him (forth) into some land, so that your father's regard may be exclusively for you, and after that you may be a righteous people.[1216]

10 A speaker from among them said: Do not slay Joseph, and cast him down into the bottom of the pit if you must do (it), (so that) some of the travellers may pick him up.[1217]

11 They said: O our father! what reason have you that you do not trust in us with respect to Joseph? and most surely we are his sincere well-wishers:

Ar. hast thou. Ar. thou dost.

12 Send him with us to-morrow that he may enjoy himself and sport, and surely we will guard him well.

13 He said: Surely it grieves me that you should take him off, and I fear lest the wolf devour him while you are heedless of him.

14 They said: Surely if the wolf should devour him notwithstanding that we are a (strong) company, we should then certainly be losers.

15 So when they had gone off with him and agreed that they should put him down at the bottom of the pit, and We revealed to him: You will most certainly inform them of this their affair while they do not perceive.[1218]

Ar. thou shalt.

1216 The conspiracy of the Quraish against the Holy Prophet was of a similar nature. It is referred to in the Qur-án in the following words: "And when those who disbelieved devised plans against you, that they might confine you or slay you or drive you away" (8 : 30).

1217 "And Reuben said unto them: Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit that is in the wilderness and lay no hand upon him" (Gen. 37 : 22).

1218 The essential difference between the two versions of this story, one given in the Bible and the other in the Qur-án, is this, that while the Bible narrates it as a simple story, the Holy Qur-án preserves in it the spiritual element which alone can justify its record in a book meant for the spiritual guidance of man. Here is a child whose age does not exceed seventeen years, who, though to all appearance lost for ever, receives a Divine revelation and promise that he will one day be the master of his present oppressors. It is this circumstance in the life of a prophet which really enables him to face all distresses and difficulties, viz. the deep conviction of the ultimate triumph of truth which is produced by revelation from on high. By omitting the spiritual significance the Bible narrative divests the story of all its beauty.

16 And they came to their father at nightfall, weeping.

17 They said: O our father! surely we went off racing and left Joseph by our goods, so the wolf devoured him, and you will not believe us though we are truthful.

Ar. thou wilt.

18 And they brought his shirt with false blood upon it. He said: Nay, your souls have made the matter light for you, but patience is good, and Allah is He Whose help is sought for against what you describe.[1219]

Ar. false blood upon his shirt.

19 And there came travellers and they sent their water-drawer and he let down his bucket. He said: O good news! this is a youth; and they concealed him as an article of merchandise, and Allah knew what they did.

20 And they sold him for a small price, a few pieces of silver, and they showed no desire for him.[1220]

1219 The Qur-án represents Jacob as doubting from the very first the sincerity of Joseph's brothers, but not so the Bible. Again, according to the Holy Qur-án, Joseph relates his vision to his father, who is at once apprehensive of the envy of his brothers if they are apprised of it; but according to the Bible, Jacob himself rebuked Joseph for his dream, which being true, the circumstance casts a reflection upon Jacob's prophetical character. Besides several discrepancies, the Bible narrative represents Jacob as an ordinary mortal, while the Holy Qur-án represents him as a prophet. The former makes him grieve for the loss of a beloved son as any other mortal would, but the latter shows that he had from the first a hope: "And Allah is He Whose help is sought for against what you describe." And throughout the story this hope is the bright ray without which the story would be a gloomy description, devoid of all value as a spiritual lesson. There are traces left still in the Bible narrative which show that the account as now met with in Genesis does not truly depict the character of Jacob, for in Gen. 37:11 we are told: "And his brethren envied him, but his father observed the saying," i.e. kept the vision in his heart, which shows that he was convinced of its truth. This is so inconsistent with the rest of the narrative as to Jacob's belief in the sincerity of his sons, that there is no alternative left but the admission that the Quranic narrative not only fits in with the prophetical character of Jacob, but also that wherever it contradicts the Bible it removes in fact the inconsistencies of the Bible, which only records a distorted version of the story.

1220 Compare Gen. 37:28: "Then there passed by Midianites, merchantmen, and they drew and lifted up Joseph out of the pit, and sold Joseph to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver." Those who sold him were either Joseph's brothers or the merchants who found him in the pit; according to the story as related in Genesis, Joseph's brothers sold him to the Midianites, who again sold him in Egypt.

21 And the Egyptian who bought him[1221] said to his wife: Give him an honourable abode, maybe he will be useful to us, or we may adopt him as a son. And thus did We establish Joseph in the land and that We might teach him the interpretation of sayings; and Allah is the master of His affair, but most people do not know.

22 And when he had attained his maturity, We gave him wisdom and knowledge; and thus do We reward those who do good.[1222]

23 And she in whose house he was sought to make himself yield (to her),[1223] and she made fast the doors and said: Come forward.[1224] He said: I seek Allah's refuge, surely my Lord made good my abode: surely the unjust do not prosper.

24 And certainly she made for him, and he would have made for her, were it not that he had seen the manifest evidence of his Lord; thus (it was) that We might turn away from him evil and indecency, surely he was one of Our sincere servants.[1225]

Or, chosen, purified.

1221 "And the Midianites sold him into Egypt unto Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh and a captain of the guard" (Gen. 38:36). And Gen. 39:1 says: "And Joseph was brought down to Egypt; and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the hands of the Ishmaelites, which had brought him thither."

1222 "And the Lord was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man" (Gen. 39:2).

1223 Ráwada-hú means he endeavoured to turn him from a thing (LA-LL), and hence راودته عن نفسه literally means she sought by blandishment to turn him from his disdain and make him yield to her (T-LL).

1224 A comparison with Gen. 39:7–12 will give the reader a true impression of the purity of the language of the Qur-án.

1225 This does not show that Joseph had the least desire for her; but that the temptation was so strong that if he had not been strengthened by great faith in Allah he would have fallen a prey to mortal weakness.

25 And they both hastened to the door, and she rent his shirt from behind and they met her husband at the door. She said: What is the punishment of him who intends evil to your wife except imprisonment or a painful chastisement?

Ar. thy.

26 He said: She sought to make me yield (to her); and a witness of her own family bore witness: If his shirt is rent from front, she speaks the truth and he is one of the liars:

27 And if his shirt is rent from behind, she tells a lie and he is one of the truthful.

28 So when he saw his shirt rent from behind, he said: Surely it is a device of you women: surely your device is great:[1226]

29 O Joseph! turn aside from this; and (O my wife!) ask forgiveness for your fault, surely you are one of the wrong-doers.

SECTION 4

Joseph is imprisoned

30 And women in the city said: The chief's[1227] wife seeks her slave to yield himself (to her), surely he has affected her deeply[1228] with (his) love; most surely we see her in manifest error.

وَقَالَ نِسْوَةٌ فِي الْمَدِينَةِ امْرَاَتُ الْعَزِيزِ
تُرَاوِدُ فَتٰهَا عَنْ نَّفْسِهِ قَدْ شَغَفَهَا
حُبًّا إِنَّا لَنَرٰهَا فِي ضَلٰلٍ مُّبِينٍ ۝

1226 The vindication of Joseph's character on this occasion, and the production of the evidence of the shirt, are not related in the Bible; but without it the episode of leaving the garment becomes meaningless. It seems to be a clear omission. The next section proves that Joseph was not cast into prison for being guilty of having committed an outrage against his master's wife. The Holy Book does not allow even an accusation of this nature to stand against a prophet.

1227 Al-'Azīz stands for Potiphar (Kf). 'Azīz really means mighty, powerful, strong, and might as such be applied to such a dignitary as the captain of the guard, which rank was held by Potiphar. Al-'Azīz has become associated with the rulers of Egypt as their title, but the fact that it is not meant here to express that position is clear from the ruler being called al-Malik, or the king (v. 43), and Joseph himself, who was admittedly not the ruler but only the chief dignitary of the empire, being addressed as 'azīz in v. 78.

1228 Shaghafa-hā literally means he has affected her so that the love of him has entered beneath the shighāf, i.e. the pericardium of her heart.

31 So when she heard of their device,[1229] she sent for them and prepared for them a repast,[1230] and gave each of them a knife, and said (to Joseph): Come forth to them. So when they saw him, they deemed him great, and cut their hands (in amazement), and said: Remote is Allah (from imperfection): this is not a mortal; this is but a noble angel.[1231]

فَلَمَّا سَمِعَتْ بِمَكْرِهِنَّ أَرْسَلَتْ إِلَيْهِنَّ

32 She said: This is he with respect to whom you blamed me, and certainly I sought his yielding himself (to me), but he abstained, and if he does not do what I bid him, he shall certainly be imprisoned, and he shall certainly be of those who are in a state of ignominy.

33 He said: My Lord! the prison house is dearer to me than that to which they invite me; and if Thou turn not away their device from me, I will yearn towards them and become (one) of the ignorant.

1229 The secret imputation of the women is called here their makr or device (Kf, Bḍ). Some, however, think that she knew that certain women had circulated the news with the object of getting a chance to see Joseph, and hence it is called their makr or device.

1230 Muttaka'a means originally a place in which one reclines, then that upon which one reclines in eating, drinking, or talking, and also food, or repast, which last is considered by TA to be the meaning here (LL). The commentators add that muttaka'a is the particular food which requires to be cut with a knife (Kf, Rz), and suggest that to be the reason for handing over knives to them.

1231 The Egyptians were a superstitious and polytheistic people, and anything strange, or any human being about whom they witnessed anything wonderful, was considered by them to be a god. Hence, when they saw Joseph they thought he was not a mortal. The words حاش لله are generally spoken to express wonder or admiration.

1232 There is nothing to show that Joseph was cast into prison on a charge of having committed an outrage on Potiphar's wife. As he was proved guiltless of that charge, it is very likely that some other accusation was brought against him; and more probably an autocratic ruler needed no excuse for putting an innocent man into prison. By signs must be understood the signs of Joseph's innocence.

SECTION 5

Joseph's Preaching in the Prison

36 And two youths entered the prison with him.[1233] One of them said: I saw myself pressing wine. And the other said: I saw myself carrying bread on my head, of which birds ate. Inform us of its interpretation; surely we see you to be of the doers of good.[1234]

Ar. thee.

37 He said: There shall not come to you the food with which you are fed, but I will inform you both of its interpretation before it comes to you: this is of what my Lord has taught me: surely I have forsaken the religion of a people who do not believe in Allah, and they are deniers of the hereafter:

38 And I follow the religion of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob: it beseems us not that we should associate aught with Allah: this is by Allah's grace upon us and on mankind, but most people do not give thanks:

39 O my two mates of the prison! are sundry lords better or Allah the One, the Supreme?

40 You do not serve besides Him but names which you have named, you and your fathers; Allah has not sent down any authority for them; judgment is only Allah's; He has commanded that you shall not serve aught but Him; this is the right religion, but most people do not know:

1233 For the whole of this section compare Gen. 40th chapter, which, however, omits Joseph's preaching. The two youths were the butler and the baker.

1234 It should be noted that in the case of the four dreams mentioned in this chapter, viz. the two recorded here and Joseph's dream mentioned in v. 4 and Pharaoh's dream mentioned in v. 43, the word used for seeing a vision is the same word ará (from ru'yat, meaning to see) as is used for the seeing of ordinary things. This consideration would help us in interpreting correctly many verses of the Qur-án and the sayings of the Holy Prophet.

41 O my two mates of the prison! as for one of you, he shall give his lord to drink wine; and as for the other, he shall be crucified, so that the birds shall eat from his head: the matter is decreed concerning which you inquired.

The King's Vision and its Interpretation by Joseph

1238 These are the words of Joseph, who explains his conduct in preferring to remain in prison until his innocence was established. But they may also be attributed to Potiphar's wife as an assurance to Joseph.

1239 These are generally accepted to be the words of Joseph, though some are inclined to attribute them to Potiphar's wife. Even taking the first view, there is no objection, for the prophets of God never attribute any good to themselves, but attribute all good to the Great Source of Goodness—God. Man's self is here called ammārah, i.e. one wont to command. It is in fact the lowest stage in the spiritual growth of man. His inner self, as it were, again and again commands him to do evil, but he refrains from doing it, being involved as it were in a great struggle to get out of the power of evil. The next stage is called the lawwámah, which is referred to in 75:2 as the self-accusing spirit, when the slightest departure from the path of rectitude at once rouses the pangs of the conscience. The third stage is the stage of perfection—the muṭma'innah, or the soul at rest, where it is in perfect peace, having attained the goal of perfection. See 2732.

Those who have attained the second stage in the spiritual advancement and those who have attained the goal of perfection are spoken of as those on whom the Lord has had mercy.

1241 Jacob, it seems, had come to know by Divine revelation that Joseph was there, and therefore he ordered them to enter by different gates so that Joseph might find his brother.

68 And when they had entered as their father had bidden them, it did not avail them aught against Allah, but (it was only) a desire in the soul of Jacob which he satisfied; and surely he was possessed of knowledge because We had given him knowledge, but most people do not know.[1242]

70 So when he furnished them with their provisions, (some one) placed the drinking cup in his brother's bag.[1243] Then a crier cried out:[1244] O caravan! you are most surely thieves.

قَالُوا نَفْقِدُ صُوَاعَ الْمَلِكِ وَلِمَنْ جَاءَ بِهِ

The next verse makes it clear when it says: And surely he was possessed of knowledge because We had given him knowledge. The statement is corroborated by Mid. Rab and Midr Jalkut. See Rodwell's note.

1242 The Bible narrative represents Jacob as being quite ignorant in the matter.

1243 Though the Bible narrative ascribes the placing of the cup to Joseph, the Qur-án does not say so. It is evident that the furnishing of provisions was not done by Joseph himself. It was somebody else who carried out the orders and furnished the provisions; from the preceding section it is clear that Joseph's servants did so, and when he had to return the money he had to give an order to that effect to his servants. And therefore it was by the king's servants that the drinking-cup (which belonged to the king) was placed in the bag of Joseph's brother. It is not stated here whether it was done intentionally or was put there by mistake: the words may imply either, but even if the servants put it there intentionally it may have been done as an act of special favour to "Benjamin, the well-beloved" brother, seeing that Joseph, on their first visit, treated them with such kindness as even to give instructions that their money should be put into their bags.

1244 It is another mistake to suppose that the crier was the very person who had placed the cup there. As v. 72 makes it clear, it was the king's drinking-cup—in other words it was not Joseph's personal property, but the property of the king, or government property; and it is clear that the men who distributed corn were different from those who had charge of the king's property. This would show that the cup was really misplaced unintentionally.

73 They said: By Allah! you know for certain that we have not come to make mischief in the land, and we are not thieves.

74 They said: But what shall be the requital of this, if you are liars?

75 They said: The requital of this is that the person in whose bag it is found shall himself be (held for) the satisfaction thereof; thus do we punish the wrong-doers.

76 So he began with their sacks before the sack of his brother,[1245] then he brought it out from his brother's sack. Thus did We plan for the sake of Joseph;[1246] it was not (lawful) that he should take his brother under the king's law unless Allah pleased; We raise the degrees of whomsoever We please, and above every one possessed of knowledge is the All-knowing one.

77 They said: If he steal, a brother of his did indeed steal before;[1247] but Joseph kept it secret in his heart and did not disclose it to them. He said: You are in an evil condition and Allah knows best what you state, 1245 The personal pronoun his refers to Joseph. This was done out of respect for that brother, for they knew that Joseph had lodged him with himself.

1246 This makes it clear that this was not Joseph's plan, but a Divine plan. In other words, the circumstances were made to assist Joseph to keep his brother with him. Joseph's desire, no doubt, was to retain his brother Benjamin while the others returned; but he was unable to do so under the laws of Egypt, as is shown by what follows. Circumstances, however, enabled him to satisfy his desire. The Qur-án here tells us how one living under an alien government should abide by the laws of that government.

1247 The reference is said to be to Joseph's having taken away an image belonging to his mother's father. Compare Gen. 31 : 19 : "And Rachel had stolen the images that were her father's." Christian critics say there is a confusion here between the stories of Joseph and Rachel. But there is nothing to show that the Qur-án actually regards Joseph as having stolen an idol. It is very probable that his brothers made a false statement to cast a veil over their own shame. Joseph's reply shows that he treated this statement as a falsehood, because he spoke of them as being in an evil condition.

therefore retain one of us in his stead; surely we see you to be of the doers of good. (Ar. thee.)

79 He said: Allah protect us that we should seize other than him with whom we found our property, for then most surely we would be unjust.

Joseph discloses his Identity to his Brothers

80 Then when they despaired of him, they retired, conferring privately together. The eldest of them said: Do you not know that your father took from you a covenant in Allah's name, and how you fell short of your duty with respect to Joseph before? therefore I will by no means depart from this land until my father permit me or Allah decide for me, and He is the best of the judges:

81 Go back to your father and say: O our father! surely your son committed theft, and we do not bear witness except to what we have known, and we could not keep watch over the unseen: (Ar. thy.)

82 And inquire in the town in which we were and the caravan with which we proceeded, and most surely we are truthful.

83 He said: Nay, your souls have made a matter light for you, so patience is good; maybe Allah will bring them all together to me; surely He is the Knowing, the Wise.

84 And he turned away from them, and said: O my sorrow for Joseph! and his eyes were filled[1248] (with tears) on account of the grief, and he was a represser (of grief).

interprets the words as meaning the filling of eyes with tears (Rz). The story of Jacob becoming blind in his grief for the loss of Joseph may be rejected, as it has for its basis only this word.

1249 Tafta'u here stands for lá tafta'u, the lá being omitted (Rz).

1250 Harad is, according to Q, a person who is in a disordered and diseased state, so that he is one from whom good is not expected, nor is evil feared from him. Hence it is also applied to one who is at the point of death. It also signifies one who falls down so that he is not able to rise again (TA), or one affected by constant disease (AZ-LL), which seems to be the meaning here.

1251 This shows clearly that he knew by Divine revelation that Joseph was alive.

1252 How much the Holy Prophet regarded the story of Joseph as a prophetic description and He is the most Merciful of the merciful.

of the events that were to befall him is shown by the following report. It is related that the Apostle of Allah, may peace and the blessings of Allah be upon him, took hold of the two sides of the gate of the Ka'ba on the day of the conquest (of Mecca) and said to the Quraish: How do you think I will treat you? They said: We hope for good, a noble brother and the son of a noble brother. Then he said: I say as my brother Joseph said: "There shall be no reproof against you this day" (Rz).

1253 على وجه ابى may either mean before my father's face or before my father, for waj-h also means zát, or person, and being the most noble part is used for the whole. Joseph's giving them a shirt was in allusion to their first false statement about marks of blood on his shirt when they pretended that a wolf had torn him.

1254 The words يأت بصيرا do not imply that Jacob was blind and recovered his eyesight when Joseph's shirt was cast on his face. Baṣír means one who sees things with the eyes, as well as one endowed with mental perception or one knowing (S, M, A, Q, Msb-LL). And انا بصير به means I am knowing respecting it (Msb-LL). All that is meant is that when Jacob saw Joseph's shirt he would possess certain knowledge of Joseph's abiding place; for though he knew by Divine revelation that Joseph was yet alive, he did not know the actual place of his habitation.

1255 When the caravan in which were Joseph's brothers departed from Egypt, Jacob again received assurance from on high about Joseph, so he said to those about him that he perceived the power of Joseph, i.e. he saw that Joseph was a man who possessed power. The word ríḥ signifies both wind and predominance or power (LL). Hence I render the word as meaning greatness.

97 They said: O our father! ask forgiveness of our faults for us, surely we were sinners.

98 He said: I will ask for you forgiveness from my Lord; surely He is the Forgiving, the Merciful.

99 Then when they came in to Joseph, he took his parents to lodge with him and said: Enter safe into Egypt, if Allah please.[1256]

100 And he raised his parents upon the throne[1257] and they made obeisance to[1258] him, and he said: O my father! this is the significance of my vision of old: my Lord has indeed made it to be true: and He was indeed kind to me when He brought me forth from the prison and brought you from the desert after that the devil had sown dissensions between me and my brothers: surely my Lord is benignant to whom He pleases: surely He is the Knowing, the Wise.

1256 Leah was Rachel's elder sister and a wife of Jacob (Gen. 29, 16–28). The fact that Rachel was dead in no way contradicts this statement, because Leah would be Joseph's mother in both capacities, as his mother's sister and as his father's wife.

1257 The royal throne is not meant here, for Joseph himself did not sit on the royal throne. Joseph raised his parents to his own raised seat; or the meaning may be that he placed them in a good position. Compare Gen. 47 : 11 : "And Joseph placed his father and his brethren, and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land."

1258 The words do not definitely state who it was that made obeisance. It may have been the people of Egypt who did obeisance to Joseph as a mark of his high dignity, for it is not necessary that the number of men making obeisance should be the same as the number of stars in Joseph's vision. All that the vision meant was that Joseph would be raised to great dignity. Or the meaning may be that when Joseph's parents and his brothers saw the great dignity to which Joseph had attained, they made obeisance to Allah on account of Joseph.

107 Do they then feel secure that there may come to them an extensive chastisement from Allah or (that) the hour may come to them suddenly while they do not perceive?

لَا يَشْعُرُونَ ۝

1259 It is indeed strange to find men like Rodwell and Muir giving vent to their feelings of hatred of the Holy Prophet on occasions like this. The remark that "Muhammad must at this period, while recasting and working up these materials, have entered upon a course of wilful dissimulation and deceit (although the end would justify to him the means employed) in claiming inspiration for them" (Rodwell) is due to crass ignorance if not to deep malice. It has already been noted how the Qur-án, after relating that which befell the opponents of a prophet, immediately changes the subject, hinting that the same punishment was in store for the opponents of the Holy Prophet Muhammad, and throughout the Holy Qur-án the anbá-ul-ghaib, or the announcements relating to the unseen, signify, not the ancient histories of past prophets, but a repetition of those histories in the life of the Holy Prophet Muhammad. Take this case, for instance. The present history of Joseph ends in the last verse with his prayer for being classed with the righteous at his death, and there is a reversion in this verse to the similar events that befell or must befall the Holy Prophet. It has already been shown how the events in the lives of the two prophets closely resembled each other. The reference in "When they resolved upon their affair and they were devising plans" is to the resolution of the Quraish and their plans of either killing him or banishing him or imprisoning him (see 8 : 30, where the very word yamkurún is used for these plans). The two verses which follow and the whole of the next section show still more clearly that the change of subject has already been introduced. The Qur-án does not relate stories for the sake of giving information of the past, but for the lessons which they afford for the future guidance of man : hence it is that it omits many details and long portions, and mentions sometimes apparently trifling incidents, when these minor incidents have some bearing on the future, while the others have not. Compare 421, 1185, and 1212.

108 Say: This is my way: I call to Allah, I and those who follow me being certain,[a] and glory be to Allah, and I am not one of the polytheists.

قُلْ هٰذِهٖ سَبِيْلِيْٓ اَدْعُوْٓا اِلَى اللّٰهِ عَلٰى بَصِيْرَةٍ اَنَا

109 And We have not sent before you but men from (among) the people of the towns, to whom We sent revelations. Have they not then travelled in the land and seen what was the end of those before them? and certainly the abode of the hereafter is best for those who guard (against evil); do you not then understand?

110 Until when the apostles despaired and the people became sure that they were indeed told a lie, Our help came to them and whom We pleased was delivered; and Our punishment is not averted from the guilty people.[1260]

111 In their histories there is certainly a lesson for men of understanding. It is not a narrative which could be forged, but a verification of what is before it[b] and a distinct explanation of all things and a guide and a mercy to a people who believe.

1260 The personal pronouns, if not rightly understood, quite distort the sense of the passage. The apostles warn their people, but the latter are so stubborn that the apostles at length despair of their people benefiting by the warning. The people, on the other hand, were sure, on account of the delay of the punishment, that what the prophets had spoken to them about the warning and the coming of the punishment was a lie. Then it is that the promised help for the prophets and the punishment with which the evil-doers are threatened come to them. That the prophets never despair of Divine assistance coming to them in accordance with Divine promise is clear from what has already been said in v. 87: "For none despairs of Allah's mercy except the unbelieving people."

CHAPTER XIII

THE THUNDER

(Al-Ra'd)

REVEALED AT MECCA

(6 sections and 43 verses)

Abstract:

Sec. 1. Truth of Revelation.
Sec. 2. Demand for punishment.
Sec. 3. Righteousness will bring its reward and transgression its evil consequences.
Sec. 4. Miracles of the Qur-án.
Sec. 5. Opposition shall fail.
Sec. 6. Steady progress of truth.

The Title.

THIS chapter is named the Thunder from the analogy of the rain, which is often likened to revelation in the Holy Qur-án. As the rain is a mercy from Allah, so is revelation, yet as rain is accompanied with thunder and lightning, so revelation is accompanied with warning of punishment, though its real object is to confer benefit. Thus the name of this chapter gives us a hint as to its subject-matter. It has necessarily to deal with the punishment of the offenders, yet punishment must not be mistaken to be the object of revelation.

Context and subject-matter.

It deals with the truth of revelation, and a reference to previous history in the chapter preceding the last is here followed by a discussion as to the fate of the opponents of the Holy Prophet. As regards the internal arrangement of the verses of this chapter, it will be seen that it opens with an assertion as to the truth of Divine revelation, and points to the numerous signs in physical nature which bear witness to its truth; but not satisfied with these signs, the unbelievers demand that the punishment with which they were threatened as being their ultimate fate should overtake them. The second section is a reply to this demand. There is a law according to which nations rise and fall, and the fall of idolaters, and the rise of the Muslim nation, were to be brought about in accordance with that law. Here it is that the warning is compared to thunder, revelation being rain, the suggestion being that a demand for punishment is as foolish as a desire to be struck by lightning instead of being benefited by the rain. In the third section the unbelievers are told that there is no showing of partiality for one or hatred for another in Divine nature, but that it is in accordance with Divine laws that righteousness should bring its own reward, while continued transgression must be followed by evil consequences. And why should they again and again demand a miracle from without? The much-talked-of miracles, we are told in the fourth section, are miracles which work within man. The satisfaction which the Holy Book brings to the hearts of the true believers, the great transformation which it was to bring about in the world, the moving away of the great mountains which were obstacles to the spread of truth, and the quickening of those who were dead in spirit, were the real miracles which a heavenly book should work among men; and this is what the Qur-án was destined to do, and what it had already effected to a remarkable extent. There was no doubt great opposition, and mountains of difficulties had risen to obstruct the spread of truth; but this opposition, we are told in the fifth section, was destined to fail because truth must spread in the world and prevail over falsehood, and the time must come when the righteous should no more be mocked at, but should prosper, because the prosperity of truth was bound up with their prosperity. The closing section brings in the evidence of the progress of truth, which, however slow, was certainly steady. Unbelief was already at a discount, for while the ranks of the unbelievers continued to be thinned, the number of Muslims was gradually increasing.

Date of revelation.

This chapter, like the three sister chapters preceding it and the two that follow it, was revealed at Mecca, and all six of them belong to about the same period, viz. to the period preceding the flight to Medina, as does also the 16th chapter, all of them dealing with and affirming the truth of revelation, and speaking as it were the last word on that point preparatory to the flight to Medina. V. 41 clearly shows that truth was gradually gaining ground, and the reference to the curtailing of the sides in that verse either refers to the conversions which were made in Medina or to the increasing number of conversions at Mecca itself, which even the severest opposition had not been able to check. Similarly there is a reference in v. 42, in the word makr, to the plans of the opponents by which they sought to deal a final blow to the movement by taking away the life of the Holy Prophet.

1261 The letters are alif, standing for aná and meaning I, lám for Allah, mím for a'lam, meaning the Knowing, and rá for rá'ee, i.e. the Seeing.

6 And they ask you to hasten on the evil before the good, and indeed there have been exemplary punishments[1264] before them: and most surely your Lord is the Lord of forgiveness to people,

وَيَسْتَعْجِلُونَكَ بِالسَّيِّئَةِ قَبْلَ الْحَسَنَةِ وَقَدْ خَلَتْ مِن قَبْلِهِمُ الْمَثُلَاتُ ۗ وَإِنَّ رَبَّكَ لَذُو مَغْفِرَةٍ لِّلنَّاسِ

1262 Unity in diversity is observable in the whole of nature, which is a sure sign of the Unity of the great Author of all existence. Besides this, as there is a difference in the produce of different tracts, though they are subject to the same laws of nature, even so are the hearts of men in relation to the growth of the seed of virtue which is sown by revelation.

1263 The chains spoken of here are the chains which keep them constrained to evil usages and wicked courses. Bḍ's explanation is that they are constrained to error, their deliverance cannot be hoped for. Kf says it is to describe their great persistence in error that this form is used, like as the poet says: لهم عن الرشد اغلال و اقياد i.e. they are kept back from the right course by chains and restraints. AH adds: The chains here signify their corrupt practices, which are like chains on their necks. It should be noted that as those very invisible chains which keep a man constrained to an evil course in this life become the visible chains of the next life, so also the fire of the heart-burnings arising from disappointments and avarice would become the palpable fire of that life. Such is the true nature of the hell of the next life, which really begins in this very life.

1264 Maṣulát is the plural of muṣlah which, according to Rgh, means a punishment that comes down upon a man so that he is made an example by which another is restrained. JB and Kf translate the word as meaning punishment that overtook rejecters like them.

7 And those who disbelieve say: Why has not a sign been sent down upon him from his Lord? You are only a warner and a guide for every people.[1266] (Ar. thou art. Or, (there is) a guide.)

SECTION 2

Demand for Punishment

8–10. Allah knows good-doers and evil-doers. 11. Rise and fall of nations. 12, 13. He threatens that you may mend. 14–18. Truth will prevail.

8 Allah knows what every female bears, and that of which the wombs fall short of completion and that in which they increase; and there is a measure with Him of everything:[1267]

اَللّٰهُ يَعْلَمُ مَا تَحْمِلُ كُلُّ اُنْثٰى وَمَا
تَغِيْضُ الْاَرْحَامُ وَمَا تَزْدَادُ ۭ وَكُلُّ
شَيْءٍ عِنْدَهٗ بِمِقْدَارٍ ۝

1265 Surely your Lord is the Lord of forgiveness to people, notwithstanding their injustice, is a Quranic teaching which one would in vain seek elsewhere. The word ẓulm or injustice, as has been shown elsewhere, includes all kinds of iniquities and wrongs, whether erroneous beliefs or evil practices. The Meccans were warned again and again and they demanded that the threatened punishment should overtake them, but they are told that the Merciful God would deal with them not according to their iniquities, but according to His vast and comprehensive forgiveness. The same principle is enunciated in different words in 39:53: "Say: O my servants who have acted extravagantly against their own souls, do not despair of the mercy of Allah; surely Allah forgives the faults altogether, surely He is the Forgiving, the Merciful."

But when evil outsteps all bounds, His very mercy, which must be exercised towards His righteous servants, then requires that the iniquitous should not be left without punishment. Hence the Lord is also severe in requiting evil.

1266 The words و لكل قوم هاد may refer to the Holy Prophet, as being a warner to the Arabs, who were directly addressed by him and who directly opposed his mission, and as being a guide for all the nations of the earth, the reference thus being to the universality of his mission. The commentators generally consider this phrase to be independent of the first part of the sentence, thus taking the meaning to be and there is a guide for every people, and then explain it as signifying either that the Holy Prophet was a warner in the same manner as there had been before him a guide for every people, being the equivalent of what is said in 35:24, and there is not a people but a warner has gone among them; or that the Prophet was only a warner, while it rested with Allah to guide people in the right way, He being the true Guide (Rz).

1267 By "the falling short of wombs of completion" and by "their increasing" is meant respectively the absence of gestation and the completion of gestation; and by there being a measure of everything is meant that every thing is adapted to a particular end. The object of this verse is to state that it is known to Allah whether a person will be righteous or wicked. This is not only clear from what has been said before, but also from what follows. It is to apprise the opponents of the Holy Prophet of the fact that their mischiefs are known to Allah, and the meaning is expressed more clearly in v. 10, which is again followed by the

10 Alike (to Him) among you is he who conceals (his) words and he who speaks them openly, and he who hides himself by night and (who) goes forth by day.[1268]

11 For his sake there are angels following one another, before him and behind him, who guard him by Allah's commandment;[1269] surely Allah does not change the condition of a people until they change their own condition; and when Allah intends evil to a people, there is no averting it, and besides Him they have no protector.

12 He it is who shows you the lightning causing fear and hope and (who) brings up the heavy cloud.

13 And the thunder declares His glory with His praise, and the angels too for awe of Him; and He sends the thunderbolts and smites with them whom He pleases, yet they dispute concerning Allah, and He is mighty in prowess.

14 To Him is due the true prayer; and those whom they pray to besides Allah give them no answer, but (they are) like one who stretches forth his two hands towards water that it may reach his mouth, but it will not reach it; and the prayer of the unbelievers is only in error.

still plainer statement that no nation can hope for a good and prosperous future if it does not forsake the ways of evil.

1268 The reference is no doubt to the secret and open counsels against the Prophet and to enemies seeking his life by day and by night. A perusal of the history of his life shows that those who sought his life sometimes followed him secretly when he went out to pray during the early hours of the morning, and sometimes openly followed him in the daytime with an evil purpose.

1269 While the statement is no doubt general and refers to the guardian angels referred to in 6 : 61, there is a deeper allusion to the Divine protection specially vouchsafed to the Holy Prophet against the numerous enemies among whom he lived day and night. Mu'aqqibát means following one another and the guardian angels of man are so called
